suit to recover possession of land upon the strength of alleged title thereto, and a suit based on the fact that there was no title, and that for the consideration money plaintiff got nothing (1) And when plaintiff had first sued for ejectment in the Revenue Court and afterwards for rent prior to ejectment under sect 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act of 1901, it was held that the causes of action were distinct and that the latter suit was not barred by rule 2 of this Order (2) A right of a Mahomedan widow to dower is distinct from a right to a life interest in the estate of her deceased husband (3) Similarly, a suit for maintenance is distinct from a subsequent claim for a share in ancestral property (4) If a suit for partition has been brought, but for some reason the properties have not been actually divided by the decree made therein, it is open to any one of the joint owners to maintain a subsequent suit for partition (5) A Burmese Buddhist husband's suit for divorce is distinct from his suit for partition based on divorce (6)

Torts—As a general rule, every tort is a separate and indivisible cause of action So a claim in respect of a distinct prior tort need not be included in a suit on a subsequent one, and will not be barred by the suit on that other, (7) even though the suit brought might have embraced the claims on both the torts (8) Each of several wrongful alienations of property constitutes a separate cause of action (9) A suit for recovery of land A from X is no bar to a suit for the recovery of land from Y, though the title thereto is the same, and the causes of action may have arisen at the same time, both the persons withholding and the property being different (10) An act prejudicially affecting more than one person gives to each a separate cause of action, as if the act done to each were separate So a libel against several persons has often been held to afford a separate cause of action to each (11)

Even in the case of the same person, if his rights in several capacities are infringed, there will be a separate cause of action to him, inasmuch as he will be considered in each case as if he were a distinct person (1) Where the plaintiff's right is infringed by more persons than one, and by different acts done separately by each of them, the plaintiff has a separate cause of action against each of those persons (2) A tort, though connected with a contract, constitutes a distinct cause of action from breach of the contract, and so a suit for the hire of a carriage will not bar a suit for the injury done to it during the hirer's use of it (3) And so as regards distinct acts constituting distinct causes of action, where, for instance, some co sharers sell their shares on different dates to different persons, each sale gives a distinct and separate cause of action to the remaining co sharer claiming all the shares sold by right of pre-emption (4) So also a suit on an unduly stamped instrument, for which the plaintiff had to pay duty and penalty, does not bar a suit for recovery of amount so paid, (5) there being two distinct causes of action, one of which accrued since the institution of the former suit. Unity of title to different properties injured does not make the different acts causing the injuries a single tort. So a man's right to enjoy a piece of land may depend upon one and the same title, but if he is ejected from different parts of it by distinct acts of ouster, each act of ouster would constitute a distinct and separate cause of action (6) There is, it is submitted no question but that there is no unity of cause of action in such cases where there is no unity in the act of dispossession, even though the plaintiff's title may be one and the same. So, conversely, if the alleged wrongs be distinct and separable, committed by several persons, and proceeding from no combination or conspiracy of such persons, the wrong doers must respectively be sued separately in respect of their own nuisance, and not collectively in respect of wrongs to which they have been neither directly nor indirectly parties (1) A question may, however, arise as to the unity of the cause of action where there is unity of the act of dispossession, that is, infringement, but different rights infringed. If the term "cause of action" be given its wider sense, then in such cases it cannot be said that there is identity of cause of action. It has, however, been held that it is not the title upon which a party relies, but the infringement of it, which constitutes his cause of action (2). The fact that a defendant's title rests upon different and distinct transactions, supported by distinct and separate evidence, does not necessarily imply that to a party contesting that title there are different causes of action warranting separate suits (3). The unity of a tortious act is not affected by the different modes in which it causes injury. Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff may recover damages not only for his unlawful arrest and imprisonment and for the expenses of his defence, but also for the injury caused to his good fame and character by reason of the false accusation, and, in consequence, a subsequent suit for the latter will be barred (4).

An act sometimes consists of a series, and so may an act constituting a tort. The various acts may thus constitute a single wrong, so as to furnish but a single cause of action. As a general rule, acts of a similar character, performed in pursuance of the same general purpose, constitute one act and one tort, particularly so if the acts are done at the same time, or in actual continuation (5). So a libel constitutes a single cause of action, even though it consists of several statements in the libellous pamphlet. A litigant cannot select one portion of a libel as the ground for one action, and another as the ground for a second, and so on (6).

Generally, where goods are wrongfully detained after seizure, the deten-

P. 153 (1870), in which, though the plaintiff's title was one and the same, the different alienations sought to be set aside were held to constitute distinct causes of action. The question of combination or absence of concert affecting or not the unity of the cause of action, has been considered with reference to misjoinder in the following cases—Gujadhur Pershad v. Saheb Roy, 19 W. R. 203 (1873), Omur Ali v. Weylayet Ali, 4 C. L. R. 455 (1879), Loko Nath Surma v. Keshav Ram, 13 C. 147 (1886). There was held to be combination and one and the same cause of action against all defendants in Sudhendhu v. Durga Dasi, 14 C. 435 (1887), Ram Narain Dutt v. Annoda Prasad Joshi, 14 C. 681 (1887), Mangul v. Girdhari, 1892, P. R. No. 127, in Hurro Moneo v. Onokool Chunder Mookerjee, 8 W. R. 161 (1867), it was held there was none. See Hukm Chand, C. P. C. 519-521, and as to former s. 43, Dampanaboyina v. Addala, 25 M. 736 (1902). In Ram Chunder v. Omora Churn, 16 W. R. 155 (1871), there was held to be not a single cause of action though the defendants were alleged to have leagued to oppose the plaintiff's possession by force, but no grounds are given for the decision.

tion does not constitute a separate cause of action, but is only the consequence of the seizure. So, after a suit for recovery of property, a suit for damages for wrongful detention of the same property is barred (1). In such cases there is one cause of action, for which damages must be assessed once for all, and different remedies. The same principle has in some cases been applied to suits for mesne profits of land from which the owner is dispossessed; (2) and a suit for possession of land has been held a bar to a suit for mesne profits of that land (3). It has, however, in other cases been held to the contrary, both on account of sect. 10 of the Code of 1859, (4) and sect. 44 of the last Code, corresponding with O II rr 1, 5 of this, (5) that claims to recover possession of immovable property and for mesne profits are distinct claims, (6) and, conversely, a suit for mesne profits of land has been held not to bar a suit for its possession, the fact of the priority of the suit for mesne profits being immaterial so far as the construction of the Code is concerned (7). These cases proceed on the principle that the right to possess immovable property and the right to enjoy the profits of such property are distinct causes of action. The causes of action in a suit to recover possession under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and in a suit to recover mesne profits, are not the same, in that in the first case the party is entitled to recover possession though he had no title, whereas, if he were a trespasser, mesne profits would not be given against the true owner (8). The decision in Ram Rattun Audo v Ram Chunder Pal, 25 W R 113 (1876), is not to the contrary as there in the former suit mesne profits were expressly prayed for. In Rookminnee Kooer v Ram Tohil Roy, 21 W R 223 (1874), it was held that though a claim for mesne profits was a separate cause of action, yet it cannot itself be divided and every suit must include the whole of the mesne profits which had then accrued.

property and a deposit was made in Court, a second suit to recover mesne profits from the date of deposit to that of recovery of possession was held barred (1)

As to whether or not there is a new cause of action in the case of continuing torts, the general rule appears to be that in the case of such torts as are not of a necessarily injurious and permanent character, there is a continuing obligation to abate them, and the continuance of the nuisance is held to be a new tort and therefore a separate cause of action, but the rule is otherwise in the case of all torts of a permanent character which continue to operate injuriously without any external agency (2) While if there are different persons injured there are different torts, the question as to the number of causes of action which the same person may have, turns upon the number of torts and not upon the number of different pieces of property which may have been injured Thus an act which damages two properties belonging to the same man at the same time and by the same means does not create two causes of action The elements of damage are multifarious but the cause of it is a unit, but it will be otherwise if the cause itself is not single and indivisible (3) A suit for certain moneys said to have been misappropriated by the defendant while acting as manager of a joint family, was held to bar a subsequent suit for the plaintiff's share of certain joint paddy held by the defendant at the time of the first suit, Mitter, J., observing "The causes of action in both the cases originated in the refusal of the defendant to give to the plaintiffs their share of the properties realized by him as manager the manager of a joint Hindu family holds possession of various items of property on behalf of the family Can it be contended for a moment that each member of the family has a separate cause of action for his share in each item of those properties?" (4)

An act which causes injury both to person and property may constitute different torts Both causes of action may be founded upon one act, but they are not on that account identical causes of action (5) All the claims in on an alleged mortgage which was dismissed, is no bar to subsequent suit on another mortgage of the same property (1) A suit brought by a wife during the life of her husband for the recovery of the prompt portion of her dower will be no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the deferred portion (2)

In the following cases the cause of action was held to be the same—Where an occupancy tenant made a mortgage with possession of his holding, a suit by the proprietor for the cancellation of the mortgage was held to bar a suit for the possession of the holding, as the cause of action in the two suits would be the same, the defendants taking possession under his mortgage not affording a second and distinct cause of action from the execution of the deed itself (3) A suit to redeem a mortgage on the ground of the mortgagee having received more than the amount due in respect of mortgage bars a subsequent suit for the amount of the surplus received by him (4) Suit for redemption of kanam subsequent suit based on admissions known to the plaintiff at time of previous suit that defendants were kanamdars under plaintiff's predecessor in title (5) Suit for possession of a portion of a house alleged to have been partitioned in proceedings before a Court of Revenue, subsequent suit for partition of the same house in a Civil Court (6) As to specific performance see below (7)

The general rule is that every partition shall embrace all the joint property, but it is subject to certain exceptions—such as (a) where different portions of it are situated in and out of British India, (b) where a portion of it is not immediately available for partition, by reason of (i) its being in possession of mortgagees or (ii) because it was inam land, which required Government permission to give jurisdiction to the Court, (c) where property is held in partnership by the joint family along with strangers, who have no interest in the family partition among the sharers and who could not therefore be made parties in the family partition suit (8) The section was held not to apply where the title on which the former suit was based was exclusive

The karnatan of a Malabar tarwad is not barred from bringing successive suits for land in possession of an anandratian, the cause of action being the right to demand restoration of tarwad property at any time and it being in the discretion of the karnatan to leave any item of property he pleases in the possession of anandratians (2)

"Shall not afterwards sue" — The bar is not avoided by an expression of intention to sue again (3) A plaintiff may, however, obtain leave to omit to sue in respect of one of several remedies A suit, however which is withdrawn with permission to sue again does not create any bar as the effect of such permission is to leave matters in the position in which they would have stood if no such suit had been instituted (4) The same principle was held to apply even when the suit was dismissed for non appearances of parties under sect 140 of the N W P Act 1881 with leave specially reserved to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit, the reason assigned for the decision being that before the case was struck off the plaintiff could have so amended his plaint as to have included the claim in the first suit, and à fortiori there was no reason why he should not include it in the subsequent suit (5)

The bar affects the plaintiff in the second suit if he was plaintiff in the first, and those who claim under him, (6) and it is not avoided by the plaintiff having been a minor at the time of the former suit (7) The rule says shall not afterwards sue It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive (8) In the case cited below (9) the Madras High Court held that of the two simultaneous suits both would of course not be barred and the decree in either might stand provided the decree in the other was reversed, and option was given to the plaintiff to choose which would stand the other being dismissed Fractions of a day are however recognized and where two suits are presented on the same day it must be presumed until the contrary is proved that the suits were presented and admitted in the order in

"In respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."—The Privy Council observed that the right which a litigant possesses without knowing, or ever having known, that he possesses it can hardly be regarded as a "portion of his claim" within the meaning of the section (3). It has been said that a plaintiff must be taken to have abandoned or relinquished his claim on a real cause of action if he brings it in a false one (4). But this statement has been adversely criticized, (5) there being nothing in r 2 to warrant the inference that all causes of action ought to be included in the alternative or otherwise, and if it were correct it would make no difference whether the cause of action is false in the sense that the facts alleged as constituting it are false, or it is false in the sense that the facts alleged do not in law constitute a cause of action.

"More than one relief"—The present rule, unlike that of the Code of 1839, refers, as has been already pointed out, both to the splitting of remedies or reliefs as well as the splitting of claims (6). Both the claim and the remedy have reference to the cause of action litigated in the previous suit (7). There is no bar where the remedy sought in the subsequent suit is in respect of a cause of action different from that which formed the basis of the relief in the former suit (8). Further, the bar in regard to the remedy is applicable only where the plaintiff was at the time of the former suit entitled to more than one remedy, and where the plaintiffs were entitled to only one remedy in the former suit the provisions of the section are not applicable to the second suit, (9) nor where a plaintiff's suit for a remedy has been dismissed on the ground that he is not entitled to it but to another remedy, for which he

In a similar case in the Madras High Court a contrary view was taken on the ground that the right to possession and conveyance arose coincidentally, and suit for possession was not a separate cause of action. Narayana v Kandasami, 22 M 24 (1898). The principle, however, in the text was applied in Amila v Kettilamma, 14 M 23 (1890).

subsequently sues (1) In a case in the Punjab Chief Court (2) Burney, J., observed that what the plaintiff "asked for in the former suit was not a remedy to which he was entitled, and was, therefore, not one of the other alternative remedies between which the plaintiff could have chosen," and in a subsequent case (3) in the same Court, Tremlett, J., observed, that "if the defendant's contentions were sound, we should have to hold that the construction of sect 13 (now r 2) is that a plaintiff entitled to only one remedy on his cause of action, who by mistake sues for what the Court considers is not the remedy to which he is entitled, will be precluded from subsequently suing for the proper one," and, "put in this form, it is clear that the language of the section countenances no such proposition."

The rule applies to the case where there being identity of causes of action in the two suits, the plaintiff was entitled in the first suit to more than one remedy (4) either cumulatively or alternatively. If without the leave of the Court he omit to sue for any of such remedies he cannot do so afterwards. So a personal decree for maintenance and a declaration that it is a charge on family property are two remedies referable to the same cause of action, viz the right to receive maintenance, and therefore two separate suits cannot be brought in respect of the two remedies against the same defendant (5).

It is not very easy to define what constitutes "a claim" as distinguished from a "remedy," for the former appears to include the latter to some extent. Doubtless the two terms were intended to overlap. While a claim has been defined as a demand of right, a remedy has been said to be the legal means to recover a right (6). It has also been broadly defined to denote the decree or decretal order with its proper legal results, which is the successful suitor's warrant for obtaining the relief he has achieved by his suit (7). Mortgage cases are common instances in which there is more than one remedy. Where a person asks for relief and ancillary thereto for an injunction there is more than one remedy. In many cases there is an option of suing on the contract or for breach of the contract, and in these cases there is more than one remedy, but the remedies are alternative (8). In some cases the two terms 'claim' and "remedy" are used indiscriminately. So it has been held that a suit for specific performance bars a subsequent suit for damages for failure to perform, as both claims arise out of the same cause of action namely the breach of contract (1) And where a plaintiff was entitled both to recover rent and to forfeiture for non-payment he was held barred after suing for the rent from suing to enforce a forfeiture for non-payment of the same rent, as both the claims arose out of the same cause of action, namely, the non payment of rent (2) Similarly, a suit for an injunction against a defendant directing him to abstain from excluding the plaintiff and preventing him from using his house has been held to be a bar to a suit for damages for the exclusion from the house (3) The amendment now substitutes the word "relief" for "remedy"

Upon the question formerly discussed, whether in execution of a simple money decree, only the rights of the debtor pass and the mortgagor retains his lien, see below (4) Sect 99 of the Transfer of Property Act restrained a mortgagee from selling the mortgaged premises, except under a decree for sale (5) Under the Code of 1859 a declaratory decree might be sued for and obtained, and a subsequent suit brought for the consequential relief (6) But see now sect 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which virtually repeals sect 15 of the Code of 1859 Under the special provisions of the amended Delkan Agriculturists Act excluding the operation of this section, a suit by a mortgagor for account does not bar a subsequent suit for redemption, (7) though prior to the amendment of this Act the contrary was held upon the principle enacted by this section (8) If mesne profits are not asked for in a suit for specific performance of a contract to reconvey a plot of land, a subsequent suit for them will be barred by this rule (9)

Leave to omit relief—The words in the last Code were "obtained before the first hearing" It was, however, held that leave might be applied for and obtained when the case was called on for first hearing and before anything had been done towards the hearing of the case (10) Though these words have been omitted probably the same rule will hold now Such leave should be obtained from the Court before which the original suit was pending (11)

Origin and scope of rules relating to joinder of causes of action.—

The first paragraph of r 3, which corresponds with sect 8 Act VIII of 1859, is taken from the English O 18, r 1, which, though it does not contain any reference to the case of more than one defendant, has been construed as if it referred to the "same defendants" also, it having been held (1) that "to bring into one claim distinct causes of action against different persons, neither of them having anything to do with the other (and only historically connected as one matter in the transaction), is not contemplated by O 18, r 1, which authorizes the joinder, not of several actions against distinct persons, but of several causes of action" It was, however, pointed out that the provisions contained in several of the English rules had been omitted from the Code, and the inference therefore was that it was not intended to introduce into this country the wide scope now afforded to suits in the English Courts, and that r 3 is different from the much more general language of the English r 1 and r 6, which provide that claims by plaintiffs jointly may be joined with claims by them or any of them separately, and were diametrically opposed to the prohibition of sect 31 of the first Code, that plaintiffs might not join in respect of distinct causes of action (2) The rule is based on considerations of convenience, the misjoinder contemplated leading to complication and difficulty of dealing with the case of each defendant separately, and being vexatious and harassing to the defendants (3)

Objections (as to which see O 1 r 13) on the ground of misjoinder are favourite ones in this country. There may be misjoinder of plaintiffs or misjoinder of defendants. This matter is dealt with in the preceding Order. The rules under discussion relate only to joinder of causes of action. They assume that the action has been rightly constituted under the provisions relating to the joinder of parties (4). Then there is misjoinder of subjects of suit, which is sometimes called multifariousness, though the term is not used

(1) Burstall v Beyfus, 20 Ch D 35, per Selborne, LC. In England it is settled law that two separate causes of action cannot be charged against two defendants in one action. Muthappa v Muthu, 27 M 80, at p 83 (1903).

Mahmood, J, was, however, of opinion (at p 178) that the Code did not prescribe a narrower rule upon the particular point then under discussion. In Muthappa v Muthu, 27 M 80, 83 (1903), it was also said that the terms of the English rule were wider and more general than the terms of the Code. But this case has not been followed. Aiyathurai v Santhu Meera 31 M 252 (1908). See now O I r 9, ante.

in the Code Multifariousness, however, properly so called, exists when one of the defendants is not interested in the whole of the relief sought (1) This is prohibited by the first clause of r. 3, where the parties have distinct and separate interests (2) Misjoinder of subjects of suit is where two subjects distinct in their nature are united in one suit, and, for convenience sake, the Court requires them to be separated Whether the various subjects shall be dealt with together is a matter of discretion to be determined upon considerations of convenience with regard to the circumstances of each particular case (3) This matter is dealt with in r. 6 In other words, while multifariousness strictly so called is, in cases coming within the terms of the first paragraph of r. 3, absolutely prohibited, an alleged misjoinder of subjects, as it was formerly called, not amounting to multifariousness in the former sense, is left to be dealt with according to the discretion of the Court R. 3 applies to cases where there are only one plaintiff, one defendant and several causes of action, and to cases where the plaintiffs or defendants, though consisting of two or more individuals, may be considered as an unit with reference to all the different causes of action Where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, the test is—is there community of interest in the issues to be determined? in other words, joint interest in the questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action (4) The question of absence of cause of action and misjoinder must be distinguished It may be, for instance, that certain defendants can substantiate pleas which, as a matter of substantive law or on the merits, would absolve them from liability But this circumstance has no effect upon the question of misjoinder, which is purely a matter of adjective law or procedure (5) While, as already stated, the rule enacted in r. 3 is based on substantial grounds of convenience, it must also be remembered that the policy of the law is not to favour multiplication of suits, (6) and it is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any such technical objection, (7) unless it has been taken, and is thoroughly well founded

It was held that the provisions of sect 15 of the last Code did not apply to suits for arrears of rent under the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, so as to admit of a joint suit being brought in respect of arrears of rent due in respect of several holdings (1)

Summary of rules on this matter.—A summary of the rules which deal with the joinder of parties, shows that any number of plaintiffs may join in respect of relief claimed arising out of the 'same act or transaction,' that they may not join in respect of distinct causes of action in cases not within O I r 1, ante, that any number of defendants may be joined where relief is sought against them under O I r 3 or in respect of any one contract under O I r 6, that no suit shall fail for mere misjoinder, and that except where plaintiffs have joined in respect of distinct causes of action as above stated the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy as far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it (2) Putting it shortly, the rules provide that a suit shall include the whole claim, that any plaintiff or plaintiffs having several causes of action in which they are jointly interested against one defendant or several defendants jointly may unite them in the same suit, but unless such causes of action are of the kind mentioned in clauses (a) (b) or (c) of r 1 of this Order they may not be joined, without leave of the Court with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, that where a plaintiff or plaintiffs have united in the same suit several causes of action against a defendant or defendants the Court of its own motion, or on the application of the defendants or upon agreement of the parties may order separate trials or confine the scope of the suit, or exclude causes of action and direct amendment of the plaint, where by the joinder of several causes of action inconvenience and confusion are likely to be caused (3) As to whether sect 15 of the last Code was a restrictive proviso to sect 28 of that Code see post

"May unite"—It is a pre requisite of the right to join in one suit more than one cause of action against a defendant that the Court to which the plaint is presented should have jurisdiction over all the causes of action (4) In the case cited, it was observed that "unless the plaintiff could lawfully unite them, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction over either and that he should have returned the plaint, although, without amendment, it could not have been presented in either Court which had jurisdiction over either cause of action' It is, however, proper to unite several causes of action in a suit when the title to all the property to which the defence relates is the same though the lands

Was sect 45 of last Code a restrictive proviso to sect 28 of that Code? The effect in this respect of the amendments—There was force in the argument which answered this question in the negative, though the contrary was held under the last Code by the majority of the Full Bench (3) in which it was raised Chapter III of that Code dealt with the parties to a suit, and Chapter IV of the same Code with the frame of a suit The former assumed the existence of an ascertained subject matter in dispute and from that point of view laid down rules as to the persons who might be made parties to the suit Chapter IV assumed the existence of ascertained parties and dealt with the subject matter of the suit The two modes of dealing did not clash with one another Where there was identity of subject-matter the rules governing the case were to be found in Chapter III, where there was identity of parties the scope of the action was to be limited by the rules in Chapter IV The two Chapters thus regarded an action from two different points of view, and the rules contained in one could not, in this aspect of the case be regarded as provisos to the rules contained in the other By sect 26 of the last Code all plaintiffs might join in respect of the same "cause of action" By sect 28 all defendants might be joined against whom the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter," whether jointly severally, or in the alternative, was alleged to exist The term "matter" in sect 28 of that Code was not convertible with "cause of action," but was more comprehensive—a conclusion which received support not only from the circumstance that the two expressions were used in contiguous sections (26 27 28) of the same Chapter and could therefore scarcely be construed to have the same meaning but also from the fact that the last part of sect 31, which prohibited plaintiffs joining in respect of distinct 'causes of action' was meant to be a limitation of the latitude allowed by Chapter III as to the joinder of parties in respect of the "same matter" So long, then, as the matter in dispute was identical the plaintiff was entitled to bring before the Court all persons whose presence was necessary to afford him full relief in respect of that matter Sect 45 was not applicable to cases in which the subject-matter of the suit was the same but related to cases in which the causes of action were entirely distinct Sect 28, on the other hand, related to cases in which the subject matter was one and the same and sect 45 was not a restrictive proviso to sect 28, for the effect of such a view would be to nullify an important part of the latter section The essence of the provisions of sect 45 was that there should be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint liability of the defendants, whilst sect 28 contemplated the granting of relief against the defendants not only jointly and in the alternative but also severally, and it could not be conceived how this could be done in a case in which the liability of the defendants was joint, as required by sect 45. The latter section did not limit the operation of sect 28, nor did sect 28 extend the scope of sect 45. Sect 28 laid down a rule which was distinct from and independent of the rule embodied in sect 45 (1).

According to this view of the two sections, a suit might have been brought against several defendants against whom the right to any relief in respect of "the same matter" existed, and also a suit uniting several distinct causes of action against several defendants jointly.

The majority, however, of the Full Bench held that it was difficult to interpret the expression "same matter" in sect 28 as meaning more than the same "cause of action"; and that Chapter III must necessarily be read with and controlled by the subsequent provisions of Chapter IV. If, then, sect 28 and sect 45 were read together, the joint, several, or alternative liability of defendants mentioned in sect 28 meant such a liability in respect of one or several causes of action, which cause or causes of action were united in the same suit against the same defendants jointly, in other words, while the cause or causes of action had to be joint as to all the defendants, the relief asked might be joint, several, or in the alternative (2). It might, it was said, be that the term "same matter" was more comprehensive than "cause of action," and that if sect 28 stood by itself it would in effect allow a joinder prohibited by sect 45. But if as was held that section did not affect but was, on the contrary, controlled by sects 44 and 45, which regulated the joinder of different causes of action, then sect 28 was restricted in its application to cases in which different causes of action might be joined in one suit. In this view, sect 28 did not affect the question of joinder of causes of action, which was entirely regulated by the provisions of Chapter IV, and a suit, though not bad for misjoinder of parties under sect 28, might be bad for misjoinder of causes of action under sect 45. It was not clear, however, why the two different expressions should have been used and neither of the views stated was free from difficulty (3).

The case of several liability is retained in O I r 3, corresponding with sect 28 of that Code. But the words "in respect of the same matter" have been now omitted from O I r 3. For the reasons given by him, the opinion of Mahmood, J, would still seem preferable even had this not been so. The position would now appear to be this. O I r 1 allows plaintiffs to join where the relief claimed (whether the claim be joint or several) is in respect of or arises out of "the same act or transaction." The necessary corollary of this is that if all persons may be joined as defendants against whom relief is claimed in respect of "the same matter" this phrase must include what is understood

(1) Narsingh Das v Mangal Dubey, 5 A, p 172 et seq, per Mahmood, J.

(2) Ib, 5 A, p 166 et seq.

(3) It has also been held in a recent Madras case that the words "same matter" are wider than the term "cause of action" Dampanaboyina v Addala, 25 M 736, at pp 745, 746 (1902). The Calcutta High Court has in some cases justified the joinder of defendants on the ground that there was but one cause of action. Loke Nath v Keshab Ram, 13 C 147, 152 (1880), Ishan Chandra v Rameshwar 24 C 831 (1897), though it has never held that the two terms are synonymous. See also Luckumsey v Fazulla, 5 B 177, at p 179 (1880), Janakinath v Ramrunjun, 4 C at pp 952, 953 (1879), Muthappa v Muthu, 27 M 80, at p 83 (1903).

by "the same act or transaction" in O I r 1, that is, cases where, though the cause of action may not be the same, relief is claimed on a common ground. The qualification is now omitted, but the same result would follow even if O I r 3 had not been (as is the case) expressly amended to bring it into conformity with the provisions of r 1 of that Order. But where the subject matter of the suit is not the same as regards plaintiffs and defendants, and the causes of action are entirely distinct there being no common ground, then under r 3, in order to justify joinder, there must be joint rights in the plaintiffs and joint liability in the defendants.

Cause of action—As already elsewhere observed, this expression has always had a signification which cannot be said to be precise or definite (1) being sometimes taken to mean the right, together with the infringement, or the title together with the injury, in other words, all the circumstances which a plaintiff is required to allege in order to show a right to relief, and being sometimes used as indicating merely the injury, which is the cause of the plaintiff coming into Court (2) or as indicating the plaintiff's right merely (3). These differing definitions account in part for the differing views to be found in the cases under this as other sections (4). So the right has been treated as the whole cause of action (5). On the other hand, it was held that the term as used in sect 31 of the last Code, and in the section corresponding with r 3, had the same sense as in English law, viz of every fact which it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove to support his right to the judgment of the Court (6). The title on which a plaintiff sues is only one of several ingredients in the cause of action, and that term includes also the infringement of the plaintiff's right (7). The question under the section which r 3 replaces, has often arisen in cases of alienations of joint property by a coparcener, or of a Hindu widow's estate by the widow, and sometimes in other cases. The cases upon the point are in conflict, and it is not possible to reconcile them. The determination of the question whether there is a misjoinder in respect of cause of action, where one suit is brought against all the defendants, depends upon the view which is adopted of the meaning of the term "cause of action," and also on the question discussed in the last paragraph

(1) In Fatima Bibi v Abdul Majid, 14 A at p 536 (1892) it was said that the term 'cause of action' had not been used in ss 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47 of the Code of 1882 in precisely the same sense.

R 86, 87 (1871), the Court said, "It is not a plaintiff's title which is to be regarded in a suit of this nature in considering a plea of misjoinder, but rather the wrongs alleged," and pointed out that if those wrongs were distinct and separable the wrong done must, in the absence of combination, be tried separately. See Mohan Lal v Girdhar Lal Maharaj 30 A. 283 (P. C.) (1913), proof of title by the bait.

In the cases, the decision in favour of the unity of the cause of action proceeds upon the theory that the plaintiff's right is the cause of action (1). If this be so, and there be unity as to the right, there is no misjoinder of causes of action in a suit in which the several alienees are defendants (2). Apart from the question as to the correctness or otherwise of this view, practical objections have been urged against joinder in such cases. It has been said that one alienee is not interested in an alienation of another part of the estate made at another time to another person. Evidence against one defendant may not be admissible against another. Different questions may arise as to various profits. The procedure may prove vexatious and harassing to the defendants, each of whom has to wait whilst the case is going on against others, and to detain his witnesses meanwhile. The case is complicated in both the Court of first instance and appeal, where each case may have to be argued as a separate and distinct cause (3). Even where the action was held sustainable, the Court observed that separate actions against the alienees was the better procedure (4). As against this it

(1) Sami Chatter v. Annamai, 7 M. H. C. R. 260 (1873). In this case, which was a suit brought against the alienees of the plaintiff's father's widow to recover the properties which had been alienated by the widow during his minority, H. J. J., said: "The Judge says that the cause of action against each of the purchasers is a distinct one. The plaintiff claims his share of family property. His cause of action, the right, is his relation to the family to which the property appertains, and on this right, if established, and if he is not otherwise barred from recovering, he will be entitled to that share whenever found. The fact that various persons during his minority have affected to purchase parcels of the property does not destroy the unity of his ground of action." And in a suit by reversioners of B against defendants, who set up respective titles to different plots of land by purchases from B, it was also held there was no misjoinder, the Court holding that the cause of action was that plaintiffs were reversioners of B: Jahan Chunder v. Rameswar, 24 C. 831 (1897), diss. from in Ram Prosad v. Bachi Dassi, 8 C. W. N. 585 (1902), appd. in Parbati Kunwar v. Mahmud Fatima, 29 A. 267 (1907). In Mahomed v. Krishnan, 11 M. 106 (1886), a suit by junior members of a tarwad against the karnatan and others, including persons to whom he had alienated tarwad property, the Court observed (at p. 111) that it made no difference whether the right enforced was that of a coparcener or reversioner, and that in the view that the primary ground of action is the interest vested in possession as regards the whole of the property in suit there is unity of title, and the claim made is one in respect of the same cause of action. See also the cases in the following note, which may have proceeded upon the same principles.

may be said that the policy of the law is not to favour multiplication of suits (1) And in some cases, as observed by the Madras High Court, (2) "it is manifest that the number and nature of the alienations are no unimportant elements for the determination of their propriety. It is most desirable that the whole of them should be at once before the Court called upon to decide the question, in order to secure the soundness of the particular decisions, and perhaps the avoidance of discordant decisions in different cases upon facts nearly the same" It would probably be best if the Courts were given, as to procedure, a discretion to be exercised in a manner to the convenience of trial and of the parties and to the advantage of substantial justice. It is, however, necessary to determine the question by reference to the definition of the term under discussion and the other provisions of the Code. If therefore, on the other hand, the words "cause of action" denote both the right and its infringement, (3) there has been said to be distinct causes of action against each of the alienees, and in consequence misjoinder, (4) except perhaps where the suit is both against the alienor and the alienees. In such case it has been said (5) that (there being a complete cause of action both as to right and infringement) against the defendant alienor, it is necessary to bring the alienees on the record to afford ground for decision of the whole dispute, and that it cannot be said that a separate cause of action exists against the alienor "in conjunction with each group of alienees, the alienations not being the causes of the present action, (6) but merely incidental thereto" (7) In a case, however, where the alienor was a party, the Bombay High Court held that the plaintiffs had distinct causes of action against the several defendants, and that there was a misjoinder (8) Whether, however, the suit is open to objection for misjoinder or not, the Court may always in its discretion direct separate trials to be held. Similarly, in a suit for possession of immoveable property against two defendants, the cause of action being that the first defendant had no title to mortgage the property to the second defendant, it was held that there was no misjoinder, and that there were not two causes of action, but one, namely, the infringement of the plaintiff's right by the first defendant, out of which flowed the title asserted by the second defendant, who derived title from the first defendant, and whose case stood or fell with his (1) A fortiori, there is but one cause of action against a defendant and others who are not real but merely ostensible purchasers from him (2) So, again, a defendant who, under a decree, subsequently reversed, ousts a plaintiff from possession, may be sued with persons to whom, subsequent to the ouster, he has leased the land they stood in the shoes of their lessor, and were jointly liable with him to be ousted (3) The joinder of several persons in doing an act does not affect its unity or the unity of the cause of action constituted by that act, as in the case of an obstruction or ouster by a number of persons who are alleged to have acted in combination (4) It was held that different causes of action could not be joined in one suit against different parties, where each had a distinct and separate interest, (5) that the Courts should reject plaints against several defendants for causes of action which had accrued against each of them separately and in respect of which they are not jointly concerned, (6) that there was no section of the Code which permitted a person to sue various defendants together in respect of various causes of action, (7) and that plaintiffs could not join in one suit in respect of causes of action in which they were not all jointly interested (8)

In Bisheshur v Ram Churun 5 A H C 25 (1873) Pearson J. held that as there was collusion there was no misjoinder. Stuart C.J. held there was no cause of action against first defendant, a different matter from misjoinder though he held that the suit was bad on that ground. The following suits have thus been held to be bad for misjoinder — A joint action for the price of timber against defendants, who purchased each one pair of timber separately from the other, (1) A sold to X and B sold to X, a suit by Y against A, B, and X to enforce a right of pre-emption, (2) a suit claiming possession against all of defendants, with mesne profits against some and damages against others, (3) a suit by a talookdar against the zamindar and several purchasers to set aside sales to them respectively of five patni taluks sold for arrears of rent due separately upon each, (4) a claim to set aside sale against auction purchaser and for damages against zurpeshgidars, (5) a suit against several persons, each a party to a distinct contract, (6) a suit as against one defendant for specific performance of a contract to sell land and as against another for a declaration that he was not entitled to any charge upon the same lands, the causes of action being distinct as against the defendants, (7) a suit against one person, an alleged agent of a firm, for breach of contract and against another as partner to have accounts taken and the partnership wound up (8)

It is necessary now, however, particularly in the case of suits by reversioners above mentioned, to consider the effect of the enlarged scope of O 1 r 1 and its effect on the question of joinder of defendants, for now apparently all reversioners might join in any suit any number of defendants in respect of several properties, provided they base their claims (which need not be joint but may be several) on a common ground

The relief—The cause of action must, as in other cases, be distinguished from the relief claimed. So where plaintiff, a creditor, brought a suit on his own behalf and on behalf of other creditors, asking on his own behalf to set aside a deed as void, and on behalf of other creditors for a declaration that the deed was voidable, it was held that both the plaintiff and the other creditors had one cause of action, namely, the right to treat the deed as one which could not affect their rights, although as the plaintiff had obtained a decree which he wished to execute, he for that purpose required relief by setting aside the deed as void (1)

A plaintiff may always put forward an alternative case, (2) provided that the facts stated as the basis of alternative relief are the same. Where there is a single cause of action, or several causes of action against the same defendant, no difficulty arises. Where the first defendant dispossessed the plaintiff of land sold to him by the second defendant, and he sued for possession and mesne profits, or in the alternative for the refund of the purchase money from the second defendant, it was held that there was but one cause of action, namely, the dispossession and no misjoinder (3). Two separate alternative causes of action against the same defendant may be joined (4).

A claim for possession by plaintiffs, four anna zemindars to receive a four anna share in a patta alleged to be in possession of all six defendants, or in the alternative, except as against one defendant, for rent, was held not to be bad for misjoinder, it being further held that notwithstanding that the claim for possession or rent might be unsustainable in fact as against some of the defendants, that was no ground for dismissing the suit generally for misjoinder (5).

"Does sect. 15 (now rule 3) contemplate a case where plaintiff has really only one cause of action upon which he can succeed, but being in doubt as to which of his alleged causes of action will be successful proceeds upon both with the intention of obtaining relief out of one of them? Are not the several causes of action contemplated by sect. 15 causes of action which, it is alleged, each afford grounds for separate relief, and combined for cumulative and not alternative relief?" (6). In England it has been held that if two persons could not be joined as defendants unless the causes of action against them were exactly the same, the object of the Legislature would be entirely defeated (7). It would seem from the cases cited that the fact that alternative reliefs were claimed did not authorize a joinder of several causes of action against several persons not jointly interested. So where a suit was brought to set aside the sale of a mehal against the persons who had purchased it at an auction sale held for default in payment of Government revenue by surpeshgirdars, to whom the mehal had been let, or in the alternative for damages against the surpeshgirdars who had defaulted in the payment, it was dismissed for multifariousness as the two claims were based on distinct causes of action (8). And where a plaintiff contracted for sale to him of a house for Rs 2500, and sued alleging a subsequent sale by the defendant to a third party, and prayed for a decree either for specific performance of the contract of sale on payment of Rs 2400 (Rs 100 having been paid as earnest money), or for pre-emption on the sale on payment of Rs 2500, or whatever might be the market value of the house, Chatterjee, J, observed, that two distinct claims in the alternative, based on distinct causes of action, could not be joined under the section corresponding with rule 3. Rivaz, J, also doubted the correctness of their joinder, putting the query already quoted (1).

Same defendants jointly.—It has been already pointed out that joint interest in the main questions raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants, the test being whether there is community of interest in the causes to be determined (2). It was held that there was no provision of the Code allowing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants, that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested, to be united in the same suit (3). The mere similarity of the claim is no ground for joining in one suit claims which, though similar, are several and distinct against several persons, (4) nor is the convenience of their trial by one Court (5). Where a cause of action arising out of a joint account of two defendants was united with another arising out of a transaction in which one of the defendants alone was concerned, it was held that the causes of action were not against the same defendants jointly (6). Where the defendants are not jointly liable, each distinct cause of action must form the subject of a separate suit. So where A sold to X, and B sold to X, whereupon Y sued A, B, and X to enforce a right of pre-emption, it was held to be a misjoinder, there being distinct causes of action in respect of which the defendants had no common interest (7). So where plaintiffs in a suit for partition joined as defendants a number of cultivating ryots, whom they sought to eject, it was held that the suit for partition was of little interest to the ryots, and the question of ejectment was a distinct one in the case of each ryot (8). So, also, there has been held to be a misjoinder where the right to relief against one defendant was in respect of the non fulfilment of a contract, and the right to a declaration against another was in respect of a threatened disturbance of the plaintiff's possession (9). The same has been held in a suit against defendants for possession, and against some of them for damages, and against others for mesne profits, (10) and in a suit to recover possession of certain lands by reversal of certain deeds, some of the deeds being of absolute, and some of conditional, sale (1) Although there must still be community of interest where the causes of action are entirely distinct, it will be necessary in each case to see whether this is so or whether though the causes of action are several there is a common ground justifying their joinder. On the other hand, there was held to be no misjoinder in a suit against a defendant who had obtained possession under a decree which had been reversed, as also against his lessees the latter standing in the shoes of their lessor and being jointly liable with him to be ousted (2) In a suit against joint decree holders for the plaintiff's customary fourth share of the profits realized by the decree holder by an execution sale of different houses at different times, the decree holders were held to be joint, though their liability to give the share in respect of the sale of each house was separate (3) So, also, a suit instituted to eject all the tenants holding separate lands in a village, and to recover arrears of rent from them was held not to be bad for misjoinder, as all the defendants claimed by inheritance or by purchase or otherwise under one and the same person, or under one of two persons who had executed the muchalka for the lands and the plaintiff therefore had a common cause of action against the defendants, and was not obliged to sue them separately (4)

As in other cases, (5) a person who is a party in different capacities is not the same defendant—a principle which though partly recognized in rule 5 is of general application. Thus, where a person is a party in two capacities there is misjoinder, unless each cause of action affects him in both capacities (6)

Plaintiffs jointly interested—The words "jointly interested" were first introduced by Act XII of 1879. Under the Code of 1859, it was held to be a misjoinder where the causes of action of the plaintiffs were different and distinct in their nature (7). A suit brought by three persons for the possession

This case was distinguished in Haranund v Prosunno, 9 C 763 (1883) [suit by purchaser of property subsequently sold in execution against parties to the decree and purchasers in execution of different portions of property], and in Ram Naram v Annoda, 14 C 681 [plaintiff talookdar obtained decree for ejectment of tenant in execution of decree opposed by defendants. One suit against judgment debtor and all parties opposing but without collusion]. In the first of these suits it was held there was no misjoinder, and in the second that there was. Both cases however, based the decision upon the question whether the plaintiff had one object and the defendants a common defence. As regards these cases it was pointed out (Hukm Chand C P C 573) that the test for joinder was the unity of the cause of action and not of the object of the suit, and the unity of the defence was not knowable until after the institution of the suit.

And that negative fact of usage is I think influential to show how very unpracticable quite apart from any matter of law it has been found that combined suits of this character should be united together and treated as if they were one of immoveable property, in which two of them claimed half the property under a title by inheritance and the third claimed the other half in virtue of a sale thereof to him by the first plaintiff, was held to be bad for misjoinder of causes of action (1). The Court said "Although it appears to us that sect 8 of Act VIII of 1859, the first paragraph of sect 45 of Act X of 1877 and the first paragraph of the present Code mean the same thing, we assume that the Legislature by the amendment of 1877, by the amendment of 1879 and by the wording of the first paragraph of sect 45, as it at present stands, intended to make it clear that their intention was that several plaintiffs could only join in suing several defendants in one suit for several causes of action when the plaintiffs were jointly interested in each and all of such causes of action and that the second part of the first paragraph of sect 45 is merely enacting that several plaintiffs jointly interested in the same causes of action against the same defendant or several defendants jointly may sue in the same manner, as by the first part of that paragraph it is enacted one plaintiff may sue one defendant or more jointly in one suit on several causes of action to which the defendants if more than one were parties and that it did not intend to confer a right by sect 45 on several plaintiffs to sue on causes of action which were not jointly vested in them one or more defendants, although the acts of all the defendants jointly might have completed a separate cause of action of each several plaintiff and afforded him a cause of action on which he could sue alone'. It was assumed however by the Judges that the Legislature did not intend "directly or indirectly to prohibit the joining by Hindu or Mahomedan heirs in one suit of their causes of action in respect of what had been the property of their ancestor or of the family and that it had been the practice in the North West Provinces to allow Hindu or Mahomedan heirs, even where their interests were several to join in one suit for the recovery of property which had belonged to a common ancestor through whom title was claimed, and that they regarded the decision in Ram Sewak Singh v Nahched (2) as necessarily confined to the maintenance of that practice. The same principle was followed in a subsequent case (3) in which it was held that several creditors to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor could not jointly sue for the avoidance of a deed of gift executed by the debtor, which deed was alleged to have been made fraudulently with intent to defeat or delay executant's creditors the cause of action of each separate creditor not being the same as that of the others. Similarly a suit by two brothers for a declaration that the parts of the house attached in execution of a decree against their father belonged to them and not to him was held to be irregular though the Court observed that the plaintiffs might well have thought that the case came within the latter part of the first paragraph as in one sense their title was a common title which was assailed by one and the same action of the execution creditor, and they were jointly interested in opposing the attachment and sale, although a sale would only have affected each man's separate interest (1) Where the cause of action in the case of the first plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of the first plaintiff as issueless widow of M. G. to succeed him jointly with the other widows, whereas the cause of action in the case of second plaintiff aimed at the establishment of the title of second plaintiff by reason of an adoption to take the estate of M. G. to the exclusion of all others, it was held that it could not be said that the two plaintiffs were jointly interested in these inconsistent causes of action. The establishment of first plaintiff's title would exclude second plaintiff from all right to take or share in the estate, and the establishment of second plaintiff's title would equally debar first plaintiff from any share in the estate, but a right to be maintained out of it—a right which was not brought in contest (2) The Court added "Sect 45 permits of the joinder in the same suit of several causes of action in which several plaintiffs are jointly interested against the same defendant. These plaintiffs are jointly interested against the same defendant in the sense that it is the object of both plaintiffs to show a title in one or other of them to the whole or a portion of the estate in competition with the defendant, but this is not enough. they must each be jointly interested with the other in the several causes of action—not necessarily equally interested but jointly interested, i.e. as we understand, not jointly interested as a mere matter of affection, but jointly interested as to the subject matter of the suit which the causes of action have in contemplation" (3) When two persons are interested in a piece of land—one as meharamdar, and the other kudaramdar—and a third party commits a wrongful act which affects the rights of the persons so interested it may be properly held that the land is common to both to the extent of entitling them to sue jointly in respect of the wrongful act, treating such act as giving rise to but one cause of action affecting the two persons more or less (4) So long as several causes of action are by the same or jointly interested plaintiffs and against the same defendant or defendants jointly, they may be joined subject only to the Court's discretion of ordering their separation. There are no restrictions as to the nature of the cause of action which may be so joined, as it is stated (5) there are in most of the Code States of the American Union, but the restrictions there may sometimes prove a good guide here as to the advisability, as apart from the legality, of the joinder (6) Sect 26 (now O I r 1) has now been amended so as to permit plaintiffs to join in whom any right to relief exists in respect of, or arising out of, the same act or transaction that is, where if separate suits were brought any common question of law or fact would arise.

it might at any time before the settlement of issues have been returned for amendment (1) If the plaint, having been returned for amendment, was not amended, it might have been rejected (2) If this was not done and subsequently objection was taken by the defendant, which might be either in the written statement or in a motion to take the plaint off the file or on the settlement of issues, (3) or the Court, on further consideration, considered that there were grounds for considering the plaint bad for misjoinder, the Judge should have raised an issue and decided it, and dismissed the suit (4) If, however, the Judge felt doubtful whether his decision on the point of misjoinder would stand, he might have properly framed the issues of fact for the determination of the case, and then dismissed the suit for misjoinder without recording any finding on the other issues (5) Further, the circumstances must have been such that the first Court had no alternative open to it but to proceed to trial of the matters of fact upon the preliminary determination of which the point raised as to misjoinder turns. It might then have dismissed the suit (6) As to the present Code, vide post. Where the District Judge disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not taken at the

And in Aldridge v Barrow, 34 C 662 (1907) the plaintiffs were put to election.

In some of the earlier cases the plaint appears to have been in the first instance rejected, or it was held that it should have been rejected. Narsingh Das v Mangal Dubey, 5 A 163, 171 (1882) [rejection stated to be under s 53 of the Code of 1882, sed qu], Raja Ram Tewary v Luchmun Pershad, 8 W R 15 (1867), Baboo Motu v Rance, 8 W R 64 (1867), Sudhendhu v Durga Das, 14 C 435, 439 (1887), Towarco v Syud, 4 A H C 108 (1871), Mussumat Rutta v Durnee Fall, 2 A H C 153 (1870).

The plaint might also be returned for amendment under s 53 before settlement of issues. In Sudhendhu v Durga, 14 C at p 439 the Court held, that with reference to ss 31 and 53 of the Code of 1882, the Court should not have dismissed but rejected the plaint. It is not clear whether issues had been settled but neither sections appear to apply. S 31 related to misjoinder of parties, and s 53 dealt with rejection for want of cause of action. In Janakinath v Ramrunjun, 4 C at pp 953-954 (1897), the Court said that when distinct causes of action are improperly joined the Court should not dismiss the suit but try them separately. This observation was obiter, and s 45 contemplated separation, not where the joinder was illegal, but where it was permitted, though a joint trial was inconvenient (vide post). In Hurro Monco v Onookool, 8 W R 401 (1867), it was said that the Court should have called upon the plaintiff to elect against which defendant he would proceed.

earliest possible moment, namely, in the written statement but the objection was taken at the settlement of issues before trial, it was given effect to on second appeal (1) The power given to the Court to return a plaint was only discretionary, and if it was shown that the form of a suit was bad, by reason that there has been misjoinder of parties, or of causes of action, it could not be said that a party was precluded from raising the objection and taking it at the hearing of the suit or on appeal. There was nothing to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiffs, there was an end of the matter, and that the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal (2) Where such a question has been raised, the Appellate Court has allowed a suit or claim to be withdrawn (3) Where the appeal has proceeded, the question has been raised in some cases whether the Appeal Court was precluded from reversing a decision on the ground of misjoinder, by reason of sect 578 of the former Code. In some cases, misjoinder of causes of action has been considered an irregularity not affecting jurisdiction or the merits of the case (4) In other cases it has been held that, assuming but not deciding that misjoinder was a mere irregularity, it did affect the merits (5) In other cases it appears to have been held that misjoinder of causes of action was of the nature not of an irregularity but an illegality (6) The law upon the point was thus unsettled (1) Probably in some cases it will be found that the merits were affected Where, however, this was not so, and particularly where no objection had been taken (a circumstance in itself indicating that the party has not suffered disadvantage), the Court would probably have acted rightly in not dismissing the suit upon what, in the supposed circumstances would be a technical objection Where effect was given to the objection, the Appellate Court, in the under mentioned case, (2) did not dismiss the suit, but rejected the plaint, directing the plaintiffs to pay the costs throughout In other cases the Court both in first and second appeal, has dismissed (3) the suit for misjoinder As to the present Code, vide post

To turn to the present Code it does not as sect 53 of the last did specifically deal with return for amendment but O VI r 17 allows of amendment and the Court may it is presumed return the plaint for that purpose Under the last Code (sect 54 (d)) a plaint so returned and not amended was rejected This provision has not been re enacted but O VI r 18 deals with failure to amend after order As regards an objection on the score of misjoinder r 7 of this Order provides for its being taken at the earliest opportunity and if not so taken the objection is deemed waived Even if taken the objection will under sect 99 count for nothing in appeal unless it be shown that such misjoinder has affected the merits of the case Here therefore as elsewhere the Code has diminished the importance of merely technical objections

Origin of rules—These two rules represent with the amendments italicized sect 44 of the last Code which it was stated was not very happily expressed (1) R 4 is taken from English O 18 r 2 the words or to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property in the former section were added to meet the decision in Gledhill v Hunter, (1) but have been now omitted R 5 is taken from English O 18, r 5, the word "heir" having been added, as in this country it is not an executor or administrator alone who represents the estate of a deceased person (2) The words after "heir" have also been added

Objections for misjoinder—Under sect 51 (d) of the last Code, the plaintiff might have been rejected in case of failure to amend, on its being returned for the purpose under sect 53 of the same Code (3) If the Court, instead of rejecting the plaintiff or returning it for amendment, proceeded to trial, it should not, it was held, subsequently dismiss the suit for misjoinder, but dispose of it on the merits (4) The objection being of a dilatory character, and beside the merits, must have been taken in the Court of first instance, if not, it was deemed waived (5) It was not allowed to be taken for the first time on appeal, and where it was raised for the first time on appeal, the High Court, on second appeal declined to entertain it (6) A successful objection for misjoinder is a cause for which time may be deducted under sect 14 of the Limitation Act (7) Sect 54 is now O VII r 11, but clause (d) has not been re enacted See now O VI r 18

Leave—It will be observed that leave can only be applied for in the case of r 1 R 5 is absolute Application should be made before the plaintiff is filed, though possibly, on good reason shown, leave may be given afterwards (8) A plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, join causes of action, but he is nowhere compelled to do so (9) And even in regard to the excepted causes of action which may be joined, the exception implies only a permission of joinder but does not render it obligatory (10) Where leave is applied for, the question whether it will be granted must depend upon convenience and the circumstances of the case Amongst these, the Court will consider the connection between the claims sought to be joined So leave has been given to join where it was sought to recover immoveable and moveable property comprised in the same instrument, and to join claims in respect of personal and real estate, where both estates rested on a common gift in the same will (11) No appeal lay from an order rejecting an application for leave, but where the effect of the order was to reject the plaintiff it was held that the order was a decree, and, as such, appealable (12)

Jurisdiction—Where causes of action are united, jurisdiction depends on the value of the aggregate subject matters (13)

Rule 4 "Cause of action"—The rule presupposes a case where there are two or more various causes of action, one of which is to recover immoveable property Several causes of action to recover immoveable property may be joined The rule does not prohibit this, but a joinder with such causes of action of a different character, except as excepted in the rule (1) If, however, the Court considers it inadvisable to try the several causes of action in one suit, it can order separate trials (2) There is nothing, moreover, irregular in seeking to recover in one suit immoveable and moveable property if the cause of action is the same in respect of both (3) These decisions appear to be embodied in the new clause (c) And even a claim for possession of certain immoveable property, based on the first paragraph of sect 9 of the Specific Relief Act, may it has been held, be joined without leave, with a claim for title to that property, and for damages for dispossession from it (4) Claims which do not amount to a new cause of action, but which are mere machinery, such as a prayer for an injunction or receiver, may be joined without leave (5) But it has been held that an injunction cannot be asked for where it was not merely ancillary to the claim for possession (6)

"Suit for the recovery of immoveable property"—The expression "suit for the recovery of immoveable property," which is that used in sect 16, is more limited than the expression "suit for immoveable property" or "for land" within the meaning of the Charter A suit may be one "for land" within the meaning of the latter, and not within this rule (7) So it has been held that a claim for specific performance of an agreement to sell a share in a house might be joined with a claim on a promissory note (8) So, again, a suit for recovery of a mortgage debt with an alternative prayer for sale, has been held not a suit for recovery of immoveable property (9) Wilson, J said (10) "It seems to me that a suit for 'the recovery of immoveable property,' is a suit founded upon an existing title in which the plaintiff seeks to get possession of the property itself The words 'to obtain a declaration' etc, seem to me to apply to a case where a title exists, and the plaintiff asks to have that fact declared, not to a case where he seeks to have something done, which, when done will give him a title" Immoveable property in this rule includes a right of way (11)

Court, said "Now, when can it be said that a claim is made by 'an heir as such'?" Plainly, such a claim is made when the plaintiff rests his claim entirely on the allegation that he is the heir of another, and, as such, asserts a right against the defendant." So where a portion of a claim was founded upon the plaintiff's alleged right as heir of A, and another part of the claim had no reference to A's estate, it was held that there was a misjoinder, and that one of the claims must be struck out (1). The Allahabad High Court has, however, dissented from this decision, holding that the heir referred to in the rule is an heir suing or being sued in his representative capacity, who, like an executor or administrator, represents the estate of a deceased person, and that it is impossible to hold that the rule precludes a person from joining a claim for property acquired by himself, with a claim for property inherited by him from another, when he does not represent persons other than himself (2). And more recently Jenkins, C.J., explained the meaning of the rule to be as follows. Those to whom it relates have the common characteristic that they owe their legal condition to the death of another. But there are others of whom this can be predicated as for instance legatees or next of kin who are not named in the rule. Executors administrators, and heirs have this characteristic in common not shared by legatees and next of kin, namely, that not only do they acquire title from the deceased, but they may represent him (3). And in a recent case in the Bombay High Court it was held that a claim for maintenance by the widow of a Mitakshara coparcener was not against the estate of her deceased husband (since his interest was extinguished by his death), but was against the property of which he was a coparcener, and therefore there was no misjoinder when she sued the surviving coparceners for her stridhan property and also for maintenance out of the joint estate (4).

6. Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action Power of Court to order separate trials joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient

Joinder of causes of action—This rule corresponds, subject to certain alterations with the second paragraph of sect 45 of the last Code and with O 18, r 1 and portion of O 16, r 1 of the English rules. See note to O II, r 3 the first paragraph of which embodies the first paragraph of sect 45 of the Code of 1882. That rule relates only to the joinder of causes of action. It assumes that the action has been rightly constituted under O I, r 1, ante (5). Under the English rule it has been held that save in actions for the recovery of land and in actions by a trustee

(1) Ashabai v. Haji Lyeb, 6 B 390 (1882). In Gokilai v. Lakshmidas 14 B 490, 192 (1890), the Court ordered the plaintiff to elect, directing that she might proceed with either claim subject to her paying any costs specially caused to the defendant by the misjoinder, but this case has been dissented from in Jankibai v. Shrinivas Ganesh, 38 B 120 (1913).

in bankruptcy, the plaintiff may without leave, but subject to rules 8, 9, join in one action, not several actions, but several "causes of action" (1) which term has been held to comprise every fact which is material to be proved to enable the plaintiff to succeed, (2) the entire set of facts which give rise to an enforceable claim, every fact which, if traversed, the plaintiff must prove in order to obtain judgment, (3) so connected that, as regards evidence, etc., they can conveniently be disposed of together (4) But this joinder is "always subject to the underlying principle that the burden lies on the plaintiff of proving his case, and that no extra burden should be imposed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of dispute" (5)

Order for separation—The Court might, under the terms of sect 45 of the last Code, order separate trials of any "such causes of action"—that is, causes of action which might have been joined in the same suit under the first paragraph of that section. The second paragraph, therefore, had no application in cases of misjoinder of causes of action forbidden by the first paragraph, as to which the only course open to the Court was that of returning the plaint for amendment, or rejecting it if not amended, or dismissing the suit (vide ante) (6) Under sect 45 the Court could, suo motu or on the application of the party, order separate trials. This can be done now under this rule which consolidates the provisions of the second paragraph of sect 45, and of sects 16, 47 of the last Code. The power given did not, it was held, extend to an order for the dismissal of defendants, and that a fresh suit should be brought against them. Such an order would not be one for the "separate disposal" (or separate trial) of the several causes of action, it would be an order preventing the disposal of them in the suit before the Court. If the Court found that the separate causes of action could not be conveniently tried together, it should, it was held, deal with them separately as sub suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring (7) So in a suit on title in which the recovery of immoveable property and mesne profits are claimed, the Court may order separate trials in respect of the claim for the recovery of the immoveable property, and in respect of the claim for mesne profits (8)

A direction to file separate plaints did not, it was held, come within the scope of the section which did not require the plaintiff to file separate plaints, but provided for the separate trial of the several causes of action contained in the one plaint, filed on the institution of a suit (9) As already stated, the order which the Court might make was one for separation, and that only in the case where joinder was not forbidden. In the under-mentioned case, (1) however, the Court appeared to consider that even if two causes of action had been combined in the suit, it had power under sect 15 of the last Code and would be justified in allowing two causes of action to be united in the case, inasmuch as it was convenient that the matter should be disposed of in one suit rather than two. The power, however, which was given by that section was to order separation, and a definite provision of law cannot be evaded on the ground of convenience (2). In an earlier case in which the Judge stated that, evidence having been gone into, he preferred trying each cause of action against each defendant separately, instead of rejecting the plaint on the ground of misjoinder, it was pointed out that he had misconceived the extent of his powers in the matter in considering the matter one simply of convenience, and that if he were disposed to try the causes of action against all the defendants in one suit, he was at liberty to do so (3). Nor again, of course, could the Court, where there had been a misjoinder, even though no inconvenience might have resulted to the defendants, pass a separate decree against each of them (4). An Appellate Court had power, apparently, to order separate trials (5). Except where the parties agreed, the order could only be made before the first hearing (6). There is no such express limitation now, but doubtless the same rule will be ordinarily followed.

Order confining suit.—Sects 46 and 47 of the last Code dealt with a different order from that in the second paragraph of sect 45. Under the latter section, the Court dealt with the causes of action separately as sub-mits. The former, however, enabled a defendant, who was embarrassed by the form of the suit to get the trial confined to a reasonable aggregate of causes of action and in such a case the other causes must needs be left over for another suit (7). This provision, as the other, assumed that the causes of action might be legally joined, though such joinder might be inconvenient, in which case a defendant might apply or the Court might act. It did not apply where there was misjoinder. It applied where there were several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendant jointly. A case where separate causes of action were alleged against two defendants did not come within the rule (8). In sect 46, as in sect 15 of the last Code, the words "before the first hearing" were held to be imperative (9). Order XVIII rule 9 of the Judicature Acts, (10) allows such amendment as may be necessitated by the procedure adopted (1) In the under mentioned case it was held that it was not necessary to dismiss a suit in which claims upon different causes of action and against different persons have been joined together, and that it ought to be tried, so far as relates to the joint claim, against all the defendants, the Court excluding from its consideration any claim not common against all (2) But this could be done only by amendment by the plaintiff, as the second paragraph of sect 45 of the former Code was applicable only to the causes of action which might have been joined in the same suit (3)

The present rule does not expressly refer to orders confining suits but the provision in this respect which formerly existed still seems to remain, as appears from the use of the word "disposed" and the authority given to the Court "to make such other order as may be expedient," which would include such an order confining the suit as was referred to in sects 46 and 47 of the last Code, which this rule is intended to replace

Consolidation of suits—The rule deals with the separate trial of causes of action united in one suit Neither does it, nor does any other section of the Code, provide for the consolidation of several suits Consolidation may be ordered by consent of parties (4) And where the parties do not agree, consolidation is sometimes ordered by the Court as a matter of expediency (5) on general principles of equity and justice So where the parties to the suit sought to be consolidated were the same and the subject matter of the suits also was the same, the Court made an order for consolidation (6) Where, on the other hand the parties and the subject matter were different, consolidation was refused (7) And three suits were held to have been improperly tried together, where, from the very nature of the case the evidence in each suit had to be given separately (8) In the Falls of Ettrick, (9) an application by the impugnant for the consolidation of three salvage actions was refused, as the promovent resisted it on the ground that the several claims were based upon different circumstances and were in themselves conflicting, Sale, J, observing that there being no general or special rules for the consolidation of actions, the only course left in the case was to follow the analogy of the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England The order for consolidation may be obtained either by a plaintiff (10) or

ORDER III.

Recognized Agents and Pleaders.

1. Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, 15

Appearances, etc., may be in person, by recognized agent or by pleader. required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent, or by a pleader duly appointed to act on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person

"Appearance"—These words ("appear" and "act") have a well defined and well known meaning To appear for a client in Court is to be present and to represent him in the various stages of the litigation at which it is necessary that the client should be present in Court himself, or by some representative (1) There may be appearance if the pleader, though instructed, is not prepared to proceed with the case (2) Under the last Code it was held that where, on the day fixed for hearing, a party was present in person merely for the purpose of applying for an adjournment, which was refused he must be taken to have "appeared" within the meaning of Chapter VII of that Code, the provisions of which are replaced by this and following rules The party has appeared in person The purpose for which he appeared or the action which he took on appearance, are immaterial But where the party is absent and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that case the party had not appeared within the meaning of the Chapter (2) Where the pleader who applies for an adjournment is accompanied by a recognized agent of the party, but the latter neither makes any application, nor does any act, the question is whether he intends to appear and in fact, does appear for the party in the exercise of his powers under this rule

Singh, 35 C. 1023 (1908) (Woodroffe, J.), Satish Chandra Mukerjee v Ahara Prasad, 34 C. 403 (1907), and post, notes to O. 9,
 r. 1, and O. 41, r. 17

This rule is merely permissive and enabling. If the recognized agent although able to do so, does not think proper to conduct the case on behalf of his principal, his mere presence in Court is not an "appearance" in the suit. An appearance may be made by a pleader or a recognized agent, but the concurrence of the pleader or agent is essential. As soon as he ceases to intend to represent the principal, the latter is unrepresented (1). The words in the last Code after "party" were "to a suit or appeal". These words are now omitted. The section will still apply to appeals as proceedings in suits.

"Act"—"To act for a client in Court is to take on his behalf in the Court, or in the offices of the Court, the necessary steps that must be taken in the course of the litigation in order that his case may be properly laid before the Court" (2). The word "act" is, however, taken to refer only to ordinary acts, and thus not to include the instituting or defending of a suit, which a recognized agent cannot do in his own name (3). Nor does a mere power to sue authorize an agent to enter into an agreement with a pleader to pay him more than a reasonable remuneration (4).

"Except where otherwise expressly provided"—This may be either by the Code itself or by any other law for the time being in force. Thus, this rule is expressly made subject to O XXXIII r 3 in respect of applications to sue in forma pauperis (5). Again, clause 10 of the Charter provides that no persons but advocates, vakils, or attorneys of the High Court shall be allowed to plead or act (6) for any suitor in the High Court. So it has been held that the former section did not authorize a recognized agent to address a High Court as the suitor himself may do, because that clause forbids that for every person whatever except advocates and vakils (7) and that an authorized agent could not file a petition of appeal on the appellate side of the High Court (8). Under the Rules of the High Court an advocate may appear and plead only. He cannot therefore file an appeal in the registrar's office (9).

"Party in person"—Where a barrister or pleader appears before the Court as a litigant in person, he must not address the Court from the advocate's table or in robes, but from the same place and in the same way as any ordinary member of the public (10).

"By a pleader"—As to the meaning of this term, which includes advocates, vakils and attorneys see sect 2, ante. If a party has more to act as pleader, the agent has the entire control of the case, and it is not open to the principal to take any ground of appeal which the agent has not thought fit to raise, except when the agent has obtained the permission of the Court to the taking of that case (1). A pleader represents both counsel and attorney in that he can both plead and act, whereas the former pleads and the latter acts. As to the respective powers of these various classes of legal practitioners, as a subject which is beyond the scope of the work, see the references given below (2). The Calcutta High Court holds (3) that administrative acts required to be done in the offices of the Courts may be done on a pleader's responsibility by his longe clerks, and a District Judge has no authority to direct acts which may be so done by the pleader himself and by his clerks respectively, as High Courts alone possess such authority. The Punjab Chief Court, however, has departed from this decision, inasmuch as the Code does not provide for the delegation by a pleader of any portion of his duties to clerks, and on the ground that if a pleader is allowed to perform some of them by deputy there is no reason why he should not be allowed to do so as regards the whole (4).

"Duly appointed."—The Court may inquire as to the agent's authority, and if under rule it substitutes the name of the principal, it does not decide that the agent had authority (5). The words "duly appointed" do not simply mean a person duly appointed by the party in the suit, but a pleader duly appointed according to the law regarding pleaders in force in the particular Court (6). Again, the validity of the appointment must be considered with reference to the general law relating to the employment of legal practitioners. Thus a solicitor or attorney, having discharged his client, cannot change sides and act for the opposite party (7). As to persons authorized to act for Government or appointed to prosecute or defend Princes and Chiefs, see O XXVIII rr 2, 4 and sect 55. Vakalatnamahs, whether executed by principals or their attorneys or agents, and mookhtarnamas, under the authority of which vakalatnamahs may have been executed, do not require to be verified on oath, the responsibility in regard to their being properly and correctly executed resting entirely with the pleaders (8).

- (a) persons holding powers-of-attorney, authorizing them to make and do such appearances, applications and acts on behalf of such parties,
- (b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts

Power of attorney—As to stamp, see Act I of 1879, clause 50, and vakalatnamahs notes to last rule. A person holding a power may refuse to act on it (1). A warrant of attorney to an attorney of a defendant to receive a plaint, confess action, suffer or consent to a judgment or decree, empowers the attorney to accept service and appear for the defendant (2). The power must authorize the person "to make and do such appearances," etc. A mere authority to look after a case does not make the donee of the power a recognized agent so as to be able to apply to refer a case to arbitration (3). The authority given must be construed with reference to the special purpose for which the power was granted. General words imply authority to do all that the principal himself could do. They mean that the agent can do all that is necessary for the prosecution of the suit in the ordinary way. He cannot, for instance, enter into an agreement with a pleader to pay him more than a reasonable remuneration, nor could he bring the case to a close in a special manner by joining in a reference to arbitration or by offering to be bound by the oath of the opposite party given in a particular form (4). The question of special and general power has become immaterial under this rule (5).

Clause (a) "Persons holding powers of attorney"—The terms of this clause in the former Code were different. It was limited to persons holding general powers of attorney within certain local limits, that is, from parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction. The meaning to be attached to the word "reside" has been dealt with in the comments on sect 20. The expression "not resident" appears to have been introduced into the former section in the Code of 1877, to avoid an agent acting as a recognized agent during a casual temporary absence of the principal, as he was held to be able to do under the Code of 1859 (6). The section, however, it was held, was to be construed broadly so as not to prevent a creditor from enforcing his claims against his debtors, and a person who went for a few months from his usual place of residence to his native province to get his sister married was held during his absence to be "not resident" at that place (1) In the case cited, Melville, J, in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that "it may be supposed that the Legislature intended to give the benefit of this provision to all persons, and especially to traders, whose interests might be seriously compromised, if, during their absence from home and their place of business, they could leave no one behind who could represent them in Court, as well as conduct their business" If the principal was resident within the jurisdiction, then the agent was not a recognized agent within the meaning of clause (a) of the former section An application for execution was not made "in accordance with law" (2) when made by a general attorney of the decree-holder at a time when the latter himself was resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree (3) The Legislature has considered it unnecessary to preserve the limitations above noted, and has made the sub clause general

Certificated mukhtars—A mukhtar was at one time not considered a recognized agent (4) Clause (b) of the former section expressly recognized mukhtars This clause has been now omitted as unnecessary It is included in sub clause (a), which is general in its terms

Clause (b) "Persons carrying on trade"—As to "carrying on business," see notes to sect 20, ante The words "where no other agent is expressly authorized" were, under the Code of 1859, held to imply that the persons so carrying on business for or in the names of the parties were purely gomastahs or agents, and not partners (5) This decision, however, was subsequently dissented from (6) These latter cases dealt with the point whether service on one partner for his co partner was a good service, which was the case under the provisions of sect 74 of the Code of 1882, and is so under O XXX r 3 (6) of the present Code, but the question is still open as regards other acts, appearances and applications This section and O V r 13 are to be construed together, being intended to carry out the same scheme of relief (7) It would seem that in order to constitute a recognized agent, the business carried on by him should be continuous, and not occasional or desultory So a Bombay firm simply employed by the owners of a ship visiting Bombay to procure freight for her for a particular voyage, could not, it was held, be regarded under ordinary circumstances as carrying on business in the name of the owners of such ship (1) A gomastah of a firm ceases to be a recognized agent as soon as the firm ceases to exist (2) But it is different where a firm does exist, though not actually carrying on business The survivor of a firm which has ceased to carry on business, who is engaged in collecting the assets of such firm and otherwise winding up its affairs, is a recognized agent of the owner of such firm (3) A political agent is not, as such, a recognized agent (4)

Objection to agent acting—An agent cannot act under this rule so long as his principal is within the jurisdiction, but if he does, and there has thus been an irregularity, the Appellate Court ought not, on that account, to dismiss the suit, unless the irregularity has affected the merits of the case (5) Similarly, where a recognized agent obtained a decree in appeal without objection, it was held the debtor could not, in execution of it, object to the agent (6)

Punjab, Oudh, Central Provinces—The last clause of sect 37 of the former Code created an exception in the case of these Provinces This has now been omitted as no longer necessary The former Chief Commissionership of Oudh has been included in the Lieutenant Governorship of the United Provinces See as to former section Notification (7) (Punjab), October 3, 1877, No 3857 Punjab Gazette October 4 1877, Part I p 391, Notification (Oudh) July 18, 1878, No 522A N W P and Oudh Gazette, July 27, 1878 p 1058 In some of the Scheduled Districts there are special statutory provisions as to recognized agents as in Ajmere (see Ajmere Regulation I of 1877 sect 28)

3 (1) Processes served on the recognized agent of a party shall be as effectual as if the same had been served on the party in person, unless the Court otherwise directs

(2) Every such appointment, when accepted by a pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client

(3) No advocate of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or of any Chief Court, and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act

5. Any process served on the pleader of any party or left Service of process on at the office or ordinary residence of such pleader, and whether the same is for the personal appearance of the party or not, shall be presumed to be duly communicated and made known to the party whom the pleader represents, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, shall be as effectual for all purposes as if the same had been given to or served on the party in person

Service of process on pleader—Act VIII of 1859, sect 18 A service on the petitioner's attorney on the record is good even when decree nisi has been obtained in her favour in a divorce suit, and the petitioner has left India for England (3) Service of notice of appeal upon respondent's pleader is good service on him (4) So also is service of summons calling on a party to appear and give evidence (5) Personal appearance to give evidence is within the meaning of the words "personal appearance of the party" (6)

"Left at the office"—These words, it has been held in England, do not mean that a process will be considered served on a pleader, simply if it is pushed under the door of the office or dealt with in some other similar manner,

(2) Such appointment may be special or general and shall be made by an instrument in writing signed by the principal, and such instrument or, if the appointment is general, a certified copy thereof shall be filed in Court.

Agent to receive process.—Service on such agent will be sufficient in any case, as provided for in O V r 12 of the Code (2) This rule corresponds with sects. 50, 51, Act VIII of 1859, and sect 41 of the last Code ORDER IV.

Institution of Suits.

1. (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

(2) Every plaint shall comply with the rules contained in Orders VI and VII, so far as they are applicable.

2. The Court shall cause the particulars of every suit to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose and called the register of civil suits. Such entries shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which the plaints are admitted.

ORDER V.

Issue of Summons

1. (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons [5] may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified.

Summons. Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub rule (1) may appear—

(a) in person, or

(b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or

(c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court.

Summons—Instead of the words in the former section (sect 64), “When the plaint has been registered and the copies or concise statements required by sect 58 have been filed,” the present section runs “when a suit has been duly instituted” The first duty of the Court after the filing of the plaint is [provided that the defendant was alive at that date, for if not, the suit cannot proceed (1)] to summon the defendant, whether he be an adult or not (2) Natural justice requires that before an order is passed against a man he should be heard and a decree against one who has never been summoned is not binding upon him (3) A summons, therefore, is the first of the several writs which are incidental to the proceedings in a suit, as being the official notification to a defendant that he has been sued and should appear in Court and answer the claim (4) Generally, and in the absence of any special rule,

(4) See Hukm Chand's C. P. C., notes to this section, where the subject is minutely discussed the summons should be in the language of the Court, and addressed to the defendant himself and not to his agent. In the first place, the form of the summons should be such as that it can be served, then it should contain such full particulars of the description of the person summoned as will render it unlikely that the person served should mistake his identity. Secondly, the contents should be such as to acquaint the defendant as to the nature of the claim made against him. The title of the suit and the plaintiff's name should be stated, as also the amount and nature of the claim. The Form requires also a statement of the particulars of the claim. What these particulars are has not been judicially determined, but the question is not of much practical importance, as the summons is in every case to be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or of a concise statement of it. Forms of summons are given which are to be used with such variation as the circumstances of each case may require, and are a guide as to what a summons should contain. Thirdly, the day of appearance is to be specified in the summons and, according to Form 120 of the Code of 1882, it should have at its foot a memorandum stating hours of attendance at the office. Even where there is no express rule to that effect, the hour fixed for appearance or attendance should also be stated, though, considering the language of sect 96 of the last Code, in which the attendance was required on the day fixed in the summons the mention of the exact hour did not appear to be material (1). The words 'to appear' refer to appearance under O IX r 6, post (2). It is desirable that a summons should contain all that is required, at the same time, formalism is not favoured at present, and it will be sufficient if the summons substantially fulfils its purpose of giving the defendant notice (3). And a person by appearing and defending may waive all objections arising from want of service or defect in the service of summons (4). A fresh summons is sometimes required. There are no provisions as to the issue of successive summons though the practice as to their issue is recognized in O IX r 5, post. An application for fresh summons to appear should not, however be made until the first has been returned into Court (5) and should generally be supported by grounds showing that it was not by any default of the applicant that the summons was not served (6).

"Signed" and "sealed"—As to the meaning of the word "signed," see sect 2, ante (7). The Letters Patent for the High Courts and the Acts (8) relating to the other Civil Courts provide for the use of seals. The seal is but one element of the proof of authenticity and the better view is that its omission is a matter of form rather than of substance as its omission does not prevent

In the same way, the signature is the official authentication of the seal of which the person signing is the keeper, and the better opinion is that an unsigned writ is not void (1). The summons is to be signed either by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, such as the Clerk of the Court or Registrar, where there is one.

Proviso—If the defendant voluntarily appears, an appearance which is usually designated gratis, there is no necessity to issue a summons. In case of such appearance, when the defendant admits the claim the Judge, if satisfied of the defendant's identity, is bound to pass a judgment in favour of the plaintiff, and no question of fraudulent appearance can be gone into at the time, but if by the practice of the Court there are specific rules as to the order in which cases are to be called on, it does not appear that a Judge is bound to dispose of a case either when the plaint is filed or at any subsequent time before it is called on in regular course, and the voluntary appearance of the defendant and his willingness to admit the debt do not make any difference in this respect (2).

2. Every summons shall be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or, if so permitted, by a concise statement annexed to summons.

Concise statement—this should be of the nature of the claim made and of the relief or remedy sought in the suit.

3 (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance.

Personal attendance—Act VIII of 1859, sects 45 and 66 of last Code. An order passed for the personal attendance of the plaintiff after his appearance by a pleader on the day fixed for the settlement of issues and after their settlement, was held not to be an order passed under sect 12 Act VIII of 1859 or one to which the provisions of sect 117, Act VIII were applicable although it might have been passed under sects 127 or 166 of that Act. Further looking at the severe penalties attached by the law to the non attendance of parties ordered to attend, great caution and discretion should be used in ordering their personal attendance (3). As to the result of non appearance see O 1A r 12, post.

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate), less than two hundred miles distance from the court-house.

Appearance in person—This is sect 12 of the Code of 1859 and 67 of last Code with modifications italicized. In a rent suit to which the provisions of this section were applicable, and in which the plaintiff improperly summoned failed to attend and his suit was struck off, it was held he should apply for revival (1) fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons; and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day.

Sufficient time must be allowed—See sect 15 of Code of 1859. What may be sufficient time in a particular case can only be determined by considering the peculiar circumstances of the case, and this was so stated in the second clause of the former section, now omitted. The time must be sufficient not only to enable a party to appear, but to answer. The nature of the rights involved in the suit and the importance of the claim made in it as well as the actual distance of the defendant from the Court, and the facilities for obtaining legal advice, must also be taken into consideration in determining the sufficiency of the time allowed. In the case cited below (1) the claim involved a right to landed and other property of the aggregate value of upwards of Rs 6000, and was likely to raise questions of Mahomedan law, and only two days having been allowed from the issue of the summons, it was held that the time allowed was insufficient. In another case (2) the summons was served on the 14th April by a copy of it being fixed on the outer door of the defendant's place of business at Poona, while the defendant was at Sholapur and it was held that two days were not a sufficient time to enable him to attend for defence at Poona. It was held that the Subordinate Judge should have postponed the hearing. If the time is unreasonably short the Appellate Court will interfere (3). In the under mentioned case (4) the Court said "We take this opportunity to call the special attention of the Courts below to the urgent necessity there is that they should carefully themselves see that due and reasonable time is given in all cases for the service of notices in order that the Courts themselves may not be made the instruments of fraud and injustice by means of those processes the vigilant superintendence of the issue and service of which properly and justly is one of their most important duties."

than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct

Issue of summons for service—The awarding of process is a judicial act, but its service is ministerial. In this country a summons can be served only through the Court, and there is a complete code of rules relating to the service of summons in all cases. It has therefore been contended that parties cannot contract themselves out of the rules prescribed and the contrary rule has not been recognized by the Courts in any case (1). The object of the summons is to notify to the defendant that he is sued and the particulars in regard thereto. And in the under mentioned case it was held that a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction was not a nullity merely because of an irregularity in service, the parties being shown to be aware of the suit, which is the whole object of service (2). The Code proceeds upon the assumption that every Court has a jurisdiction within certain limits separate and distinct from every other Court, and its provisions are applicable only to Courts possessing such a jurisdiction (3). The Court therefore in this case held that it had not the power to execute its own decree or serve its own process out of the local limits of its jurisdiction. A special bailiff cannot be sent to execute civil process in foreign territory (4). The effect of the words, "if the defendant resides within the jurisdiction," coupled with the corresponding words in sects 85 and 89 of the former Code, was said to be that a summons could be served directly by an officer of the Court on a person residing outside the jurisdiction of the Court even if he were present, though it might be casually or incidentally, within the jurisdiction, but that it must in such cases be sent where he resides, even though it be known that at the time he is not there, but else where. Whether such a construction would be accepted was, however, doubtful, the question not having been raised or decided. The general rule elsewhere is different, and a summons may always be served on a defendant if he is within the jurisdiction, even if he has just come there at the time of service, provided that he has done so voluntarily, and not induced to do so by fraud or false pretences of the plaintiff, or only as a witness (5). In cases of any but the shortest stay, the point is likely to be solved by a liberal interpretation for the purposes of this section of the word "resides". It has been held that the residence under this rule is the place where a person eats, drinks and sleeps or where his family or servants eat, drink and sleep (6). In the Mofussil the Nazir is the proper officer of the Court to whom under this section the summons is delivered for service. It is for him to return the summons to the Court as unserved, and this he does by countersigning the bailiff's endorsement (7). No officer can serve a summons beyond the local limits of the exercise of his functions, and it is a general rule that a process can only be served by the officer to whom it is directed or by his duly appointed deputy (1) The section was first substituted by sect 10, Act VII of 1888

10. Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, and sealed with the seal of the Court

Mode of service

Mode of service—A copy summons must be either delivered or tendered, but the mere showing of the summons is not a tendering of it (2) The section corresponds with sect 48 of the Code of 1859 and 73 of the last Code As to service on corporations and companies, see O XXIX r 2 post, and as to Bengal rent suits, sect 118, clause (d), Act VIII of 1885 There are no special provisions as to the service of summons upon infants and therefore the same rules appear to apply as in the case of adults There should be personal service under O V r 12 or service in some of the ways provided in the following sections, or, failing service in these ways an order under r 20 The provisions appear to apply to suits against minors—at least, until the appointment of a guardian ad litem there being no provision that a summons for a minor may be served on his guardian ad litem (3) Wherever practicable service must be in person under this rule and r 12, post Substituted service can only be made where the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way (4)

11. Save as otherwise prescribed, where there are more defendants than one, service of the summons shall be made on each defendant.

Service on several defendants

Several defendants—This section corresponds with sect 48 of the Code of 1859 (5) The second paragraph of the corresponding sect 74 of the last Code, now omitted, was taken from English O 9 r 6, now cancelled, and for which O 48 is now substituted The framers of the rule relied upon its being always the interest of one person who is served to inform others who are jointly liable with him if he is liable (6) Quare whether that section applied when some of the defendants who were interested in the partnership were minors (7) As to suits against partners, see O XXX

12. Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable, or on his agent

Service, personal or on an agent—This section corresponds with sect 49 of the Code of 1859. The summons, at a proper and reasonable time and place, should be given directly to the defendant, and not to another person for delivery to him, after the serving officer has satisfied himself of the identity of the person named in the summons with the person on whom he serves it (1). A person who, being the ammookhtear of the male defendant looked after the affairs of the female defendant, was held not to be an agent empowered to accept service (2). There may be personal service on a minor (3). See notes to O 10 ante.

13. (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service

Service on agent by whom defendant carries on business

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer

Agent carrying on business—To satisfy the conditions of this rule as to service of summons on an agent there must be a person residing without the local jurisdiction but carrying on business or work within those limits by a manager or agent and sued on account of such work, that is business either actually itself carried on by the agent or manager or forming part of the business in the sense of a connected course of transactions to the management of which he has been duly appointed (1). This rule and O III r 3 clause (b) are to be construed together and are intended to carry out the same scheme of relief which rests upon the idea that where an agent has been put forward substantially to take the place of his principal within a particular jurisdiction he should take the place of such principal (at the option of any person who has dealt with him) in any legal proceedings that may arise out of the business or work in which the agent has been virtually a local principal. The manager or agent contemplated by the Code is one who has initiative and independent discretion albeit subject possibly to principles and general orders prescribed for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission, or a factor or common agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts, is not such an agent (1). Upon the principle embodied in the rule, it was held, prior to its enactment, that service of summons on an agent to whom a ship was consigned was good service on the owner in respect of matters connected with the ship (2). Service unduly made under this rule does not become effectual by reason of the fact of such service being subsequently noticed to the parties really interested as defendants (3). Scmble—Service duly effected under this rule is effectual without reference to the circumstance of its being or not being communicated to the real defendants (4). An opinion has been expressed that it would be anomalous to hold that, though the Code requires the appointment of a proper person as guardian to act for a minor generally in the conduct of the case, service of summons on a person other than such person may be sufficient service on the minor. The question was not decided, as the Court held that there was no service of summons under the sections corresponding with either rr 11 or 13 of O 1, even assuming that these sections applied to a case in which some of the defendants who are interested in the partnership or business are minors (5).

14. Where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immoveable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property.

Service on agent in charge in suits for immoveable property.

“Immoveable property”—Act VIII of 1859, sect 61. A suit for foreclosure or sale of immoveable property is within the meaning of these words (6).

15. Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him.

Where service may be on male member of defendant's family.

Explanation—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule.

the service on the adult members of the family, which will not be good unless it is proved that there was no agent empowered to accept the service (1)

"On any adult member," etc.—The person on whom service is made must be both adult and male. The object of this provision is that the copy shall be delivered to some person of the age of discretion who will understand for what purpose such copy is delivered, and will give it to the defendant on his coming. This is all the more necessary as there is no provision in the Code requiring the officer to inform the person with whom the copy is left of its contents so as to impress upon him the importance of delivering it to the defendant as soon as possible. An adult member will be deemed to reside with the defendant only if the two are bona fide living in commensality, or at least in the same house (2)

16 Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons

Acknowledgment—The serving officer under this section which corresponds to sect 54 of the Code of 1859, must either deliver or tender a copy of the summons and obtain an acknowledgment on the original. The mere showing of a summons is not sufficient (3). If the party refuses the acknowledgment then the serving officer should proceed under the next rule (4). A mere refusal to sign a receipt or a summons is not an offence under sect 173 or sect 180 of the Penal Code (5).

17 Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer after using

Procedure when defendant refuses to accept service, or cannot be found to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed.

Refusal to accept service.—This section, which corresponds with sect 55 of the Code of 1859, and sect 80 of the last Code, has been amended in several particulars. If the defendant himself or other person (that is, agent or manager, or adult male member of his family) be found, but the defendant or such person refuses to sign, then the serving officer may at once affix the summons on the dwelling-house.

It was not clear from the language of the section as it stood what results should follow when the defendant retained the copy of summons delivered but refused to sign the acknowledgment. Similarly, if the defendant refused to sign the acknowledgment, but did not “ordinarily” reside in any house, as in the case of roving traders and strolling players, no provision appeared to exist. In such a case it was considered that the refusal should operate as service and the following proviso was inserted in the draft—“Provided that, where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, and (a) retains the copy of the summons delivered to him, or (b) no house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain can be discovered, the Court may direct that the summons shall be deemed to have been duly served.” The proposal has, however, not been adopted.

“Cannot find.”—But if the defendant cannot be found, then the return must show that there is no agent or other person on whom the service could be made before a service on the dwelling house is good. The words “cannot find” constitute a condition of the mode of service provided (1). Thus where the summons was served on the defendant’s paternal uncle, who was a member of the same joint family and lived in the same house, it was held that the service was insufficient since there was no proof that defendant could not be found (2). It must be shown that proper efforts to find the defendant were made, as for instance that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times at which it was reasonable to expect the defendant would be found (3). It is true that you may go to a man’s house and not find him, but that is not attempting to find him, you should go to his house, make inquiries and if necessary, follow him. You should make inquiries to find out when he is likely to be at home and go to the house at a time when he can be found (4). The summons can be affixed to the dwelling house only if the defendant could not be found after diligent search and reasonable efforts made to find him (5). Where there was no attempt to find the defendants, and there being only one summons for a number of defendants, it was affixed to the house of one only, it was held not duly served, even on that defendant (1) The rule has been amended to embody these rulings to the effect that the serving officer must use diligence. If, though the defendant is absent, the serving officer is told where he is, service on the house is bad, (2) the Court observing, in the last cited case, that mere temporary absence of the person to be served does not justify the process server affixing the summons to the door But where the serving officer has information that there is no prospect of his being able to serve the defendant personally within a reasonable time, he is not bound to wait, and will be justified in affixing the summons on the door (3) A defendant will also be held not to be found when it is known that he is in the house, but the serving officer cannot get access to him (4) Whether or not the conditions required by the rule are established to the satisfaction of the Court, must, of course, in each case depend on its own particular circumstances (5) What has to be regarded in all such cases is this, that the object of the service of a summons, in whatever way it may be effected, is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the day fixed for the hearing, and when, from the return of the serving officer, it appears that there is no likelihood that the summons will come to the defendant's knowledge in due time, or a probability that it will not so come to his knowledge, it cannot be said that there has been due service (6)

"Outer door"—The words "or some other conspicuous part" have been added, as in this country many houses have nothing which, without a stretch of language, can be described as "outer doors"

"Ordinarily resides"—As to the meaning of the term "resides," see sect 20, ante The intention of the provision is that the defendant should be residing in the house in such a manner as to make it probable that a knowledge of the service of summons will reach him Thus, the service will not be good if the defendant have left the house and the village two years before (7) The rule speaks of the house where the defendant resides Therefore a place of business would not ordinarily come within the section, (8) though in some cases, where the defendant both resides and carries on business at the same place, it would be so There must be evidence that the house on which the summons was affixed was that in which the defendant ordinarily resided (9) It has been held that in this rule and rule 9 of this Order a person must be taken to reside where he or his family or servants eat, drink and sleep (10)

"Or carries on business," etc.—These words have been added to bring this rule into closer conformity with sect 20, the principle of which it was considered was equally applicable to the service of process (1)

Return—The return should specify that the copy was affixed to "the outer door (or, now, conspicuous part) of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides;" and merely to report that it has been affixed to the defendant's house is not sufficient, as the defendant may have more than one house (2) In a subsequent case (3) the service was held good, as the serving peon deposed that the defendant was living in the house But where the return does not say that the copy has been affixed, nor does that appear from the inquiry made under r 19, there is no service (4) So also the return must state that the summons was affixed to the house in which the defendant ordinarily resided at the time of the service, (5) and where the reference to the time had been omitted, the return was considered insufficient (6) The Calcutta High Court rules provide that the return must also show that the summons was tendered to the defendant and returned, and that the defendant refused to receive the same, whereupon the serving officer informed him what the document was, and acquainted him with the nature and contents thereof (7)

Identification—As the practice of the Courts with regard to identifying persons or houses in connection with the service of process did not appear to be uniform, it was considered expedient to provide in the return endorsed on the summons for, at least, one identifier whom the Court or the parties could call as a witness in case of a dispute with respect to the sufficiency of service The words "if any" were, however, inserted because it was considered that the Code should not render absolutely illegal the service of process without an identifier, where local experience justified the High Court in issuing no directions for such a safeguard

Endorsement of time and manner of service summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons.

Return not evidence of service—This section corresponds to sect 56 of the Code of 1859 The return is not legal evidence of the service (8)

Whenever it is necessary for the Court to satisfy itself that a summons or other process has been duly served, the presiding officer should for that purpose take the evidence of the serving officer. Thus, in Raj Kishore v Bydonath Shaha, (1) Bayley, J, observed that "there is simply a return by the Nazir to the effect that the peon swears that such a notice had been served on the defendants; but a bare return like this, without the deposition on oath of the serving peon taken before a competent authority, which the Nazir is not, is wholly insufficient in law to prove the service." The general rules of the Calcutta High Court (2) lay down that the requisite proof may be either by the affidavit or verified statement of the person by whom the service was effected, and of any person who may have accompanied the serving officer for the purpose of identifying the party to whom the process was addressed, or otherwise directing or assisting the serving officer, or, if deemed necessary, by the examination in Court as witnesses of such persons as the Court may think fit to examine. As to the added words, see notes to last rule.

19. Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court, touching his proceedings, and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit, and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit.

"Shall either declare"—These words show that the affixing, taken by itself, is certainly not effectual complete service. The Court has to see that the conditions precedent to such service have been fulfilled. Service is insufficient until confirmed under this rule. If the Court decides against the service, then either a new summons must be issued or substituted service directed (3).

20. (1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to live.

Substituted service—This form of service can only be had in cases in which (if there were no difficulties in the way) personal service could be had. This is based on the principle that one cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly. So the defendant must be a person or a corporation or a firm (1) So, as the Courts have no jurisdiction over a foreign sovereign unless he submits, he cannot be served by substitution (2) If at the time of the issue of summons there could have been at law personal service of it upon the defendant sought to be served, then substituted service may be allowed (3) But if personal service could not at law have been made, then, save as hereinafter mentioned substituted service cannot be ordered (4) Assuming that personal service at law could have been made, the grounds of fact on which service may be ordered are (a) that the defendant is keeping out of the way, or (b) that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way. In cases of substituted service the Courts should take care to be satisfied that the conditions on which alone it is good exist (5) It has been already stated that, as a general rule, substituted service cannot be ordered where personal service is not legally possible, but under ground (a) it can, it has been held to be directed where the defendant was out of the jurisdiction at the time of the issue of the writ if the evidence satisfies the Court that he went out of the jurisdiction to evade service (6) As regards ground (b) the section gives full discretion to the Court. So service has been allowed on proof that the defendant could not be found that he had not been heard of for over two years and that his uncle and father did not know where he was (7)

Whenever it is necessary for the Court to satisfy itself that a summons or other process has been duly served, the presiding officer should for that purpose take the evidence of the serving officer. 2.] 23. The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto

Court to which process must be sent—See sect 59 of Code of 1859 R 21 shortens the earlier portion of sect 85 of the last Code, the second clause of which is r 23 R 22 is sect 86 The summons, it was ruled, should ordinarily be sent, not to the Judge of the district where it has to be served, but to the Court having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant resides, by which it can be conveniently served—that is, to the Munsif within whose jurisdiction the defendant resides (1) But the Calcutta High Court summons used to be sent to the District Court for service through the local Court by direction of the District Judge, and the same rule applies in the Panjab Chief Court (2) For forms of process, see Schedule I, Appendix B R 21 says to any Court “not being a High Court Should, however, the summons be sent in contravention of this rule, the High Court might either return it or order the proper local Court to effect service This will, however, not be done for a foreign Court When suits are instituted in England against persons resident in India the assistance of the Courts here is not invoked The English Court, through the plaintiff's solicitor, sends the writ to a solicitor in India with instructions to serve and to return writ with an affidavit of service So the Calcutta High Court refused to serve a summons sent to it by a Court in the Nizam of Hyderabad's territories, advising that it should be sent to a pleader practising in the district where the defendant resided (3) The summons is to be returned together with the record which will include the Nazir's return, affidavits statements, and depositions of the serving officer and of the witnesses relative to the facts of service As to the necessity of a declaration of sufficiency of service, vide ante

Presumption as to validity of service—According to the opinion of Scott, J, if the return prima facie shows that service has been duly effected, the presumption in favour of the correctness of the proceedings of the Courts will prevail, and the Court sending the summons is not bound in every case to satisfy itself that the law as to service has been strictly followed The Court serving the summons alone can judge how in any particular case service should be effected, and whether it has been properly effected, and it does not appear to have been intended by the Legislature that the transmitting Court should act as a revising Court as regards the service In fact, it would only lead to great inconvenience and delay, without effecting any real good for that Court to discuss the discretion of the Court serving the summons as to what facts are sufficient to justify the waiver of personal service on the defendant, and the substitution of an affixing of the summons on his dwelling house, or the adoption of other mode of substituted service. For instance, where a Court has returned a summons as duly served, and the return states that the summons has been posted on the defendant's dwelling house, because the defendant has gone elsewhere, it ought to be presumed that this service was justified by the facts, and that the Court duly acted under the provisions of sects 80 and 82 read together (now rr 17, 19). But, at the same time, the presumption in favour of the due execution of acts of a judicial nature only obtains donec probetur in contrarium, and there may now and then occur cases where there is something in the return distinctly negating that presumption, and showing illegality in the mode of service (1). Probably, however the true rule is that the transmitting Court may accept but is not bound by the return, the section not requiring any declaration touching the sufficiency of the service (2). In this view it devolves upon the transmitting Court to determine upon the sufficiency of the service before trying the suit, raising or not raising the presumption according to the circumstances. The practice of the Calcutta High Court has always been to determine for itself whether the service is sufficient having regard to the numerous irregularities which exist in "Mofussil service". But the Allahabad High Court has held that usually the decision whether such summons has been properly served or not rests with the serving Court not with the issuing Court (3).

24 Where the defendant is confined in a prison, the summons shall be delivered or sent by post or otherwise to the officer in charge of the prison for service on the defendant

Defendant in jail—A suitor ought obviously not to be deprived of his remedy by the fact that the defendant is in jail (4). The former section (as to which, see sect 15 Act XV of 1869) was originally enacted to meet the difficulty felt in the last mentioned case. Wilson J. is reported to have held that the endorsement under sect 87 of the last Code ranked higher than a nazir's return and was evidence of the service of summons (5). The amended section contains no provision as regards the return of service, which is dealt with by r 29 under which the return is evidence of due service.

Where the defendant resides out of British India and has no agent in British India empowered to accept service, the summons shall be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing and sent to him by post, if there is postal communication between such place and the place where the Court is situate

"Resides out of British India"—In such cases the mode of service is necessarily of a private character, as it is a general rule that a Court has no authority to send its process for execution out of the territorial limits of the State. So a writ cannot be sent to foreign territory to himself serve the summons on the defendant there (1). This rule, which corresponds with sect 60 of the Code of 1859, must be read with the next

"Sent", "Forwarded"—The section in the last Code required that the summons should be "forwarded" to the defendant, which was held to mean that the summons must reach him (2). This, therefore, did not mean merely put into the post (3) and there had to be proof of facts from which the Court might reasonably conclude that the summons had reached the defendant (4). In some cases it would amount to a denial of justice to require direct proof of receipt or refusal. When proof of posting in due course has been given a presumption may be used under sects 16 and 114 of the Evidence Act. This would appear to be the case now. The word "sent" has been substituted. But there ought to be evidence that he is, or has been recently residing at the place to which the summons has been sent, or that the acknowledgment is in the writing of the defendant (5). In practice the summons is sent under registered cover, both to ensure service as well as to procure good evidence of it (6). If a registered cover is refused, the person so refusing cannot take advantage of his refusal and plead ignorance of its contents (7).

the summons may be sent to such Political Agent or Court, by post or otherwise, for the purpose of being served upon the defendant; and, if the Political Agent or Court returns the summons with an endorsement signed by such Political Agent or by the Judge or other officer of the Court that the summons has been served on the defendant in manner hereinbefore directed such endorsement shall be deemed to be evidence of service.

Summons outside India.—This section replaces sect 90 of the last Code which was itself substituted for the original by the Amendment Act (VII of 1888), sect 12, and is intended chiefly for Indian Native States. This section does not apply to British or other territories, not under or connected with the Indian Government—such as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, and even Great Britain, and, à fortiori, not to countries like China and Persia, where there is a British Envoy or Ambassador or Consul, as distinguished from a Political Agent, nor to Afghanistan. The general direction contained in r 25 would apply in all such cases. Summonses issued for service on persons residing in British possessions out of British India, and in other countries to which this rule does not apply, should be addressed to the defendant at the place where he is residing, and sent by post in accordance with that section (1). The distinction between the cases in which this rule applies and in which it does not apply is to be preserved, as the agency of the post office under r 25 should not be used for the service of a summons except when specially prescribed, for when any other mode for serving a notice is prescribed, a service through the post has not been deemed sufficient, even though actual delivery of the notice by the post person is proved (2).

Endorsement is evidence—Unlike the ordinary return, the endorsement under the signature of Political Agent, Judge, or other officer is evidence of the service of the summons, but it is no longer, as under the section prior to its amendment in 1888 conclusive evidence, and the defendant may accordingly prove that notwithstanding the endorsement as to the service, the summons was not served

"Sent."—In the under mentioned case (1) it was held that the Subordinate Judge should have sent the summons himself, instead of through the Court of the District Judge

27. Where the defendant is a public officer (not belonging to His Majesty's military or naval forces or His Majesty's Indian Marine Service), or is the servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court may, if it appears to it that the summons may be most conveniently so served, send it for service on the defendant to the head of the office in which he is employed, together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Service on public officers—The exigencies of public service demand that both civil and military officers should not be summoned without proper notice to their superiors. This concession, however, coupled with the privileges given in connection with attachment, casts upon the Government a corresponding duty to provide commensurate facilities for service. This section, which replaces sect 422, extends its provisions, which had hitherto applied to public officers only, to railway servants or servants of local authorities. Military officers are dealt with in the next section. If the summons is not sent to the head of the office it must be served in the usual way. The Government pleader is not the agent of every public officer as he is of Government, to accept service. As to the duty of the Head of the office, service, and return, see r 29, post

28. Where the defendant is a soldier, the Court shall send the summons for service to his commanding officer together with a copy to be retained by the defendant.

Soldiers—The words "an officer or" formerly occurring in sect 163 of the last Code before the words "a soldier" were repealed by the Cantonments Act (XIII of 1889). Military officers therefore since that Act ceased to be governed by sect 468, the provisions of which are embodied in this section so far as they relate to soldiers. Owing to the varied conditions of service of military Service—With a general application so much of sect 468 of the last Code has been retained as compels the officer addressed by the Court to execute the process (1) Special provision has been made on the lines of sect 72 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code 1898 for treating a return in such a case as evidence though unsupported by affidavit (2) It has also been considered desirable to declare such a return to be evidence of non service also so as to avoid the necessity for summoning public officers where as not infrequently occurs, an ex parte decree has been passed by inadvertence and is assailed by an application under O 1X r 13

Notice

12. Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

Implied contract, or relation

13. Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side unless the same has first been specifically denied, (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Presumptions of law

Pleadings.—Rules 1-13, 16-18 of this Order are new, and rules 2, 13 and 16 are taken from the English O 19, rr 1, 7, 11, 16, 20, 25, 37, respectively. Rules 14 and 15 represent sects 51 and 52 of the last Code. Rule 17 is taken from O 28, r 1 of the English rules, and would appear to hold the place of sect 53 of the last Code after clause (a) of that section, which is now embodied in O VII r 11 of this Code. Rule 18 is taken from O 28, r 7 of the English rules and would appear to replace sect 51 (d) of the last Code. Other rules from the English O 19 are to be found in O VIII, post. As regards this Order the Special Committee stated, "In our opinion it is most necessary that litigants in this country should come to trial with all issues clearly defined, and that cases should not be expanded or grounds shifted without reference to the true facts. For this purpose we think that the present system of pleadings in the Mofussil which is notoriously lax should be improved, and we have incorporated in the rules an order on pleadings which it is hoped will lead to sounder and surer methods of arriving at the real points in dispute. The forms have been revised, and we hope that they will be brought into more general use in the Mofussil. The Committee have added a few rules relating to pleadings based upon the system of pleading introduced by the Judicature Acts in England, which is generally admitted to be the best form of pleading in civil suits. In this country, outside the Presidency towns, the pleadings are seldom artistically drawn. They are neither concise nor precise, but contain vague and general statements from which it is difficult to ascertain definitely the real question in controversy between the parties. The sole object of pleadings is thus frequently defeated, the issue is enlarged, the trial is delayed and much unnecessary expense incurred by the parties, who are also liable to be taken by surprise. They have further provided that the forms in the Schedule shall, when applicable, be used for all pleadings, and when they are not applicable, forms of the like character shall be used. The rules prescribed will not prevent the pleader from exercising his discretion, for the amount of detail must necessarily vary with the nature of each suit. It is, however, made clear that these must be particularly sufficient to apprise the Court and the other party of the exact nature of the questions to be tried. The Committee have also given a party who considers that his opponent's pleading does not give him the information to which he is entitled the right to apply for further particulars so as to enable him to know what case he has to meet at the trial. They have, however, endeavoured to modify the rigour of the rules by providing in accordance with sect 55 of the Indian Evidence Act that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies upon it."

The subject of pleading will be found further discussed in the notes to O VII rr 1-6, but some observations summarized from the English "Annual Practice" may be here made Rules 2 and 3—The point of rules 2 and 3 is that pleadings are now mere statements of facts not law, of material facts only, and of facts which are not evidence stated in a summary way after, as nearly as possible, the forms of pleading given in the Schedules. The written statement must be as brief as possible, but should contain a full and true narrative (1) framed with care, so as to dispense with undue statements at the settlement of issues, (2) and should be confined to relevant facts, (3) anything in the nature of argument (4) or evidence or conclusions of law to be drawn from the facts pleaded being inadmissible (5). The whole object of pleading is that the parties and the Court should know what is the real point to be discussed and decided, (6) and it should be framed with reference to this object.

Rules 4 and 5—Rules 4 and 5 deal with particularity. In every pleading a certain amount of detail is necessary to ensure clearness and to prevent the other party from being taken by surprise. Pleadings are of no use unless they define clearly the questions at issue between the parties, and for this purpose each party must state his case with precision, otherwise the issue would be "enlarged," as it is called, and neither party would know for certain what was the real point to be discussed and assured at the trial, and therefore would not be able to properly prepare his evidence for it. No precise rule can, however, be laid down as to the degree of particularity which is required. As rule 4 directs the statement of particulars, so rule 5 provides a remedy in case the imperative language of the former rule is overlooked or disobeyed. If the allegations contained in any pleading are too vague, the proper course is to apply by notice and ask for fuller particulars. Each party is entitled to obtain a fair outline of his opponent's case, but cannot compel him to disclose the evidence by which he will attempt to establish that case. Nor will the Court sanction any attempt to deliver interrogatories under the guise of seeking particulars. The object of particulars is to enable the party asking for them to know what case he has to meet at the trial, and so to save unnecessary expense and avoid allowing parties being taken by surprise. On such an application the notice or summons should ask that if the particulars ordered be not delivered within the time prescribed, the allegations complained of be struck out, or that the party in fault be precluded from giving any evidence in support of it at the trial. The words "upon such terms" in the English rule corresponding to rule 5 have been held to authorize an order that if proper particulars be not delivered within a certain time the action shall stand dismissed or be stayed (1) Leave may be given to amend or to add to particulars given

Rule 6—Cases constantly occur in which, although everything has happened which would at common law prima facie entitle a man to a certain sum of money, or vest in him a certain right of action, there is yet something more which must be done, or something more which must happen, in the particular case, before he is entitled to sue, either by reason of the provisions of some Statute, or because the parties have expressly so agreed, this something more is called a condition precedent. It is not of the essence of such a cause of action, but it has been made essential. It is an additional formality superimposed on Common Law. Hence in England the plaintiff could draft a perfectly good statement of claim without making any reference to the condition precedent. But this till 1875, he was not allowed to do. In former days the plaintiff was required to set out in his declaration every condition precedent and to aver the due performance of it with all particularity. Then came the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 sect. 57 of which provided "It shall be lawful for the plaintiff or defendant in any action to aver performance of conditions precedent generally, and the opposite party shall not deny such averment generally, but shall specify in his pleading the condition or conditions precedent the performance of which he intends to contest." And now (O 19, r 14 of the English rules) the plaintiff need say nothing about any condition precedent which has been performed. This provision is reproduced in rule 6 of this Order. A general averment of the due performance of all conditions precedent is implied in every pleading, so it need not be alleged. It is for the defendant if he contends that there was a condition precedent and that it has not been duly performed to state specifically what that condition was, and to plead its non performance otherwise its due performance will be presumed. And it is not sufficient for him to allege generally that "an express condition" had been agreed to—he must state its terms and between whom it was made, and whether verbally or in writing. Nevertheless when a condition precedent is properly pleaded, the burden of proving its due performance or the waiver of its due performance still rests on the plaintiff.

But it is to be noted that an allegation which is of the essence of the cause of action is not a condition precedent within the meaning of this rule and must still be pleaded in the plaint. Thus the Law Merchant requires that notice of dishonour be given to every person who is sought to be made liable on a negotiable instrument except the acceptor. Unless such notice was duly given or was waived or excused no action lies against the drawer or any indorsee. Hence the plaint must contain either an allegation that notice of dishonour was given to the defendant or a statement of the facts relied on as excusing the giving of such notice.

Rule 7—The meaning of rule 7 is that a party's second pleading must not contradict his first. Thus to illustrate from English practice, if a plaintiff claims rent on his writ he cannot claim the same sum in his reply as damages for unlawfully "holding over." Or if the statement of claims alleges merely a negligent breach of trust, the reply must not assert that such breach of trust was fraudulent. Such inconsistent claims should be pleaded, if at all, alternatively in the statement of claim.

Rule 8—Rule 8 is really a special application of the general principle laid down in rule 2 of O VIII, post. If the defendant wishes to contend that any contract on which the plaintiff relies is invalid he must do something more than merely deny the agreement; he must plead specially by way of confession and avoidance the matters of fact which rendered it invalid. A traverse merely denies that the contract was in fact made; it leaves unquestioned its sufficiency in law.

Rule 9—It may be noted, with reference to rule 9, that in an action of libel the precise words of the document are material. So in some cases the precise words of a will may be material.

Rules 10-12—Rule 10 and the two following rules are special applications of the general principle laid down in rule 2 of this Order (which is indeed the fundamental rule of the present English system of pleading), that every pleading shall contain and contain only a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved.

1 14. Every pleading shall be signed by the party and his pleader (if any). Provided that where a party's pleading is, by reason of absence or for other good cause, unable to sign the pleading, it may be signed by any person duly authorized by him to sign the same or to sue or defend on his behalf.

52] 15. (1) Save as otherwise provided by any law for the time being in force, every pleading shall be verified at the foot by the party or by one of the parties pleading or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.

(2) The person verifying shall specify, by reference to the numbered paragraphs of the pleading, what he verifies of his own knowledge and what he verifies upon information received and believed to be true.

(3) The verification shall be signed by the person making it and shall state the date on which and the place at which it was signed.

Subscription—These rules deal with all pleadings. Sects 51 and 52 of the last Code dealt with plaints and sect 115 with written statements. The object of the signature to the plaint is to prevent as far as possible disputes as to whether the suit was instituted with the plaintiff's knowledge and authority (1) The rule requires that the plaint (as well as written statement) should be subscribed by the party and his pleader, if any But this requirement as to subscription is governed by O III r 1. The act of signature cannot be done by the pleader instead of the plaintiff, because the Code requires both signatures, but it permits acts to be done by a recognized agent Reading, therefore, this section with O III r 1, a personal subscription is not imperative in all cases, and a plaint which may be presented by an authorized agent may in like manner be subscribed by him, and such a subscription is a compliance with the rule (2) Where the plaintiffs described themselves as lately carrying on business under the name of "C & Co.," it was held that there was no irregularity in its being signed "C & Co." (3) It is not possible to set down categorically what is good cause (1) within the meaning of the proviso A person holding a general power of attorney containing inter alia powers to sue and defend suits but not containing a special power to sign a plaint, was held to be a person duly authorized within the meaning of the proviso of this section in the last Code, in which the words were "duly authorized by him in this behalf, that is, to sign Now the signature may be that of any one authorized either to sign or to sue or defend (5) The signature of a plaint by an unauthorized agent, who subsequently becomes empowered to sign, is sufficient (6) Under the last Code if a plaint was not signed and verified as required, it might have been returned for amendment (7) and rejected if not amended (8) Presumably there is nothing to prevent this being done now

The mere fact that the plaint in a suit has not been signed by the plaintiff named therein, or by any person duly authorized by him as required by this rule, will not necessarily make the plaint absolutely void A defect in the signature of the plaint, or the absence of signature where it appears that the suit was in fact filed with the knowledge and by the authority of the plaintiff named therein, may be waived by the defendant, or, if necessary, cured by amendment at any stage of the suit, and having regard to sect 99, ante, is not a ground for interference in appeal (9)

Verification.—The object of the verification of the plaint is to fix upon the plaintiff the responsibility for the statements which it contains, and to affirm a guarantee of his good faith (10) In other words, if he will not swear that he believes his cause to be just, the law does not care to bother itself with it But when the adversary comes in, such verification is of no moment It is not even evidence The justice of the cause must then be proved by competent evidence Like any other formal matter, its absence is waived by a failure to object And if its entire absence does not affect the jurisdiction, of course mere defects in it cannot (1) It would be difficult to imagine any case in which a defective verification could affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court (2) Under the last Code where a plaint was not verified or improperly verified, it was returned for amendment, and, if not amended, rejected The suit should not, it was held, be dismissed (3) (vide ante) There is no rule that a person named as a co plaintiff is not to be treated as a plaintiff unless he signs and verifies the plaint (4) As the object of verification is to secure good faith, and its effect to make the statements in the plaint the plaintiff's own, the Courts are bound to see that plaints are properly verified (5) The verification may be by some other person if the latter is acquainted with the facts The permission to a person to verify on behalf of the plaintiff should be given in each case individually, and not generally (6) When verification by an agent is once expressly allowed, the Court is not competent afterwards to raise an objection to it (7) But the plaintiff may himself be required to subscribe and verify, (8) as where a plaintiff charges fraud on facts known to him (9) It was held that the verification should be by all the plaintiffs, but that the Court might allow one of them to verify, a co plaintiff coming within the meaning of the words "some other person," etc (10) The amended section now provides for verification by one of the plaintiffs or defendants This rule does not apply to the case of corporations, which is provided for by O XXIX r 1, post (11) As to the Administrator General, see below (12) In case of a person holding a general power of attorney, or of any other recognised agent, the Court will probably not insist on any extreme stringency of proof as to his acquaintance with the facts of the case (13) A fortiori will this be so in the case of a co partner or other co plaintiff It has been said that notice of the application for permission to verify should be given to the opposite side, but it is not necessary (1) and is certainly not required (2) The substantial portion of the plaint consisting of the statement of the claim of the plaintiffs and the prayer, was written upon two sheets of plain paper and verified by the plaintiffs Subsequently to the affixing of the plaintiffs' signatures a front sheet, consisting of a piece of stamped paper with the name of the Court and the names and addresses of the parties was added, and the plaint thus composed filed in Court Held, that the verification was defective, but that the suit ought not to have been dismissed The plaintiffs ought to have been allowed an opportunity of amending the plaint by making a proper verification (3) The rule does not require the verification of a plaint to be made in the presence of an officer of the Court, but having regard to the necessity of satisfying the Court that the person other than the plaintiff who verifies the plaint is acquainted with the facts of the case, it has in one case been said to be desirable that a verification by such a person should be made in the presence of the Court unless the Court be satisfied that there is sufficient ground for dispensing with his attendance (4) Persons exempted from attendance are not exempted from signature or verification except the Court allows it for good cause and then the party verifying should be one proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case (5) When an application is made for verification by an attorney it has been said to be desirable though not necessary that notice should be given to the other side (6) If a written statement is admitted on the record without verification the allegations contained in it should be noticed and suits framed accordingly (7)

Objections to verification—Objections to verification should be taken before the settlement of issues after that the case should be disposed of on the merits and not dismissed for insufficient verification (8)

Mode of verification—It was held under the last Code that in all cases whether the plaint is verified by the plaintiff or by some other person the person verifying should state shortly what paragraphs he verifies of his own knowledge, and what paragraphs he believes to be true from the information of others (9) In the first Allahabad case cited a verification in the words "to the limit (or extent) of my knowledge the purport of this is true" was held to be bad, and the Court observed that the verification must be if all the facts are to the knowledge of the deponent a distinct verification that they are to his knowledge true and that if he has knowledge as to some and only information and belief as to others the verification should show as to which he speaks from his knowledge and as to which he speaks from his information and belief" In the last Allahabad case cited, the verification was in the following form "The contents of the petition of plaint are true to the best of my knowledge and belief," and a Full Bench of the Court held that although the verification was not in strict compliance with the Code, it substantially complied with it. A failure to distinguish in the pleading between the facts stated on personal knowledge and those stated on information and belief must of necessity defeat to a great extent the object to be attained by verification, unless the person verifying is held to have made every allegation upon personal knowledge. The rule has now been amended in accordance with these rulings and governs all pleadings. A verification to the effect that the contents of the plaint are substantially true is not sufficient (1) as it contains a qualification which is a material departure from the requirements of the Code (2). If an attorney, having obtained leave of the Court for that purpose, means to verify the plaint himself, he should sign the verification on his own account, and not as the plaintiff's attorney, but if he means to sign the verification merely as the plaintiff's attorney, the plaintiff himself ought to see the plaint and verification and authorize the attorney to sign the verification for him (3). The General Rules of the North-Western Provinces (4) and Calcutta High Courts (5) provide that all verifications "shall correctly specify the date and place at which they are signed." This rule has now been embodied in the third clause.

Course to be taken when verification defective—If the verification of a plaint is discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit is before the Court of first instance the plaint may be amended by the Court (6). If such defect be not discovered until the suit comes on appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court may, if it thinks fit, return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect is such that it is covered by the provisions of sect 99 ante, there is no necessity for the Appellate Court to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint. In any event a defect in the verification of a plaint will not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit (7) or in its being decreed (8).

16 The Court may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit language is wide, but its operation has in England been to some extent limited by the decisions given on it. Although the rule expressly states that the order may be made "at any stage of the proceedings," still the application should always be made promptly, and as a rule before the close of the pleadings, or the Court may, in its discretion, decline to exercise its jurisdiction (1). "The rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their cases, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law, and, if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass, and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right" (2). A reasonable latitude must be given (3). Not every pleading which offends against the rules will be struck out. The applicant must show that he is in some way prejudiced by the irregularity. Still, "the defendant may claim ex debito justitiæ to have the plaintiff's case presented in an intelligible form, so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it" (4).

"Unnecessary."—The word "unnecessary" was introduced into the English Rule in 1883. But the mere fact that an opponent's pleading contains some unnecessary matter is not sufficient ground for an application under this rule. A statement will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, so long as it is otherwise harmless (5). It is no part of the defendant's duty to reform the plaintiff's pleading or to dictate to him how he shall plead, or vice versa. But if wholly immaterial matter be set out in such a way that the applicant must plead to it, and so raise irrelevant issues which may involve expense, trouble and delay, then the irrelevant matter will be struck out, as it will prejudice the fair trial of the action.

"Scandalous"—As regards "scandalous" matter, the Court has a general jurisdiction to expunge it in any record or proceeding (6) and apparently, according to the English practice, any person may make the application (7). Allegations of dishonesty and outrageous conduct, etc., are not however, scandalous if relevant to the issue (8). "Nothing can be scandalous which is relevant" (1) "The mere fact that these paragraphs state a scandalous fact does not make them scandalous" (2) But if degrading charges be made which are irrelevant, or if, though the charge be relevant, unnecessary details are given, the pleading becomes scandalous (3) The sole question is whether the matter alleged to be scandalous would be admissible in evidence to show the truth of any allegation in the pleading which is material with reference to the relief prayed (4)

"Tend to prejudice, etc."—The Court is "disposed to give a liberal interpretation" to the words "Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit" (5) At the same time parties must not be too ready to find themselves embarrassed If the defendant does not make it clear how much of the plaint he admits and how much he denies, his pleading is embarrassing (6) If he does not make it clear whether he is traversing the allegations contained in the plaint, or objecting to them on a point of law his defence will be struck out as embarrassing (7) In neither case could the plaintiff safely join issue So a plea of justification is embarrassing if it leaves the plaintiff in doubt what the defendant has justified and what he has not (8) But mere prolixity is not embarrassing (9) Nor will a statement be struck out as embarrassing merely because the other party declares that it is untrue (10) The mere fact that a Statement of Claim embraces several causes of action is not, according to English practice, embarrassing, if they are distinctly pleaded in the alternative A claim for alternative relief is not embarrassing (11) So any number of inconsistent defences may now, in England, be pleaded to the same cause of action, and their inconsistency is not "embarrassing" to the pleader (12)

But if a claim against executors personally in their private capacity be improperly joined with a claim against the estate of their testator, it will be struck out (13) So where several plaintiffs or several defendants are improperly joined in one action, though the causes of action be separate the pleading will be struck out (14) Where a pleading is defective only in the sense that it does

Failure to amend after order does not amend accordingly within the time limited for that purpose by the order, or if no time is thereby limited then within fourteen days from the date of the order, he shall not be permitted to amend after the expiration of such limited time as aforesaid or of such fourteen days as the case may be, unless the time is extended by the Court

Former and present provisions—The present rules are in very much more general terms than sect 53 of the last Code which they replace. Clause (a) of that section dealt with rejection of the plaint for want of cause of action. This provision has now been referred to O VII r 11. Clause (b) dealt with return for amendment under certain circumstances which are expressly stated (i) (ii) (iii) and (iv) as to which see post. This return was before the settlement of issues. Clause (c) dealt with amendment by the Court at any time before judgment. The section also contained the important qualification that no plaint should be amended either by the Court or by the party so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. Before pointing out the extended scope of the present Code and for the better understanding of it a detailed examination of the former provisions is given.

Return for amendment by Court of First Instance under former Code—A plaintiff (2) might himself apply at or before settlement of issues that the plaint which he had filed be returned to him for amendment if he perceived that it was defective formally or required amendment as regards substance or relief. An application was generally though not of necessity made on petition (3) supported by an affidavit (4) showing the grounds on which it was made. It is submitted also that notice should have been given, though it has been held that if a party has notice of the suit but does not appear, the fact that the plaint was under such circumstances amended without notice to him did not nullify the decree thereafter made (1). A defendant (2) might similarly apply. If neither party applied, the Court might, under clause (b), of its own motion in the specific cases therein mentioned, return the plaint to the party to be amended by him so as to remove the particular objections which might exist to it. The party himself then amended his plaint. But under clause (b) the plaintiff need not have amended at all after the plaint was returned to him, but if he did not he incurred the penalty of sect 54 (3). The Original Court could not, unless acting under the orders of an Appellate Court, return a plaint after settlement of issues, for after that period the power to amend was with the Court alone, (4) but if the plaint required amendment and the fact was only discovered after issues had been settled, the Court could amend the plaint at any time before judgment (5). It was apparently not intended by the Legislature that any necessary amendment should take any form other than that of an amendment in writing on the face of the plaint, and the Court was not competent to order an amendment so as to require that a plan should be appended to the plaint (6). Straight, J., incidentally expressed an opinion that a plaint after being once returned for amendment and amended accordingly, could not be returned again for amendment (7). In cases in which leave under the Charter had to be obtained prior to the institution of the suit no such amendment could be allowed as would introduce a new cause of action, for the grant of leave must be taken to relate to the suit as put forward in the plaint on which leave is endorsed by the Judge accepting it (8). When a plaint was returned a time had to be fixed within which the amendment must be made (9). The Court, however, had a discretion to extend even after the time originally fixed for amendment had expired (10). If the plaint was not amended within the time fixed it was rejected under sect 54 (d).

Clause (1) of sect 53 of former Code—A defect in the verification of a plaint did not of necessity result in the dismissal of the suit (11). Before the settlement of issues the plaint should have been returned for amendment, and if the verification was discovered to be defective at any time whilst the suit was before the Court of first instance, the plaint might be amended by the Court. If such defect was not discovered until the suit came in appeal before an Appellate Court, such Court might, if it thought fit return the plaint to the Court of first instance to be amended by it. But where the defect was such that it was covered by the provisions of sect. 578 of that Code, there was no necessity to take any steps to procure the amendment of the plaint (1). The Allahabad High Court has in some cases remanded the case under sect. 562 of the former Code with an order for the return of the plaint to the plaintiff for duly signing and verifying the same (2).

Clause (ii) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See as regards clause (ii), O VII. rr 1-6, ante. The general intention and meaning of a plaint should be regarded, and it should not be returned for want of correctness upon grounds of slight and immaterial mistake (3). If a plaint was defective in form or wanting in precision it should be returned for amendment and not rejected (4). Under the rules of the Punjab Chief Court an attempt should be made to remove ambiguity in the statement of any of the particulars before resorting to the return of the plaint for amendment (5). For an instance of a plaint containing particulars other than those required see the case cited below (6) in which the plaint was argumentative and referred to evidence, and contained a prayer for the criminal prosecution of the defendant. Where the plaint disclosed a cause of action, but not with sufficient fulness, it might be returned for amendment or amended, but if this was not done the plaintiff was at liberty to prove any cause of action not inconsistent with the plaint (7).

Clause (iii) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See as to non joinder and misjoinder, O II rr 3-7. The Court might return for amendment, but a party was not to be prejudiced because the Court had in its absence inadvertently admitted a plaint which was multifarious. The defendant had a right on a motion to take the plaint off the file to raise the question of misjoinder of causes of action before or at the settlement of issues (8). If the cause for suing one defendant was different from that for suing another, the plaint should have been returned for amendment. In the event of serious wrongly dismissed the defendant having admitted a considerable portion of the plaintiff's claim and taken no objection to the verification. See also Roy Mohun v. Buhoo Soonduree, 10 W. R. 145 (1868).

multifariousness being discovered at the first hearing, the Court might, on the defendant's application before any evidence was recorded, require the plaintiff to elect which cause of action he would proceed to trial upon, and should direct the remainder of the claim to be withdrawn and the plaint amended accordingly (1). Whilst the Court could not return the plaint after settlement of issues it might amend it at any time. If there were misjoinder of causes of action the plaint might be amended by striking out the part which was not properly joined (2). Where there was misjoinder but the first Court proceeded to trial, not having returned the plaint for amendment or amended it, it should dispose of the case on the merits (3). There was nothing in the Code to warrant the proposition that when a Court of first instance decided a question of misjoinder in favour of the plaintiff there was an end of the matter, and the defendant was precluded from raising the question in appeal (4). Where, however, a suit was not objected to on the score of misjoinder of causes of action at or before the settlement of issues in the Court of first instance the Court seeing, in second appeal, that the suit had proceeded through three Courts, did not feel justified in dismissing the suit (5). The Appeal Court might dispose of the suit in the mode in which the lower Court ought to have disposed of it if it had held as it ought to have done, that there was a misjoinder and might direct that the plaint be returned for amendment (6).

Clause (iv) of sect. 53 of former Code.—See notes to O II r 1, ante

Amendment by Court under clause (c) of former Code.—This clause did not form part of the Code as enacted in 1887, and together with the words “at or” in clause (b), was introduced by sect 9 of Act VII of 1888 (7). The words “at any time before judgment” meant substantially the same as the words “at any stage of the proceedings” in the corresponding English rule, O 28, r 1 under which leave to amend was refused after judgment, but an amendment might be made at any time so long as anything remained to be done in an action, though it be only the assessment of damages, and even on an application for a new trial (8). Under clause (c) the Court itself might amend at any time before judgment but not after (9). The plaint still remained on, and was part of the file, although the Court might depute any person selected by it to take the plaint for example, to a pardanashin woman who was plaintiff, or to a person who through illness was unable to attend Court for the purpose of its order being complied with. Any amendment under such circumstances would be an amendment by the Court itself. Under this clause the amendment was made by order of the Court, and the party had to comply with it. Further, if the amendment was one going to the maintenance of the suit and the defect in the plaint was not discovered until the suit got into a superior Court on appeal, the Appellate Court could either order the amendment to be made in that Court, or, for example, in a case in which there had been not only misjoinder of parties but misjoinder of causes of action, the Appellate Court might order the Court of first instance to do what it ought to have done at the proper stage of the suit when the suit was before it, and return the plaint to the parties so that they might make their election as to which of them was to continue the suit, and might make the necessary amendments (1).

Amendment by Appeal Court under former Code.—It was held under the Code of 1882 that an Appellate Court had power under sect 582 of that Code, read with sect 53, to allow an amendment of the plaint (2). The Appellate Court might itself have made the amendment or directed the lower Court to do so. There are many cases in which amendments have been allowed on appeal, and suits have been remanded (3) for re trial on amended plaints (4). The High Court, in special appeal, has also directed the lower Appellate Court to amend the plaint by the insertion of a prayer for declaration

There are some observations, however, in Bai Shri Majraba v Maganlal, 19 B 303 (1894), but these and some others as to the powers of an Appellate Court were not necessary for the decision, the basis of which was that the character of the suit had been changed. And of the plaintiffs' right and to rehear the appeal (1) It has, however, been said to be undesirable to allow amendment in second appeal when the plaintiff has in two Courts never contemplated it, and has even gone so far as to persistently maintain his case as originally brought (2) Amendment has been refused with reference to a state of facts occurring since the decision by the original Court (3) Amendment has also generally been refused where the plaintiff persisted throughout that the suit as framed was maintainable, and permission to amend was not asked for in the lower Court (4) In a case where no amendment was asked for and refused in the Court of first instance, but, on the other hand objection was taken in the lower Court, and the plaintiffs elected to take an issue and to allow the suit to proceed subject to the risk of an adverse decision the Court said "It is true that, as a general rule, the plaintiff may be permitted even, on appeal, to amend the plaint when he had framed it bona fide under a mistake or erroneous advice and the other party could be adequately compensated by an award of costs, but it must be observed that when such amendment might possibly create a necessity for fresh written statements and for fresh issues, and practically amount to a trial de novo from the commencement, it is much more convenient to leave the plaintiffs to the liberty of maintaining a suit for ejectment, so that the opposite party might in no way be prejudiced in his defence or harassed with a second trial of the same suit" (5) The stage of the proceedings, whether in the original Court or Court of Appeal, at which an application for amendment is made might effect the question whether it should be granted as to which, see post time is fixed is to when the amendment may be made. It may be "at any stage of the proceedings." As to the meaning of this term, vide ante, 'Amendment by Court.' Amendment may be by the Court of first instance or appeal, though the principles upon which the Appellate Court will proceed in such cases are in general those stated. As regards misjoinder, see now O I r 13, O II r 7, and sect 99. As to amendment of applications for execution, see O XXI r 17. An extremely important amendment is the omission of the proviso in sect 53, a matter which is dealt with post as are also the general principles on which amendment will be allowed. It may be broadly stated that in all cases where amendment has hitherto been allowed it will be permitted now, and that in many instances in which it has been refused it would be allowed under the present provisions. The object of which is to extend to India the liberal principles which govern English Courts under which all such amendments are made as are necessary for determining the real questions in controversy between the parties subject to certain qualifications which are hereinafter stated.

Case desired to be made must be raised—In the first place a question not raised by the plaint ought not to be decided by the Court (1). The Judicial Committee has held (2) that though it is disposed to give a liberal construction to pleadings in Indian Courts so as to allow every question to be raised and discussed in the suit yet a plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts and documents neither stated nor referred to in the pleadings. The determination in a cause must be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made (3). Even where it was argued that the plaintiff had been misled by various representations made by the defendant into framing his suit as it was then framed the Privy Council said that even if that were so it would not empower them to depart from the rule which has always prevailed that a man must recover according to his allegations and his proofs and that it would not enable them to allow an entirely new case to be brought forward which was not set up or hinted at in the plaint (4). Further it is to be noted that stricter rules as regards pleading are enacted by the present Code.

Matters in dispute should be ascertained not only from the plaint and answer, but also at the first hearing of the suit when issues are settled and any indistinctness in the form of the plaint does not require that a decision come to upon issues fixed in the lower Court between the parties should be cases the Judge will require evidence that the party applying to amend could not with reasonable diligence have discovered the new facts sooner (1) Where the amendment has become necessary by reason of a variance between the statement of claim and the evidence given at the trial, it should be asked for at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case (2) After all the evidence on both sides has been taken, leave to amend will, as a rule, be refused (3) If the defendant is not present at the hearing, it has been held in England that notice must be given him of the application to amend (4) Unless the pleading is amended, the plaintiff cannot have judgment for more than the amount named in it (5)

After the hearing, and after judgment, the Court has no power to amend After an interlocutory judgment, or a decree in an Admiralty action which determines liability but leaves the damages to be assessed, the Court still has power to amend the pleadings, (6) and even to add or substitute parties (7) As to amendment in appeal, vide ante

General principles on which leave to amend is refused—The following are some of the principal grounds on which the Courts in their discretion may refuse leave to amend:—(8) Where the amendment desired could not be made without prejudicing the defendant in such a way that he cannot be recouped by costs, (9) and where a right accrued might be prejudiced (10) Thus, though it was under the last Code broadly held that a Court was not precluded from allowing an amendment by the circumstance that at the time of the amendment a suit for what was added by the amendment would be barred by limitation (11) the general rule was that a plaintiff would not be allowed to amend by setting up fresh claims in respect of causes of action which have, since the institution of the suit, become barred, (12) though peculiar circumstances might take the case out of the ordinary rule, (13) and the Privy Council have actually allowed an amendment on the ground that, if the plaintiff were left to bring a fresh suit, it might be met by a plea of limitation, a defence which, under the circumstances of the case, was considered

unputable (1) In a recent case in the Madras High Court it was held that a petition for an amendment of a plaint based on no new facts and asking for a further relief (in this instance, recovery of money) may be allowed if it is put in before evidence has been taken, and if there is no injustice to the defendants, even when it is barred by limitation between its date and the date of the plaint (2) Trivial and mere technical amendments are discouraged (3) The Court will always consider the materiality of the proposed amendment and unless material amendment will not be allowed (4) A slight delay is not a sufficient ground for refusing leave, but if an application which could easily have been made at a much earlier stage of the proceedings be delayed until after evidence given, and a point of law argued, leave may be refused (5) This principle has been applied to the suit itself Where the plaintiff was guilty of delay, and filed the suit on the last day but one on which the law of limitation would permit him to file it, amendment was refused (6) The application may also be refused if the Court is not satisfied as to the truth and substantiality of the proposed amendment, and has reason to think that the application is not an honest one (7)

It has also been said by Lord Esher, M R., to be "the universal practice," except in the most exceptional cases not to allow an amendment for the purpose of adding a plea of fraud where fraud has not been pleaded in the first instance ' (8) The circumstances referred to are doubtless those where the plaintiff thoroughly satisfies the Court upon the point why the charge was not made before It is also a well known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot on failure of proof be substituted for it (9) It was held that a plaint which contained general allegations, but no specific instances of fraud, could not be amended in second appeal, (10) and where fraud was charged, but the suit was brought in the wrong form, the Court refused to allow the plaint to be amended as to do so in that case would change the character of the suit (11) Peacock C J said "We think that it would not be the exercise of a sound discretion to allow a party who relies upon a document to set up a fresh case, where an issue as to the execution of such document is found against him and there are good grounds for believing the document to be a forgery ' (12)

Amendment of substance of plaint—An amendment may be sought, either in respect of the substance or form of the plaint, or the parties to the suit or the relief sought. So far as amendment of the substance or form of the plaint is concerned, the matter has already been dealt with. If, for instance, as regards formal matters, the verification is defective, it will be amended (1). It is the duty of the Court to take care that the plaint, when filed is an accurate and sufficient statement of the essential ingredients of the plaintiff's claim (2). The subject of parties and relief is dealt with in the following paragraphs.

Amendment as to parties—A plaint which may be amended in substance may require, by reason of such amendment, an amendment in respect of parties. So a suit for collision, originally filed as an action in personam against the owners of the ship, has been amended also into an action in rem and the ship added as a party defendant (3). But amendment may have reference to parties only, as well as to the substance of the claim. Where a suit was brought by several persons on the basis of a right vested in them jointly and severally the plaint was amended by the omission of the names of all the plaintiffs except one (4). The plaint will be amended where there is a change of parties, or the parties are wrongly described (5). But where the defendants were dead when the suit was instituted, the Court, on appeal, refused to amend by instituting the legal representatives, as the defendant was likely to be precluded from pleading limitation, (6) and where the wrong parties were sued the Court in the under mentioned cases refused amendment (7). Where A and B sued, and it appeared that A alone was entitled, the name of B was ordered to be struck out and the suit proceeded with (8). But where plaintiffs suing jointly succeeded only in making out the title of one of them to an undivided moiety the suit was dismissed (9).

Amendment as to relief—In suits under the Code, the Court is certainly bound to take into consideration all the rights of the parties to the suit, whether legal or equitable, and by its decree to give effect to those rights as far as possible, but it should confine itself to granting such relief as is prayed by the plaintiff (1) It cannot grant relief of a different kind from that prayed for, such as could not have been properly granted except on an amendment of the plaint, (2) or change the suit so that the question involved in it is irrelevant to the relief claimed (3) If, however, the specific right and infraction of it are not altered, the Court may give relief less than that claimed, or a portion of the relief claimed (4) The Court, however, whether of first instance or of appeal, has no power to make a decree in favour of the plaintiff beyond the amount stated in the plaint The plaint may, however, be amended before judgment, so as to enable a Court to pass such a decree (5)

As regards amendment, it has been broadly affirmed (6) that “an alteration in the relief does not alter the character of a suit” It is perhaps more correct to say that an amendment of relief simply does not generally (7) involve such a change in the suit as to make its character inconsistent in the terms of the proviso of the last Code It has also been held that where the object of an amendment of the plaint was merely to seek relief ancillary to the principal prayer such amendment did not alter the character of the suit (8) So the relief for declaration is in most cases for recovery of possession claimed is ancillary to the latter, and there can be no inconsistency between the two (9)

The amendment may be in respect of matters occurring before or after suit brought So as regards the first alternative, where the plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption after filing his plaint discovered that the property in suit had been described by mistake as being of a slightly less area than it was in reality, and omitted to claim for a small fraction of the share sold, the plaint was allowed to be amended (1) A change in the relief asked is generally allowed on appeal, especially by the addition of a prayer for consequential relief in a suit for declaration (2) A plaint in a suit for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain land has been amended so as to make it a suit for possession of that land after the cancellation of the deed (3) As regards events occurring after suit, the general rule is that the rights of parties must be ascertained as at the date of the action brought, and not with reference to events occurring after the institution of the action (4) But this section does not prevent a plaintiff, who has been ousted after suit brought for declaration of title, from amending his plaint by adding a prayer for possession, the suit as amended not being inconsistent with the suit as originally framed, both being based upon the same title (5) Where the reliefs claimed and the facts on which they are claimed are stated in the original plaint, this can be amended by addition of a further relief if it does not involve adding anything to the allegations in the plaint (6) And where a plaintiff filed a suit to obtain a declaration that certain property belonged to his judgment debtor, and that the defendants had no right to it, and, pending proceedings, purchased the property, it was held that he was still entitled to a declaratory decree, for the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him (7) But where an amendment rests on an event which did not occur until after the suit had been instituted and had been dealt with by the Court of first instance and also substantially alters the original cause of action it will be disallowed (8) A mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale and ask simply for a money decree Such an amendment does not amount to a conversion of the suit into a suit of another and inconsistent character (9)

as a matter of discretion. Sect. 53 of the first Code was, however, mandatory in this, namely, that no amendment could be allowed which converted a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. While the power of the Court extended to the elucidation of what was ambiguous, to the amendment of what was erroneous, and the supplying of what was defective, it did not extend to the conversion of a suit of one character into another inconsistent with and opposed to it, e.g. a suit for possession with mesne profits into one for resumption (1) or a claim on contract to one in tort (2).

A number of cases will be found reported (not very profitably) on this point, for it must be remembered that each case is only an authority so far as the same set of facts may (which is unlikely) exist in a subsequent case (3). In some decisions a formal application was made to amend. In others a new case was sought to be argued which, however, could only have been done after an application to amend had been made and granted, and the matter was dealt with as in effect an application to amend, since a decree could only be made on allegations formally raised at the trial. Further, it is to be noted that the application for amendment was made at differing stages of the suit and under different circumstances, and it may be that as already stated, an application which if made before the hearing would be granted, might, if made after hearing be refused. Whether an amendment is inconsistent with the suit as originally framed may be tested by an inquiry into the nature of the evidence to be offered in either case (4). Amendment was not allowed, on the ground that the suit had been changed in the following cases —

Claim for rent on contract, claim for use and occupation, (5) claim for hire of cargo boats, claim for agency account in respect of same, (6) claim for dower on written agreement, claim for same on custom, (7) claim based on den mohur right of widow, claim for decree to extent of rights of widow and her son as heirs, (8) claim as adopted son, claim as heir, (9) claim to recover from defendant money paid by him to X on the ground that such payment was unauthorized, claim for damages for negligence in selecting X as agent for plaintiff, (10) claim that a sale had been made to pay immoral debts, claim that the father could only alienate his own share, (11) claim based on gift by will, claim based on inheritance, (12) claim to set aside alienation on ground of illegitimacy of party making it, claim for same on ground that it was without consent of other heirs (1a) claim for a pottah on

for pre-emption after filing his plaint discovered that the property in suit had been described by mistake as being of a slightly less area than it was in reality, and omitted to claim for a small fraction of the share sold, the plaint was allowed to be amended (1) A change in the relief asked is generally allowed on appeal, especially by the addition of a prayer for consequential relief in a suit for declaration (2) A plaint in a suit for the cancellation of a deed of gift of certain land has been amended so as to make it a suit for possession of that land after the cancellation of the deed (3) As regards events occurring after suit, the general rule is that the rights of parties must be ascertained as at the date of the action brought, and not with reference to events occurring after the institution of the action (4) But this section does not prevent a plaintiff, who has been ousted after suit brought for declaration of title, from amending his plaint by adding a prayer for possession, the suit as amended not being inconsistent with the suit as originally framed, both being based upon the same title (5) Where the reliefs claimed and the facts on which they are claimed are stated in the original plaint, this can be amended by addition of a further relief if it does not involve adding anything to the allegations in the plaint (6) And where a plaintiff filed a suit to obtain a declaration that certain property belonged to his judgment debtor, and that the defendants had no right to it, and, pending proceedings, purchased the property, it was held that he was still entitled to a declaratory decree, for the change of circumstances brought about by the plaintiff himself purchasing the property did not take away the right to sue which had already accrued to him (7) But where an amendment rests on an event which did not occur until after the suit had been instituted and had been dealt with by the Court of first instance, and also substantially alters the original cause of action, it will be disallowed (8) A mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale and ask simply for a money decree. Such an amendment does not amount to a conversion of the suit into a suit of another and inconsistent character (9)

In Karimbhai v Conservator of Forests, 4 B 222 (1879), a partner sued to establish his exclusive title to partnership property, and the High Court on appeal allowed an amendment converting the suit into one for dissolution and account, and remanded the case, with directions to the lower Court to make the other partners parties. In Annappa v Ganpati, 5 B 181 (1880), the suit was for interest only. The plaint was amended so as to make the suit for account and payment of principal and interest. In Radhikai v Shannray, 8 B 168 (1881), an ejectment suit

as a matter of discretion. Sect 53 of the last Code was, however, mandatory in this, namely, that no amendment could be allowed which converted a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. While the power of the Court extended to the elucidation of what was ambiguous, to the amendment of what was erroneous, and the supplying of what was defective, it did not extend to the conversion of a suit of one character into another inconsistent with and opposed to it, e.g. a suit for possession with mesne profits into one for resumption, (1) or a claim on contract to one in tort (2).

A number of cases will be found reported (not very profitably) on this point, for it must be remembered that each case is only an authority so far as the same set of facts may (which is unlikely) exist in a subsequent case (3). In some decisions a formal application was made to amend. In others, a new case was sought to be argued which, however, could only have been done after an application to amend had been made and granted, and the matter was dealt with as, in effect, an application to amend, since a decree could only be made on allegations formally raised at the trial. Further, it is to be noted that the application for amendment was made at differing stages of the suit and under different circumstances, and it may be that as already stated, an application which, if made before the hearing, would be granted, might, if made after hearing, be refused. Whether an amendment is inconsistent with the suit as originally framed may be tested by an inquiry into the nature of the evidence to be offered in either case (4). Amendment was not allowed, on the ground that the suit had been changed, in the following cases:—

Claim for rent on contract, claim for use and occupation, (5) claim for hire of cargo boats, claim for agency account in respect of same, (6) claim for dower on written agreement, claim for same on custom, (7) claim based on den mohur right of widow, claim for decree to extent of rights of widow and her son as heirs, (8) claim as adopted son, claim as heir, (9) claim to recover from defendant money paid by him to X on the ground that such payment was unauthorized, claim for damages for negligence in selecting X as agent for plaintiff, (10) claim that a sale had been made to pay immoral debts, claim that the father could only alienate his own share, (11) claim based on gift by will, claim based on inheritance, (12) claim to set aside alienation on ground of illegitimacy of party making it, claim for same on ground that it was without consent of other heirs (13) claim for a pottah on commencement raise an alternative case. Where he has not done so he may have leave to amend his plaint and to state his case correctly therein if the Court thinks that he has rested his claim upon wrong grounds from misinformation, ignorance of law or fact, mistake or misconstruction of documents (1). Where in a suit for the recovery of a sum due on account, the defendant raised a plea of limitation leave was granted to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment signed by the defendant within the period of limitation (2). Where in a suit for rent the plaintiffs described themselves as "executors and trustees of the properties of an endowment" they were allowed to describe themselves as "de facto managers and persons interested in the endowment" (3). Where it was argued that an amendment allowing an alternative case to be raised converted the suit into one of another and inconsistent character, it was held that the alternative claim which arose out of, and was immediately connected with, the same transaction was not inconsistent, (4) the Court, however, adding that the proviso to this section in the 1st Code must be read with sects 42 and 45 of that Code and was not intended to interfere with them. See quære as to whether this was not stated too broadly. It does not follow that because a plaint might have originally been brought in a particular form, but was not, that therefore it must be amended into that form. If so the object of the provision might in some cases be defeated.

As already pointed out the section has been now amended. In all cases the Court has a discretion (5). In exercising that discretion, it will, following the English practice, in general refuse an amendment which changes the action into one of a substantially different character which would more conveniently be the subject of a fresh action. The question thus becomes one of discretion and not subject to a rigid rule. Whether amendment should be allowed must depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere technical arguments showing a conversion of character will not be given effect to. There are such cases of conversion where amendment may be properly allowed. On the other hand any substantial change in the claim made, making it more convenient that they should be the subject of a fresh action will be refused.

Costs—In England the amendment may be allowed 'on such terms as may be just' (6). And the Courts may therefore there impose terms as to other matters than costs (7). In this country the Courts could formerly by the terms of the former section impose terms only in regard to costs. As to these they are entirely in the discretion of the Court and they are sometimes (particularly when the application is made before trial) reserved (8). The section has, however, now been amended in conformity with the English rule.

ORDER VII.

Plaint.

1. The plaint shall contain the following particulars :—

Particulars to be contained in plaint.

(a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought ;

(b) the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff ,

(c) the name, description and place of residence of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained ;

(d) where the plaintiff or the defendant is a minor or a person of unsound mind, a statement to that effect ;

(e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose ;

(f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction ;

(g) the relief which the plaintiff claims ;

(h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished , and

(i) a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of court-fees, so far as the case admits.

2. Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed :

In money suits.

But where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant the plaint shall state approximately the amount sued for

3. Where the subject matter of the suit is immovable property, the plaint shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plaint shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

Where the subject matter of the suit is immovable property

4. Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character,
When plaintiff sues as representative. the plaintiff shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.

5. The plaintiff shall show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.
Defendant's interest and liability to be shown.

6. Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, Grounds of exemption from limitation law. the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Plaint—The object of a plaint is simply to state the grounds and relief upon and in respect of which a suitor seeks the assistance of the Court. Its essential parts are (i) the title or as it is sometimes called, the caption, (ii) the statement, and (iii) the relief, the first of which is referred to in clauses (a), (b), (c), and (d) of rule 1, the second in clauses (e) and (h), and the third in clause (g). The provisions of sect 50 which these rules replace was criticized as not complete. Thus it has been said it is "a general rule, and the section appears to presuppose that the capacity of parties suing or sued should be alleged in the plaint, but it does not provide for such allegations expressly. Similarly, in the case of joinder of causes of action, the circumstances allowing the joinder should be stated, but there is no provision as to that. There appears to be no doubt, however, that on the analogy of the practice of other countries all such facts should be stated in the plaint notwithstanding the last clause of sect 53, clause (b) (ii) which provides for a return of the plaint for amendment if it contains particulars other than those mentioned in this section. It is held in the United States that the fact of partnership should be alleged in the plaint, as partnership demands and liabilities being joint, such allegation is necessary to authorize the joinder of parties. So also, the value of suit and the locality of its subject matter and of its cause of action, and other circumstances on which the jurisdiction of the Court may depend must be alleged. Thus the Bombay High Court Circulars (Chap I r 4) expressly lay down, that in every suit the Court shall require the plaintiff to state clearly in the plaint how the value of the suit has been arrived at, and that in a suit for the price of goods sold retail, the plaint should either set out the account in detail, or should be accompanied by a copy of the account to be served upon the defendant. Similarly, if any law authorizes a suit only after the plaintiff has taken some other proceedings, given some notice, or received leave or sanction of some Court or obtained a certificate of some officer, the plaint must state that those proceedings have been taken, notice given, leave or sanction received.

or certificate obtained, as the case may be (1) The amended section adds a statement of the value of the subject matter

'Shall contain'—The word formerly used was "must," and was held to be a strong imperative (2)

Title Rule 1, clauses (a), (b), (c), (d)—The name should be given, if possible, in full and to the extent necessary to fully identify the party. If there be more than one plaintiff, or more than one defendant the name of each must be given. As to cases of agents, assignees, benamudars partners and others, see notes to O I rr 1, 1. And as regards suits by or against Government and public officers (3) aliens and foreign native rulers (4) corporations and companies (5) trustees and executors (6) firms (7) minors (8) and military men (9) see also the portions of the Code noted

"If a person sues in a representative or official capacity the capacity should be indicated in the title. The same should also be done when he sues merely as a member of a firm or as secretary or agent of some corporation, or on behalf of a larger number of persons. And the capacity is generally indicated by adding to the name of the party a designation denoting the special character or capacity which he sustains. But the designation may be taken as merely descriptio personæ unless it is preceded by the word 'as' or some equivalent of it (10). And the general rule appears to be that the capacity in which a party sues or is sued should not only be indicated in the title but stated in the body of the plaint also (11).

To describe the plaintiff as residing in Chitpore Road in the town of Calcutta is not a sufficient description of his place of abode. nor is it sufficient under this section to describe the defendant as formerly of Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his place of residence more definitely (12). Where it was contended that the plaint was bad as the claim was set out by G W H manager (of a bank) but the words should have been "The Mussoorie Bank Limited" it was held to be no ground for returning the plaint as the intention and meaning of the plaint was clear that the circumstances set out applied to the bank and the words were not capable of any other meaning (13).

(1) Hukm Chanl C P C 584. It may however be perhaps contended that some of the matters referred to would come within clause (c). Other cases might be met by other portions of the Code as eg s 80 which requires a plaint to allege the giving of notice or by other Acts.

(13) Mussoorie Bank, Ltd v Barlow, 9 A 188 (18 C)

The defendant's name is given in the plaint in the same manner as the plaintiff's

All those titles by which a party is generally known ought to be given and it is not the true construction of the section "to say that where a man has titles, the claim to which titles cannot rationally be disputed by which he is generally known all that the Code requires is that he should be described in such a way as may be sufficient for identification (1) In the case cited in order rejecting the plaint because plaintiff did not amend it, so as to give the full titles to the defendant was held to be correct, their Lordships of the Privy Council observing that "if a plaintiff, from animosity, from pique or anything in fact but a bona fide dispute as to the right to a title, obstinately refuses to give his adversary that title by which he is generally recognized the Court ought not to permit or sanction that species of insult

Where a practice existed in the Madras Courts to give as part of the description the age as well as the father's name, and these were not given the High Court refused to interfere with an order rejecting the plaint (2) It is not sufficient to describe the defendant merely as formerly of Colootollah in Calcutta without alleging that the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain his present residence (3) Where a plaint described the defendant as "Mrs S G B of Mussoorie" and stated that she was executrix of the deceased B, it was held not to be open to objection as it was clear that the defendant was stated to be executrix of the deceased and the suit was brought against her in that capacity (4)

There is no provision in the Code as to how the defendant is to be sued and named in the plaint when his real name is not known to the plaintiff and cannot be ascertained by reasonable diligence (5) Names are only used to designate persons and as a means of identifying them. The action is not against the name, but against the person designated thereby. If therefore the real defendant has been properly served with a summons in a fictitious name and he does not appear to defend the suit a judgment rendered against him in such name will be as effective against him as if his true name had been given in the proceedings in the action (6)

It is one of the first essentials of a suit that the parties, and specially the defendant must be alive at the time of the institution of the suit. If the person named as defendant is found to have been dead at the time of the presentation of the plaintiff, the Court will have no jurisdiction over it,(1) and must refuse to proceed further, leaving the plaintiff to begin de novo against any person against whom he may have a right to proceed (2) It has even been held in the United States that if one of the defendants was dead the judgment will be void as against the other defendants also (3) And the principle appears to be of a general application Thus Freeman, in his work on Judgments,(4) observes that "no sort of jurisdiction can be obtained against one who was dead when suit was commenced against him as a defendant, or in his name as plaintiff, and that no judicial record can be made which will estop those claiming under him from showing that he died before the action was begun, and that a judgment for or against him must necessarily be void" It is stated (5) that the Courts in several States of the American Union have held the same even in suits against a corporation, commenced after its being dissolved,(6) though the rule does not appear to have been there applied with the same strictness in the case of a plaintiff (7) Thus a judgment in a suit instituted in the name of a party who is dead at the time the suit is brought has been held in some cases to be only voidable (8) And Mr Black in his work on Judgments (9) observes that "if an action is commenced in the name of a person already dead in interest or if one of several joint claimants is dead before action brought it is held that the defendant must take advantage of the fact by plea in abatement at the peril of being estopped by his silence and the judgment for plaintiff will not be disturbed" (10) trial what is the real point to be discussed and decided (1) The two points to be attended to are the form of, and then the contents of, the statement. As to the first, the former section states that the language must be both plain and concise (2) This is a matter now dealt with in O VI r 2. The material parts should be stated in a summary form, clearly and precisely yet briefly and succinctly. While a liberal construction should be given to pleadings, so as to give effect to their meaning to be collected from their whole tenor, they ought to be expressed with sufficient definiteness to enable the opposite party to understand the case he is called upon to meet (3) To avoid prolixity, the pleader should omit every allegation which is immaterial and unnecessary, as also all unnecessary details when alleging parts which are material (4) A certain amount of detail is necessary. 'Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise' (5).

The statement of facts must be with specific particularity, and not by way of vague generalizations. As observed by Ried J. in the opinion of the Supreme Court of Colorado in Robinson v Dolores (6) "the conclusions of the pleader stated as facts broad generalizations sweeping and comprehensive assertions of conspiracy fraud, mismanagement and incompetency, cannot be made, in pleading, to supply the wants of specific facts".

Thus it is a settled rule, that in an action for false and fraudulent misrepresentation the statement of claim should state the details of each alleged misrepresentation (7). In fact it is a general rule, that where fraud is intended to be charged, its details must be specified, and general allegations, however strong, are insufficient to constitute an averment of it (8). See O V r 4. In the first cited case Lord Selborne observed, that "with regard to fraud, if there be any principle which is perfectly well settled it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice" This was cited with approval in the Privy Council,(1) by Lord Watson, who said: "When fraud is charged against the defendants, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. There can be no objection to the use of such general words as 'fraud' or 'collusion,' but they are quite ineffectual to give a fraudulent colour to the particular statements of fact in the plaint, unless these statements, taken by themselves, are such as to imply that a fraud has actually been committed" Thus a plaint to set aside an award must definitely state some fraud or other mispractice of the opposite party (2). The decision of the Privy Council cited, was acted upon in a case (3) in the Bombay High Court, Fulton J., observing that the plaint ought, immediately on presentation, to have been rejected or returned for amendment, as it did not disclose a cause of action. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid (1) and it must be so proved at the hearing of the case, and cannot be reserved and proved in the course of taking accounts (5).

The Panjab Chief Court, in its Instructions to Judicial Officers (s 2, r 8 (iii)) laid down "Plaints containing vague and loose statements of a general character alleging fraud, collusion, 'deceit,' 'illegal and fraudulent acts,' and the like, which are never made to take a definite shape and are frequently impossible to prove, are frequently admitted. This should not be allowed. Where fraud is alleged, the particular facts showing that it has actually been committed must be plainly and definitely set forth, the plaint being returned for amendment in this respect when necessary".

Facts must be stated as facts. Modern pleadings are merely concise statements of the facts. Inferences of law should not be pleaded. Pleadings should not contain mere arguments (6). A plaintiff thus cannot aver that "he is entitled to" property, for this is a conclusion of mixed fact and law. He must state the facts which, in his opinion, give him that title. The material facts only should be pleaded. But each party must always state his whole case, and all the facts which are essential to the cause of action, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved,(7) though "there are many cases in which facts and evidence are so mixed up as to be almost undistinguishable" (8). In other words only operative facts, as distinguished from probative or evidential facts should be pleaded, and of the former, only the ultimate facts.

The plaint should include all the existing points on which the plaintiff can succeed (9). And a plaintiff is only entitled to succeed upon the cause of action alleged by him in his plaint (10). It is not, however necessary for the plaintiff to state in what form of action he sues (11).

Where the plaint discloses all the facts constituting the cause of action the form of the action is immaterial. Thus, in a suit for mortgage money and interest by the enforcement of the mortgage lien even if the hypothecation is not proved a personal decree may be given for the amount claimed as damages for breach of the contract to give possession of the mortgaged property, (1) the Court observing, in the latter cited case, that it was immaterial whether the demand was regarded in the light of a suit for compensation in damages for breach of the contract, or for money had and received for the plaintiff's use, or for money lent. So also, in a suit for rent on a kabulyat, if the kabulyat is not proved, a decree may be given for rent at the rate proved to be paid before the alleged kabulyat if there should be evidence of that, (2) even though that may not have been expressly claimed in the plaint. In the under-mentioned case (3) this was not done, as there was no such evidence, but the Full Bench said "It is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plaint or the issues, and to allow it (i.e. the alternative claim for rent paid before) to be tried. And where the omission to make the claim in the plaint appears to have been from inadvertence or by mistake, it would be proper to do so." Where in a suit for possession of certain land on the basis of a lease granted to plaintiff in 1231, it was alleged that the plaintiff had continued to hold it since then as a lessee from year to year, he was allowed a decree on the ground of the facts proved showing that he had an occupancy right, such alternative title not being inconsistent with the alleged title under the lease (4).

Nextly, as to the contents of the statement. A defendant is entitled at the earliest stage of the hearing to obtain the declaration of the Court upon the question whether the plaint discloses a cause of action (5).

Among ultimate operative facts the plaintiff's title or right which has been infringed must be first stated. The expression "cause of action" has been understood to be used in this section in its broad sense, as including both the infringement and the right infringed, which latter must therefore be set out in the statement of the plaintiff's cause of action. Thus, in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the mortgage must be stated (6). In a suit for a declaration of title to a property which the plaintiff admits was sold to the defendant's ancestors, and to which the plaintiff cannot establish a right without setting aside that sale, the plaintiff should allege the circumstances which he relies upon for avoiding it (7). And where the plaintiff's right to the thing sued for is derived by assignment the fact of the assignment ought to be stated in the plaint (8). A plaintiff suing for possession of land by redemption of the mortgage, must show in his plaint the existing title he intends or hopes to prove, and upon which he relies as entitling him to the relief which he asks (9). It is a general principle, that a plaintiff suing for possession must show that at the date of the suit he was entitled to that relief (1) It has thus been held that the owner of demised land cannot sue to eject even a trespasser so long as the lease is outstanding (2) The Punjab Chief Court, in its Instructions (3) to Judicial Officers, laid down that "it should appear in the plaint that the persons, if more than one, who sue together as plaintiffs, all, either jointly, severally, or in the alternative, claim the right which it is the object of the suit to vindicate "

Where the plaintiff's right alone constitutes the cause of action, it will be sufficient to allege only that right Thus, in an action for partition, the plaint should state the titles and interests of the co tenants, plaintiff and defendant, but it is neither necessary nor proper to show any derangement of the plaintiff's title (4) But where the suit has been necessitated by any act done to jeopardize the plaintiff's right or evidence of it, that act should also be stated Thus, in a suit for a declaration of right, the plaint should specify not only the title to that right but also the act of interference with that right (5) and the circumstances which necessitate the application for the declaration (6) Where in a suit by a relative of a minor against his administrator, the plaint merely stated that the conduct of the defendant was improper, and that the plaintiff had suspicions that the defendant would waste the property of the minor, but failed to specify any instance of malversation or to give any reason, plausible or otherwise for believing that the defendant would waste the estate, the plaint was rejected (7) Similarly, in a suit to compel one's neighbours to agree to a particular line of boundary being marked out between plaintiff's lands and theirs it must be stated that they have by some overt act transgressed that boundary (8) In a suit to have a contract cancelled and the plaintiff's deposit returned with damages, the plaint only alleged that the contract was "caused by one of the parties to it being under a mistake as to a matter of fact" and the High Court held that as that would not have made the contract voidable the plaint did not disclose a cause of action and that it should have been returned for amendment on that ground (9)

the ground that the mortgage debt had been discharged by usufruct Such a plaint would not show the circumstances constituting the cause of action or when it arose or in fact, that any cause of action of right to sue existed at the commencement of the suit

Where a suit is based on the actual infringement of a right, the infringement and the facts constituting the infringement should also be stated. Thus in a suit for damages for injury done, the nature of the injury should be set out (2). And a suit to fix a boundary should show that the boundary has been transgressed (3).

The plaintiff may base his claim on alternative titles which are not inconsistent with each other, (1) as, for example, when a person claims possession of certain land by hereditary quzashtu right, or, in the alternative, by the right derived from adverse possession for twelve years, (5) or upon a mortgage and deed of sale (6). And a mortgagor suing for redemption may aver that the mortgage money has been repaid, and that if anything be found to be due, that he will pay it (7). But inconsistent titles, it has been held, should not be allowed to be put forward, as, for example, a claim to hold a hat on the ground of title by prescription, and of proprietary right to the land where the hat is held (8). In the case below, (9) the gist of the plaintiff's charge against the defendant was that she never executed a deed of sale in his favour, and that the document set up by him was a forgery, and it was observed that it was not competent to the plaintiff to combine with that charge as an alternative the wholly inconsistent charge that if the plaintiff executed the document no consideration was received by her, or that fraud had been practised on her. The Bombay High Court has held that inconsistent assertions of fact cannot be permitted in the pleadings, but that on the same basis of facts two distinct titles may be put forth (10). The decision cited of the Madras High Court was dissented from by Allahabad High Court in a case (11) in which the claim was for a declaration that a bond was not executed by the plaintiff, or, at least, that it was null and void for want of actual and valid consideration, and the Court observed that the Code did not authorize the rejection of a plaint containing prayers for such reliefs, and that it was unable to follow the Madras High Court "in holding that a Court has power to throw out a suit on the ground that, in its opinion, the plaint sets up two inconsistent cases." It, however, stated that if a plaintiff chooses to come into Court on a plaint which contains allegations inconsistent with one another, this circumstance might militate strongly against the plaintiff succeeding in the suit though it would not justify the Court on this ground alone in dismissing it. In England, the old rule of pleading (12) was that a plaintiff could not plead inconsistent facts

But the Judicature Act has enlarged the liberty of the plaintiff in claiming relief, and it is held that there is nothing to prevent either party from setting up two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claiming relief thereunder in the alternative, (1) and ever since the Judicature Act inconsistent defences, such as never indebted and payment, are duly pleaded. It is to be observed, however, that there are differences between the position of a plaintiff and a defendant. The plaintiff often has a personal knowledge of the facts which the defendant may not have, and while it is open to a plaintiff under certain circumstances to reserve a ground of claim, a defendant failing to insist on a ground of defence in one action cannot raise it afterwards in another action at the suit of the same party. The defendants may be complete strangers to the transactions and the defences raised may have reference to matters not necessarily or probably within their own knowledge. So a Hindu wrote his will, devising certain ancestral property to his wife, and on the following day he registered it and took the plaintiff in adoption. The testator died shortly afterwards. It was found that the plaintiff's natural father was aware of the dispositions contained in the will, and that the testator would not have adopted the plaintiff but for the consent of the natural father to those dispositions. The defendants who claimed under a gift from the wife had denied the adoption in their written statement and on appeal raised the further plea that the adoption, if any, was conditional on the provisions of the will being acquiesced in. It was held, that the defendants were not precluded from succeeding on the latter of these inconsistent pleas (2).

Probably having regard to the scope of the Code the rule which should be followed is that inconsistent and alternative claims are allowable if arising out of facts which are not inconsistent, and that a plaintiff should probably not in any case, and certainly not where the facts are presumably within his knowledge, be allowed to plead inconsistent facts but should be called upon to elect so that the defendant may know what case he has to meet, and that a defendant similarly should not be allowed to plead inconsistent defences unless he is a stranger to the transaction and the true state of facts is not within his personal knowledge. Thus it has been held that a Mahomedan plaintiff who first claimed the property in suit as the heir of his father, on the ground that his mother had no title to it could not in the same suit contend that his daughter had acquired a good title to it from his mother and that therefore he was entitled to it (3).

A plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in the plaint but he may put forward therein an alternative case from the commencement as the defendant will then know that he has more than one case to meet, and will not be taken by surprise (4). The different titles should be set out in the alternative, for a claimant who has failed to recover property under one title may be barred from bringing a second suit to recover the same property by a different title (1) Where in an action of ejectment against a tenant holding over, the lease sued on was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and the plaint was not amended to one containing an alternative claim for partition held that the plaintiff could not be allowed to fall back upon his general title and obtain a decree for partition (2)

As to the place where a cause of action must be deemed to arise see notes to acts 19 and 20, ante The date of accrual is a question of substantive law it should be given as correctly as practicable (3) In the case cited the suit was for possession and it was held that the date of the plaintiff's dispossession must be given as accurately as possible, especially when one of the issues was whether he had been in possession within twelve years As to relinquishment, see O II r 2, ante, and as to set off O VIII r 6 post

Technical objections, however should not, unless where it is absolutely necessary be allowed to prevail Thus where it was objected that a plaint had been drawn for rectification of a compromise instead of a decree, it was held that this was a mere technicality since rectification of the decree would follow if the plaint was successful (4) In the under mentioned case, (5) Couch CJ said The plaint in this case is drawn as so many plaints are, in a very improper manner with reference to the cause of suit but this Court cannot allow a plaintiff to be defeated in his suit on account of the improper form of the plaint if looking at the whole of it we can say what is the cause of suit Of course we are not to allow a plaintiff to succeed upon a cause of action which is not in the plaint but the language of these plaints is not to be read too strictly and we certainly are not willing to give effect to any technical objections arising upon it This and similar cases were decided many years ago and stricter rules have been now enacted in O VI A document referred to in the plaint is not necessarily a part of it (6)

Relief Rule 1, clause (g)—The object of a suit is to obtain some particular remedy or relief This is stated in the prayer of the plaint for just as the defendant is entitled to know what facts the plaintiff relies on and intends to prove in order that he may meet them for the same reason he is entitled to know what use the plaintiff intends to make of his alleged facts and the Court should know the nature of the plaintiff's demand which when obtained is embodied in its judgment In the corresponding provision of the New York Code 'judgment is substituted for relief in order to exclude from the plaint prayers for provisional remedies which it has been said need not find room in it (7) Mention need not be made in it of that which is machinery for the grant of the relief prayed for Thus it has been held that a demand for money will include a prayer for its recovery by the sale of the property held in mortgage for it (8) and it is not necessary to mention the sale in the plaint. In a suit for contribution, the amount due from each defendant should be specified; but where this cannot be done, the ascertainment of the amount should form a portion of the relief sought (1). A suit, it was held, is often brought only for accounts, and a subsequent suit for the balance (2). It is preferable and more convenient, however, that the suit should be not only for an account, but for an adjustment of accounts and for payment of the balance that may be found due. This is the usual practice on the Original Side of the Presidency High Courts, and it is specially desirable in regard to suits against agents in cases in which, as under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, the period of limitation runs from the date of the termination of the agency, because the agent may make delay in giving the accounts, so that the subsequent suit for balance may be barred (3). The object as to which a relief is claimed should be described with sufficient fulness so that there may be no doubt or difficulty as to its identification. Thus, where the object of a suit is to prevent the plaintiff's rights over certain lands from being infringed upon, the boundaries of the lands should be given in the plaint (4). See the new third rule in this Order and notes to O XX r 9, post. But it has been held that a plaintiff's suit did not necessarily fail upon the ground that there were no boundaries given in the plaint when they asked merely for a declaratory decree in respect of their title (5). And the mere omission from the schedule annexed to a plaint of the boundaries or other specifications of land will not exclude from the operation of the decree matters which are by name strictly claimed in the plaint, and referred to as such in the decree (6). So, also, in a

It has been pointed out (Hukm Chand, C P C 616) that though it did not appear why this provision had been omitted in the Code of 1882 it was obviously desirable to have regard to it in the preparation of plaints, and to so describe the land to which the suit relates, that there might be no difficulty in its identification. And it was held under that Code, that where a small area of land within another area was claimed, the boundaries of the land claimed ought to be given. Mahomed Ismail v Dhundur Kishore Narain, 25 W R 39 (1875), and that in a suit for a village, the plaintiff should make his plaint more precise by filing a survey map of villages. Ram Doyal Khan v Ajoodhia Ram Khan, 11 C 1 (1876). However where the boundaries of one of the plots were not given, but determined by the Amin in the course of the inquiry, it was held that the suit could not be dismissed for the defect though the plaintiff might have been returned for amendment. Jonab Ali v Golam Assad 21 W R 187 (1874). Where the plaint did not contain a specification of the quantity of land in the defendant's possession, it was held that the plaintiff might have been amended, but after the defendant had appeared the suit could not be dismissed on that ground. Syud Reza Ali v Purnanund, 6 B L R App 84 (1870), it was also held sufficient so to describe the property as to identify it. Meer Atabooddeen v Shumsooddeen, 18 W R 461 (1872). suit for obstruction to a private right of way, the plaintiff ought to show with reasonable precision and exactitude the termini of the right of way and the course which it takes (1)

It has been held that alternative reliefs inconsistent with each other may be demanded, there being nothing in the Code against the joinder of such reliefs (2) In the case cited, the plaintiff prayed to be declared the proprietor of the whole village, and, failing that, to be declared its occupancy tenant, and it was held that the plaint could not be returned for amendment though, if it became necessary to consider whether the second relief could not be granted for want of jurisdiction in a Civil Court, the suit might have to be dismissed

It is usual to insert a prayer for such further and other relief, than the specific relief claimed as the Court may hold the plaintiff entitled to A plaintiff may in such case have relief according to what he has alleged and proved The prayer for general relief will support any relief consistent with the case made in the plaint, provided that there is no surprise on the defendants and that they suffer no inconvenience by it (3) So under the general prayer the Court has granted an injunction (4) But under a prayer for general relief a plaintiff is not entitled to any relief which is inconsistent with his plaint (5) It must be considered as limited by the facts alleged and by the prayer for express relief (6) Under r 7 it is not now necessary to ask for general relief

Relief not founded on the pleadings should not, as a rule, be granted. But where substantial matters which constituted the title of all the parties are touched in the issues and have been fully put in evidence and formed the main subject of discussion and decision in the Courts, the case does not come within the rule, and a declaration of the rights of the parties, though not founded on the pleadings may be made (7)

Mesne profits—This clause does not apply where mesne profits are claimed only from the date of the suit (8)

Suit as representative (Rule 4)—Whether the suit is brought by the plaintiff in his personal or representative capacity must be determined from the statements in the plaint and not merely from the words indicative of the capacity in the title So where the averments in and the frame of a plaint are such as to affix to the plaintiff a representative character, and to show that a cause of action, if any, devolved upon him solely in that character, the omission in the title of the word "vs" between the name of the plaintiff and the words descriptive of his representative capacity, will not be deemed to negative his claiming in that capacity (1).

The plaint must show not only an actual existing interest, but also that the plaintiff has taken the steps necessary to enable him to sue. The Indian Succession Act of 1865 (sect 187) provides that no right as executor or legatee can be established without probate or letters of administration, and (sect 190) no right to an intestate's property can be established without letters of administration. As regards, however, Hindus and Mahomedans, neither of whom are governed by this Act, the general rule is that there is no law which obliges a person claiming under a will to obtain probate (2). Nor generally are letters of administration necessary. Upon this general rule, however, are engrafted two special provisions. Sect 187 has since been embodied in the Hindu Wills Act 1870, but it was excluded from the Probate Act, 1881. The result is, that sect 187 applies to cases governed by the Hindu Wills Act, but does not apply to wills executed by Mahomedans or by those Hindus who are not governed by the Hindu Wills Act, and an executor of theirs can sue without taking out probate (3). Further, no Court can pass a decree against a debtor (4) of a deceased person or proceed to execute a decree against such debtor except upon the production of probate, letters of administration, or certificate mentioned in the Succession Certificate Act (5). A certificate may be obtained in respect of particular debts due to a deceased person, as distinguished from probate or letters of administration which create a representative title to recover all the effects of such person. (1) It is not necessary for the institution of a suit that the plaintiff should have taken out a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (2) The Act however, enacts that no Court can "pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debts to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person or to any part thereof" unless he has obtained a certificate under the Act. The Courts have construed this provision so as to hold that, unless the certificate is produced, a decree may not be passed even with the defendant's consent, (3) nor in a suit in which a partner of the deceased has joined the legal representative of the latter, (4) or even when the suit is brought solely by an assignee of the legal representative (5) for the assignee is in no better position than the assignor. It is quite sufficient however that the certificate is obtained and produced in the Court after the institution of the suit during the course of the proceedings. And this is so also in the case of a suit continued by a legal representative. Administration is not necessary for revival (6). And where a certificate was granted by a Court in a native State, and a true copy of it signed by the Political Agent of the State and stamped with the court fee required by the Court Fees Act, was produced by the plaintiff but there was nothing to show that the Political Agent intended to grant a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, it was held that though a decree should not have been granted, yet time should have been allowed for the production of a proper certificate (7). It is doubtful whether the Act applies to the case of a person who has been substituted as plaintiff for one who having taken out a certificate, has died pending the suit (8). See also next paragraph.

Defendant's liability to be shown (Rule 5)—A suit against Mrs S G B, Mussoorie, which stated in the body of the plaint that she was executrix of the debtor is a suit against her as executrix (9). Where a defendant is liable as a representative of another, the fact of his liability as a representative should be stated clearly in the plaint as the effect of a sale in execution of a decree is limited to the judgment-debtor's interest, where it does not appear on the face of the proceedings that he was sued in a representative capacity, and it is only in cases where it is manifest that the judgment-debtor must have been sued as a representative, that a sale in terms of the interests of the judgment debtor is allowed to convey the interests of other persons (10).

The liability of the legal representative of a deceased debtor to be sued is absolute, and not dependent on the assets having come into his hands, it being sufficient to give a decree against him that there are assets of which he may have become possessed, though he will be liable under the decree only as a legal representative (1). A decree obtained against a brother and an aunt of the deceased debtor, and proceedings taken in execution against them, will give to the plaintiff no title to the property forming the estate, and if after the sale a person takes letters of administration to the deceased, he will be entitled to the proceeds of the sale in execution held by the Court in preference to the decree holder (2). In Baswantappa v Ranu, (3) it was held that a decree against a person who is not an heir of the deceased and even a sale in execution of such a decree, can give no right to the decree holder, or to the purchaser at the execution sale to the property which belonged to the deceased or to his real heir or legal representative. In a suit by a creditor against the estate of a deceased debtor who has died leaving a will, his heirs in intestacy do not represent his estate and the suit is bad unless the estate is represented (4). If a Hindu sues as representing a joint family he should state it in the plaint (5). And a widow if sued as representative of her deceased husband should be so described (6). And this is a general rule where a person is sued as a representative as where defendants are sued as representatives of a tarwad (7). A decree against a Hindu widow may bind a son adopted during the litigation but not brought on the record (8). On the death of one member of a joint Hindu family subject to Mitakshara law, his widow cannot represent him so as to make the joint property liable to his debts (9). As to widow's estate in moveables inherited from her husband and the liability of such property for her debts after her death see below (10).

Limitation (Rule 6)—This rule recognizes the principle that a plaintiff must not only show that he has a title, but that he has a subsisting title, which he has not lost by the prescriptive sections of the Limitation Act (11). It has been said that under this provision a plaintiff cannot take advantage of any ground of exemption from the law of limitation which has not been set up in the plaint (12). But it has been recently held that this is not an inflexible rule. If the plaintiff shows the ground of exemption, the requirements of the Code are satisfied, but the plaintiff is not precluded from taking another and an inconsistent ground to get over the bar of limitation if he believes that the latter is the true ground (1)

7. Every plaintiff shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief, which may always be given as the Court may think just, to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement

Relief—This rule is new, and is taken from English O 20, r 6. The plaintiff should always claim in the one action every kind of relief to which he is entitled—be it damages or an injunction, a declaration or a receiver, for he will not be allowed to bring a second suit on the same cause of action to obtain relief which he might have obtained in the first action (2). A Court in refusing a decree for specific performance may give a decree for the refund of the deposit with interest though the plaintiff had not sought this alternative relief (3). In a suit for the sale of mortgaged property, the Court may (in certain circumstances) pass a decree for redemption (4). As regards prayer for general relief, see notes to preceding rules.

8. Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly Separate grounds—This rule is new and is the first sentence of English O 20, r 7.

9. (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it, and, if the plaint is admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements

10. (1) The plaint shall at any stage of the suit be returned to be presented to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted.

Return of plaint.

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Procedure on returning plaint.

When plaint may be returned—The words of the rule are imperative (1) The section which this rule replaces did not, however, state at what stage of the suit the order could be made. The section itself was differently construed as applicable to any stage of the suit, and as referring merely to the time of presentation. The Calcutta High Court held that its provisions might be put in force at any stage of the hearing, and that it is not limited to the time of presentation, or before the defendant has been called on to state his case, for the objection, if to valuation, would not appear upon the face of the plaint itself, but would naturally come from the defendant. Therefore, a Court was held to have erred which, after hearing the evidence on both sides, found that the suit had been undervalued, but instead of returning the plaint dismissed the suit (2) It has thus been held that the plaint should be returned and the suit not dismissed after evidence in the first Court, (3) and after trial in the first Appellate Court or even in the High Court itself (1) The same views were entertained by the Madras High Court (2) The Bombay (3) and Allahabad (4) High Courts held, that while the section, corresponding to this rule, only contemplates the return of a plaint, should error be patent when it is first presented, yet there was nothing in the Code which forbade the return of a plaint at a later stage after the plaint has been admitted and the trial begun, or even concluded, it being a general principle that a Court, on finding, whenever that may be, that it has not jurisdiction, should decline to proceed further in a cause placed before it The shape, however, in which a suit is originally instituted is the test of jurisdiction, and a Court, after exercising jurisdiction by amending the plaint, cannot afterwards aver want of jurisdiction with regard to the plaint so amended (5) The words "at any stage of the hearing" have now been inserted and remove all doubt on the question raised in the cases cited

The former section was held, however, not to apply to High Courts in the exercise of their original jurisdiction The practice on the Original Side of the High Court at Bombay has been to return a plaint when further proceedings in a suit have been stopped for want of jurisdiction, and a plaint is not returned except when, on presentation, the Judge is of opinion that it discloses no cause of action, or, it appears to him, that the suit ought to be brought in another Court (6) A similar practice prevails in the Calcutta High Court

It was held, prior to the Limitation Act, that the date of a suit must be taken to be that on which the plaint was originally filed, and not that on which it was filed in another Court as a plaint returned to be filed in that Court (7) It has been held that where a Court returns a plaint under this rule the Court to which the plaint is afterwards presented is bound to give credit for the fee levied in the first instance (8) When a plaint has been returned the suit when presented to the proper Court is a new suit and not a continuation of the former proceeding (1)

"Should have been instituted."—In the Code of 1882 specific cases were mentioned in which the Court might return a plaint. Where, however, a lower Court rejected a suit, but refused to return a plaint on the ground that the case did not fall within the provisions of this section, it was held, on appeal, that the circumstances of the case came within clauses (a) and (c) of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, but even were it not so, in every case where the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit the proper procedure was to return the plaint (2). This is now made clear, the second set of italicized words in the first clause being substituted in lieu of the specific clauses (a), (b) (c) of the last Code.

Appeal.—An appeal lies under O XLIII r 1 (a). Under the circumstances of the case cited, (3) a party was held estopped from appealing against an order returning the plaint.

11. The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases —

Rejection of plaint. (a) where it does not disclose a cause of action,

(b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so

(c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so

(d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law

Applicability of rule.—It was held that clauses (b) and (c) did not apply to High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction (4). An opinion was also expressed that they did not apply to the High Courts in their appellate jurisdiction (5). But sect 582A was, since that decision, added to the Code of 1882 by Act VI of 1892. See now sect 119, ante.

Rejected.—Clause (a) is taken from sect 53 of the last Code. The Court must see whether a cause of action is disclosed in the plaint. Firstly as to the mode in which this is to be done. Apparently this is to be ascertained from a reading of the plaint itself. The Code of 1859 provided (6) for rejection deficit Court fee be not put in within the time allowed by the Court, the latter ought to reject the plaint. But if on the date on which the deficit Court-fee is ultimately put in, the suit is not barred the plaint may be regarded as if it was presented for the first time on that date, and the suit ought to be proceeded with (1)

"Time to be fixed"—The time fixed for making up stamp duty on a plaint may extend beyond the period of limitation for the suit. If a plaint improperly stamped is given back to have a proper stamp fixed, the date of the suit is the date on which it was filed (2) and therefore no question of limitation can arise. There is nothing in the Code to render a presentation ineffectual because the plaint was insufficiently stamped (3). The view, however, has also been expressed that the presentation of an insufficiently stamped document which if sufficiently stamped could be treated as a plaint, cannot be regarded as the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect. 4 of the Limitation Act, or of the Code (4). Therefore, when a Court fixes a time under clauses (b) or (c) of this section, it must be a time within limitation and this section does not give a Court power to extend the ordinarily prescribed period of limitation for suit (5). But in a recent case in the Bombay High Court where a memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped was filed on the last day allowed by the law of limitation and the Court refused time to pay and rejected the memorandum this order was reversed on appeal and it was held that the Court had a discretion under sect. 149, limited only by clause (c) of this rule (6). Apart from the question of limitation, the Court can extend the period originally granted after the time originally fixed has expired (7). If however the order is not complied with within the time allowed the plaint will be rejected. So a plaint was filed one day before the expiry of the period of limitation but the Court fees were deficient and the plaintiff was ordered to pay the deficient Court fees within a week. This order was complied with one day after the expiry of the time allowed and the plaint was registered. Held, that the suit was barred by limitation as the deficient Court fees were not supplied within the appointed time, and that the

decree, (7) and is therefore appealable unless there is any statutory prohition to the contrary (8) Whether there is such a prohibition depends pon the construction to be placed on sect 12 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 370), which enacts that 'every question relating to valuation' shall be ecided by the Court in which a plaint or memorandum of appeal is filed and uch decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit According o one view which has been taken it was the intention of the framers of the ode that whenever a plaint is rejected under this section and in every case alling within it there is an appeal (9) the Court Fees Act not contemplating a case when the Court refuses to hear a suit (10) Therefore when a plaint is rejected under this rule either because the relief sought is undervalued or because although the relief sought being properly valued a sufficient Court fee stamp has not been paid there is an appeal (11) This view appears to proceed on the ground that the Code has removed the finality declared by sect 12 of the Court Fees Act (12) According to another view which has been taken the operation of sect 12 of the Court Fees Act is not affected by the Code but in certain cases there is no question relating to valuation within the meaning of that section and there is therefore an appeal under sect 96 of the Code (13) It has thus been held that the Court Fees Act applies merely to decisions as to the valuation of a suit in a particular class when there is no question of the article in the schedule governing the case but that in to decide is that a question of category is not a question relating to valuation and therefore not one declared to be final appeal lies against a decision as to the class to which a suit belongs, and therefore de fortiori when a plaint is rejected or a suit dismissed, on this ground sect 96 has operation, there being no prohibition to the contrary (1) The Bombay High Court, doubting the distinction drawn in the first of the Madras cases cited, has said that where there really is a valuation to be made by a Judge in order to determine a variable proportional fee, it cannot be said that his reasoned choice amongst the several categories of suits is not as essential an element of his valuation as the subsequent arithmetical computation by which it is completed, and that where the Judge can enter on a valuation at all, the determination of the one factor, as much as of the other, must be a "question relating to valuation," and as such a question closed as between the parties by the Judge's decision (2) But in some cases under the Court Fees Act a suit is one admitting of valuation by a Judge, in other cases the valuation rests with the plaintiff. Again, in some cases the fee is ad valorem, thus admitting an inquiry by the Court, in other cases the fee is fixed. The cases therefore where a Judge can enter on a valuation are quite different from those where an inquiry is quite gratuitously entered into, either because the matter rests in the discretion of the plaintiff or because the fee is fixed (3) The Bombay High Court has therefore held that on the question whether or not any particular suit was one admitting of valuation by the Judge an appeal lies (4) An appeal has also been allowed where the Court of first instance rejected the plaint without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of affixing the proper stamp (5) In a suit for taking accounts valued at Rs 130, it was held that the appeal from the order, rejecting the plaint, lay to the District and not the High Court (6) Where excess stamps have been filed in consequence of an overvaluation of the appeal the surplus amount should be refunded (7)

Revision—A decision on valuation was, notwithstanding its declared finality, formerly held subject to revision (8)

12. Where a plaint is rejected the Judge shall record an order to that effect with the reasons for such order.

13 The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action

Where rejection of plaint does not preclude presentation of fresh plaint.

Effect of rejection.—The rule, which corresponds with sect 36 of the Code of 1859, and sect 56 of the 1st Code, says 'of its own force'. The claim may, however, of course, become, after rejection, barred by lapse of time (1) It is to be observed that the rule applies to rejection on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned—that is, the grounds in r 11. It has been held that where a plaint has been rejected for default of appearance in the Munsif's Court under sect 13, Bombay Act III of 1876, the rule of res judicata applies (2). Such a rejection is analogous rather to the procedure under O IX r 9.

Documents relied on in plaint

14 (1) Where a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint

Production of document on which plaintiff sues.

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint

List of other documents.

Document sued upon.—This is a very wise provision, its object being to prevent the dishonest fabrication of documents, (3) and to give the defendant notice of the documents relied on so as to enable him to reply to the claim (4). All documents sued upon must be produced such as pottah (5) and title deeds (6). A defendant is entitled under the Madras High Court Rules to be furnished with a copy of documents sued on which are deposited with the plaint (7). It was held in an early case (8) that all documents delivered should be received and filed with the plaint, though, if not admissible in evidence they will afterwards be rejected and returned. And the law is still the same that the mere production or filing of a document does not operate as its admission in evidence and that it will not be put on the record unless it is duly admitted in accordance with the rules prescribed.

Document relied on.—The rule requires a plaintiff to file with his plaint a list of all the documents on which he relies; that is, which he is then in a position to know to be essential to his case, whether in his possession or power, or not (1) These words will therefore [as they now expressly state, and was formerly held (2) under the corresponding sect. 39, clause (1) of the Code of 1859] include all the documents the plaintiff intends to use in evidence, and not only those which are the essence of the claim and on which the suit is based, (3) which are provided for by the first paragraph. They do not include, however, documents tendered merely for comparison of handwriting (4)

Penalty.—The penalty for not producing these documents when called on to do so is not the rejection of the plaint, but that prescribed in r. 18, viz not being able to put them in without the special leave of the Judge (5)

Inspection.—The Bombay High Court has held that it has not been the practice to order the plaintiff to give inspection of documents other than those relied on in the plaint, and included in the list of documents annexed to the plaint as required by this rule, till after the written statement is filed, but that this is not, however, an inflexible rule in all cases There may be cases where it would be imperative to order the plaintiff to produce and give inspection to the defendant of a document which he may not have mentioned in the plaint or enumerated in the list of documents annexed thereto (6)

(2) The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification, and, after examining and comparing the copy with the original, shall, if it is found correct, certify it to be so and return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed

Production—It was held that sect 39 of Act VIII of 1859, which corresponds with this rule did not require the Court to inspect the document but only that it should be marked for identification and the copy compared with the original (1) If the book is not produced before the suit is registered but a day is fixed for its production, the Court cannot even on a contumacious non-production of it reject the plaint the only effect of the non production being that provided in the next rule as to the inadmissibility of the book in evidence at any subsequent stage (2)

18 (1) A document which ought to be produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory

Scope of rule—This rule is intended not to prevent a person from commencing his suit until he has collected all his documentary evidence but merely to place a check upon the fabrication of evidence by excluding documents not produced in the first instance unless a good and sufficient reason is given for their non production at that time and therefore if a document is not produced or entered in the list the plaint itself cannot be rejected (3)

"Shall not"—The words are imperative, (1) and prohibit a plaintiff from using any document which he ought to have, but did not produce or enter, (2) unless the Court exercises the discretion given to it under this rule (3) But, as already stated, if a document is not produced or entered, the plaint itself cannot be rejected (4)

"Leave."—Where documents were referred to an Ameen to inspect, and were ultimately acted upon by the Court, this was held to be abundant proof of "sanction," the term used in the Code of 1859 (5) It is a sufficient reason for the grant of leave that the plaintiff was in ignorance of the existence of the document when the plaint was filed, (6) that the document was with the Collector, to whom it had been sent for the purpose of being stamped; (7) or that the Court is satisfied of its bond fide nature and reliability, (8) or if there is no doubt of the existence of the document at the date of suit (9) The question of reception is one of discretion, which will not be interfered with on appeal (10) Where, however, Musra papers which formed the very essence of the action were not filed or produced, the Court was held to have been justified in rejecting them when subsequently tendered in evidence (11)

"Received in evidence."—Merely giving a document to a witness to refresh his memory is not receiving it in evidence, for a document may be so used which is not evidence in itself (12) Such a document is therefore expressly excluded from the section

Appeal—The reception of evidence afterwards with leave is not a ground of appeal (13) The admission is conclusive even when no reasons are given and the Appellate Court cannot refuse to consider the admitted documents as evidence, (14) though of course, the Appeal Court may attach such weight to the document as it thinks proper, or say whether it ought to be treated as evidence as against particular parties to the suit (15) But the refusal to receive a document may be a good ground of appeal (16)

"The defendant"—The rule has been reconstructed and shortened. It formerly commenced "The parties". Ordinarily this was the defendant. But a plaintiff may, after he has filed a plaint, put in a written statement, or it may be called for by the Court under r 9, post. A Court has no authority to receive a written statement in a suit from one who is not a party, or to permit such a person to appear at the hearing (1). A third party will not be allowed to file a statement for a plaintiff or defendant who has neglected to do so himself (2). But if the parties are present in person or by pleader, the mere fact that the defendant has not filed a written statement does not warrant the trial of the suit ex parte (3). As to the presumption of authenticity, see below (4). The corresponding section to this in the Code of 1859 was sect 120.

"At or before the first hearing"—See notes to r 9, post. Under the Code of 1859 the word "before" did not occur, and it was therefore held that the admission of written statements on several dates was wrong (5). Written statements may now be received at any time, provided it is before the first hearing or by order of Court under rr 6 and 9. Reasonable time should be given to a defendant to file his written statement (6).

"Present"—The word formerly used was 'tender'. The production of the written statement at the trial was held (7) to be the tendering under in Indian Courts have not hitherto been construed with the same strictness as pleadings in English Courts, (1) and therefore a mere omission to deny an allegation has not always been taken as an admission of it so as to dispense the plaintiff from proof of the fact alleged (2). Stricter rules have now been introduced (see O VIII r 5). As against the party affected his statement primarily operates by way of admission and not estoppel (3). If a party wishes to give evidence of a fact of which he became aware after he has filed his plaint or written statement in the case may be he should file a written statement or supplementary written statement before the hearing (4). If leave is given to file a further written statement on or before a particular date, it will not, if filed after that date, be ordered to be taken off the file if the opposite party has delayed to make an application until the trial (5). Where an additional written statement sought to be admitted was inconsistent with the original written statement, the Court said that in such cases there was a difference between an application by the plaintiff and by the defendant. The plaintiff would not be allowed to file such a statement. It allowed the filing on payment of all costs, observing, however, that the supplementary written statement would rightly be the subject of strong comment at the hearing (6). The Code, it was held, did not contemplate the filing by a plaintiff of a written statement after seeing the written statement of the defendant and by way of rejoinder thereto (7), but rr 6 and 9 refer to written statements in answer to claims of set-off. A written statement, whether it be called for by the Court after the first hearing or is filed by the parties under this rule at or before the first hearing need not be stamped (8).

2. The defendant must raise by his pleadings all matters
New facts must be specially pleaded which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or facts showing illegality.

Specially pleaded—‘It often is not enough for a party to deny an allegation in his opponent's pleading, he must go further and dispute its validity in law, or set up some affirmative case of his own, in answer to it. In the technical language of the old pleaders, it will not serve his turn to merely traverse the allegation, he must confess and avoid. Thus, if the plaintiff sets up a contract which was in fact made, it will be idle for the defendant merely to traverse (i.e. deny) the making of the contract, he should confess (i.e. admit) that he made the contract, but avoid the effect of that confession by pleading the Statute of Frauds or Limitations, or setting up that the contract has been duly performed or rescinded. A defendant, however, is not bound to admit an allegation which he seeks thus to avoid, or which he alleges to be bad in law. He may at the same time deny its truth, so long as he makes it quite clear how much he is denying. He may, indeed, take all three courses at once, the allegation may be traversed in point of fact, and objected to as bad in law, and at the same time collateral matter may be pleaded to destroy its effect. Any number of defences may now be pleaded together in the same action without leave, although they are obviously inconsistent" (1). A defendant may "raise by his defence, without leave, as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, subject only to the provision" (2) contained in O VI r 16, as to striking out embarrassing matter. And a defence is not embarrassing merely because it contains inconsistent averments (3). But all these various defences must be clearly and distinctly pleaded and the facts upon which each is grounded should be stated separately. As a rule each defence should form a separate paragraph. The defendant must make it quite clear what line of defence he is adopting. Any plea which wears a doubtful aspect will be struck out as embarrassing (4). Above all special defences of this kind must not be mixed up with traverses or insinuated into pleas which deny the facts alleged by the plaintiff (5). "The office of a traverse is to contradict, not to excuse or justify the act complained of, its object is to compel the plaintiff to prove the truth of the allegation traversed, not to dispute its sufficiency in point of law. All matter in confession and avoidance, all matter justifying or excusing the act complained of must be specially and separately pleaded, so must all matters which go to show that the contract sued on is illegal or invalid, or which, if not expressly stated, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the preceding pleadings. And no evidence of such matters can be given at the trial if they be not expressly pleaded. This is only fair play" (6).

3. It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth, except damages introduced by the Judicature Act. Formerly the defendant was allowed to plead what was called "the general issue," i.e. "that he was not guilty," or "that he never was indebted as alleged," both of which were conclusions of mixed law and fact. Now a defendant may no longer deny generally the facts alleged in the Statement of Claim. He must take each matter which is alleged against him separately, and either admit it, or deny it, or say that he does not admit it. "It is not merely denial which is meant, the rule covers non admission" as well. Whether the defendant says "I deny" or "I do not admit," he is equally bound to deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (1). This is the general principle which now governs every traverse. And in order to make this general principle quite clear, special instances are given in subsequent rules (English) (2). "In actions for a debt or liquidated demand in money, comprised in O 3, r 6 (English), a mere denial of the debt shall be inadmissible" (English O 21, r 1). "In actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or cheques, a defence in denial must deny some matter of fact eg the drawing, making, endorsing, accepting, presenting or notice of dishonour of the bill or note" (English O 21, r 2). "In actions for goods bargained and sold, or sold and delivered, the defence must deny the order or contract, the delivery, or the amount claimed, in an action for money had and received it must deny the receipt of the money, or the existence of those facts which are alleged to make such receipt by the defendant, a receipt to the use of the plaintiff" (English O 21, r 3).

"Deal specifically"—What is meant by dealing specifically with an allegation of fact? It means that the party pleading must make it perfectly clear how much he admits and how much of it he denies. If he does this the Court will not quarrel with the phrase which he uses. He must not deny en bloc everything alleged against him. A defendant may not now plead "that he denies specifically every allegation contained in the Statement of Claim (or plaint)." Still, in order to deny specifically it is not necessary to write out every sentence in the Statement of Claim and traverse it in detail. It is sufficient when dealing with matters of inducement or any other allegations which do not go to the gist of the action, to plead that "the defendant denies each of the allegations contained in paragraph 8." This will have the same effect as copying out the whole paragraph and constantly inserting "not." But when the pleader comes to those allegations which are of the gist of the action he must be more precise. He must plead "The defendant never agreed as alleged," or "never spoke or published any of the said words," or "never made any such representation as is alleged in paragraph 2 of the Statement of Claim" (3).

Sometimes, in order to obey the rule and to deal specifically with every allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth it is necessary for the defendant to place on the record two or more distinct traverses to one and the same allegation. Thus, if he pleads, "The defendant never broke or entered the plaintiff's close" he thereby admits that the close in question belongs to the plaintiff. If he intends at the trial to deny that the plaintiff owned or possessed that close, he must say so distinctly and in a separate plea. If he wishes to raise both defences—he to deny the act complained of, and also the plaintiff's title to the land—he must put on the record two separate paragraphs e.g. 1 “The defendant never broke or entered the said close” 2 “The said close is not the close of the plaintiff” Merely to deny an allegation in terms will often be ambiguous and therefore evasive. The pleader must always answer “the point of substance” alleged against him, otherwise his pleading will be deemed evasive (r 19, corresponding with next rule). And, if an allegation be made against him, with details of time and place, etc., he must deny the substance of the allegation and not confine himself to denying it along with those inessential details (1).

“Each allegation of fact”—Only allegations of fact should be denied, matter of law should not be traversed. And the defendant should never traverse matter not alleged against him. He should be content to answer what is laid against him in the Statement of Claim and not trouble about any other matters which the plaintiff might have, but has not raised (2). Moreover, it is no part of his duty, when drafting his defence, to anticipate what the plaintiff may hereafter allege in his reply (3).

“Except damages”—“No denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed, or their amount, but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases, unless expressly admitted” (English O 21, r 4). This rule applies to damage of all kinds whether special or general and whether the alleged damage is part of the cause of action or not (4).

4. Where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint, he must not do so evasively, but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof, or else set out how much he received. And if an allegation is made with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.

Evasion—The pleader must deal specifically with every allegation of fact made by his opponent—that is he must either admit it frankly or deny it boldly. Any half admission or half denial is evasive. Thus a defence in these words, “The terms of the arrangement were never definitely agreed upon as alleged,” was held evasive. Jessel M R, said “The defendant is bound to deny that any agreements or any terms of arrangement were ever come to if that is what he means, if he does not mean that, he should say that that

"Point of substance"—Again, a traverse often becomes evasive if it follows too closely the precise language of the allegation traversed. Thus, in Tildesley v Harper (2) the Statement of Claim alleged that the defendant offered the plaintiff a bribe of £500. The defendant pleaded, following the exact words of the Statement of Claim, that "the defendant had never offered the plaintiff a bribe of £500," which would have been true if he had offered £400 or £499, or any other sum. Fry, J., held that the substance was that a bribe had been offered and that that was not fairly or substantially denied. The defendant should have pleaded that he never offered "a bribe of £500 or any other sum." Leave to amend was eventually given (3).

"Along with those circumstances"—That is to say, if the plaintiff alleges that he "paid the defendant £500 at 35, Fleet Street, on March 3rd, 1904, in the presence of A B," it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead "The plaintiff did not pay the defendant £500 at 35, Fleet Street, on March 3rd, 1904, in the presence of A B." For he might have paid the defendant £500 on another day or in another place, or when A B was not present. And these details are only "circumstances," they are not of the essence of the allegation. It is sufficient and proper for the defendant to answer the point of substance and to plead "The plaintiff never paid the defendant £500 or any other sum" (4).

5. Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability :

Provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission.

Answering opponent's pleading—The rules of O VI VIII have defined both the manner in which each party should state his own case, and also prescribe how he should answer his opponent's pleading. The main object of the latter rules (5) is "to secure that each party in turn should fully admit or clearly deny every material allegation made against him so that they may promptly arrive at an issue. With this object three general principles are declared—

1 It is not sufficient to deny generally the matters alleged by the opposite party, but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (O VIII r 3).

2 When a party in any pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party, he must not do so evasively but answer the point of substance (O VIII r 4).

3 Every allegation of fact in any pleading shall be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted (O VIII r 5)

This rule is taken from English O 19, r 13, but the Legislature has modified the rigour of the rule by providing, in accordance with sect 58 of the Evidence Act, that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who relies on it

Admissions—A defendant ought not to deny plain and acknowledged facts which it is neither to his interest nor in his power to disprove (1) Where allegations are denied or not admitted, which ought, in the opinion of the Judge, to have been admitted, he may make such order as to any extra costs occasioned thereby as shall be just (English O 21, r 9) The discretion under this proviso indicates that the effect of a failure to deny in a written statement an allegation of fact in a plaint does not necessarily amount to a proof in the plaintiff's favour (2) It is in the discretion of the Court to allow or disallow an application for amendment of a plaint (3) There is no difference in effect between denying and not admitting an allegation (4) The distinction usually observed is that a party denies any matter which, if it has occurred, would have been within his own knowledge, while he refuses to admit matters which are alleged to have happened behind his back But whether he denies or does not admit, he must make it perfectly clear how much he disputes and how much he admits (5)

6. (2) The written statement shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in respect both of the original claim and of the set off but this shall not affect the lien, upon the amount decreed, of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree

This rule deals with the cross claim known as legal set off, and which is a claim or demand which the defendant in an action sets off against the claim of the plaintiff, as being his due, whereby he may extinguish the plaintiff's demand, either in whole or in part, according to the amount of the set off (1) It is to be distinguished from a plea of payment (2) The defence of payment does not admit that the demand sued upon is just, it attacks the plaintiff's claim and urges matter to defeat or at least reduce it on account of some matter connected therewith But set off arises out of a transaction extrinsic of the plaintiff's cause of action, being a mutual independent claim Again, while set off is the creation of law, payment is an act of the defendant's consent, express or implied (3)

There is a distinction, also, as regards the mode of pleading A set off is a cross debt or claim, on which a separate action may be sustained Payment can only be the subject of defence to another's action Set off may be pleaded or not, at the defendant's pleasure Failure to do so will not bar a suit by him for the amount of the set off, as is the case with the defence of payment Set off must be specially pleaded, and the facts constituting it proved by the defendant as if he were himself the plaintiff to another action (4) Recoupment, which is the keeping back of something due because there is an equitable reason to withhold it, is also to be distinguished both from payment and set off It can only extinguish the plaintiff's demand in whole or in part, and can never lead to a decree in the defendant's favour (5)

Common law did not recognize any right of set off A defendant who had any cross claim could not raise it in the plaintiff's action He had to bring a cross action Legal set off is the creation of Statute, that is, to be allowed a set off it must be shown that there is a statutory right (6) Successive but limited Statutes were enacted to remove the defect and inconvenience arising from this non recognition and consequent circuitry of action and the right to plead a set off was first conferred by 2 Geo II c 22 A set off was allowed in certain cases (7) It was a defence proper to the plaintiff's action, defeating or reducing a plaintiff's claim It was a shield and not a sword (8) It was allowed only in a limited number of cases and when established its effect was to show that the plaintiff could not recover at

Set off, however, had long been, prior to the enactment of sect 121 of the Code of 1859, recognized. A rule of legal set off in India is contained in this rule which is only an amplified version of sect 121 of the Code of 1859, as that section was construed by the Indian Courts. It has, however, been held that that section and the section in the last Code corresponding with the present rule only laid down a rule of procedure in regard to cases of set off but were not exhaustive of those cases, and that it was not intended to take away any rights of set off, whether legal or equitable, which parties would have independently of it (1). And it is well settled that Indian Courts may allow equitable set off in cases in which Equity Courts in England allow the same, even though such cases do not fall within the language of the present rule (2). Cross claims are thus in this country limited to cases of set off (as distinguished from counterclaim) whether such set off is legal or equitable. It is, however, to be observed that under this rule a set off is treated as a plaint in a cross action so that the defendant may get a decree for it, whereas, as already pointed out, set off, prior to the Judicature Act, could only reduce or extinguish the plaintiff's claim, and a separate action would have had to be brought to recover the amount of any excess beyond the plaintiff's claim.

In pleading a set off the defendant assumes the position of a plaintiff and is required to prove the same facts which he would be required to prove if he had brought an original action on his demand. The plaintiff cannot, by taking a dismissal of the suit, avoid an inquiry into the merits of the set off. Vide post. In a suit for rent due on a mokurari tenure held by the defendant, the defence was that he was entitled to set off against the plaintiff's claim a certain sum due to him on a decree passed by the Privy Council between the same parties. It was held that the set off could be entertained and inquired into, the decree of the Privy Council not being under execution and sect 216 of the last Code being inapplicable to the case (3).

The present rule does not of course, affect the special provisions relating to set off in proceedings in insolvency (4) and in the winding up of a company. A cross claim cannot be set up as a defence, except when it arises out of the very transaction sued upon, and is in the nature of a set off. Fakir Chandra Dutta v Gisborne, 8 C W N 174 (1903), where a set off was disallowed as being based upon a separate transaction. of limited companies (1) which have been embodied in the Acts governing these proceedings in India. As to the Transfer of Property Act, (2) and the special cross claim (3) provided for by sect. 95, see below. As to the decree when set off is allowed, and effect of decree as to sum awarded to defendant, see O XX. r. 19, p. 11.

Equitable set off.—It has already been stated (4) that this rule does not take away any rights of equitable set off (5) which parties would have independent of it. The statutory rule of set-off is absolute in its terms, and where a case is within it a set off is given as of right, but equitable set-off, from its very nature, depends on the equities of each particular case, and therefore on the discretion of the Court. It cannot be claimed as of right, and will be allowed only where the Court deems it equitable to allow it in any case, (6) though the Court will be guided in the exercise of its discretion by the decisions of the English Equity Courts, which have been recognized in this country (7). Equitable set-off exists not only in cases of mutual debts and credits, but also where the cross demands arise out of one and the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances as to make it inequitable that the plaintiff should recover, and the defendant be driven to a cross suit (8). Thus unascertained damages for partial breach of a contract may be set off in answer to a claim for money due on that contract, so far as it was fulfilled, as the cross demands in such a case are connected with the same transaction, and arise out of one and the same contract, (9) and in a suit for arrears of salary there has been allowed to be set off the value of goods and property damaged, lost or not accounted for, by the plaintiff (10). under the defendant were credited to the plaintiff on account of rent due to him from the defendant, it was held that the plea was one of payment and of account and set-off in a general sense, and not one of set off under sect 111 of the last Code (now represented by rule 6 of this Order) (1)

"Suit for the recovery of money."—Thus no set-off may be claimed in a suit for property, or for a declaratory decree or injunction, (2) nor is a suit for moveable property one for the recovery of money, even though a money value be assigned in the plaint to the property, and the decree may contain a provision of an alternative character for the payment of the money by the defendant in case of default in the delivery of the property. It has been doubted but not decided, whether a suit for an account can be held to be for recovery of money within the meaning of this section, (3) but a suit for dissolution of partnership, with a prayer that the balance due should be paid, is within the section (4). It is to be observed that there is a difference in the wording of the rule as regards the plaintiff's demand and the defendant's set off. The latter must be of an ascertained sum. The suit, however, need not be for an ascertained sum, the words "recovery of money" including claims for unliquidated damages and mesne profits. See illustration (c) to the rule (5). Even in the case of a set off not falling within the provisions of this section, the claims must both be for money, as is indicated by the terms, O XX r 19, post

"Claims to set off"—A defendant cannot be permitted to carry on two suits for the same demand at the same time and using a demand in set off is a bar to a subsequent suit for that demand. A defendant may, however, if has been submitted, claim a set off of a demand during the pendency of a suit for the same demand (6).

"Ascertained sum"—The word 'debt' was used in the Code of 1859. It was held restricted to an ascertained sum and to exclude unliquidated damages and mesne profits as being damages (7). Under the last and present Code the matter is clear, both from the use of the word "ascertained" and the addition of illustration (c) to the section. The sum sought to be set off under this rule must be a sum ascertained, that is, liquidated, and not damages undetermined,(1) such as a liquidated amount due under a bond,(2) or a debt payable according to an award (3) The sum to be set off must be ascertained before the set off is claimed, and it is not sufficient that it may be ascertained on inquiry (4) The claim is sufficiently certain if it is capable of being reduced to a certainty by simple calculation (5) A sum decreed is ascertained and may be set off (6) No decree by way of set off can be awarded to a defendant for a sum to be ascertained on a settlement of accounts, even though the result of the suit shows that nothing is due to the plaintiff (7) There is nothing in this rule to restrict the set-off to claims in respect of the same matter which forms the subject of the plaintiff's suit The rule allows a set off of every ascertained sum of money, and no restriction should be placed on that right which is not to be found in the section itself Though the restrictions on equitable set off of unascertained sums are proper, there is no reason, as there is no authority, for grafting them on to the law in regard to ascertained sums (8) While it is a general principle of set off at law that the amount claimed should be certain and ascertained, and that an unliquidated demand may not be set off even if it should arise on the same contract on which the plaintiff's demand is based, this is not so in the case of equitable set off This may be allowed in the case of unliquidated damages, that is, an amount which can only be ascertained by the decision of the Court (9) where the respective claims of the parties arise out of one and the same transaction (10)

"Legally recoverable"—Set off is allowed to prevent cross actions. It was not intended to give new rights, except to the extent of giving facilities for the enforcing of rights which are already enforceable in an action, and it has always been accordingly held that a set-off can only be successfully pleaded when an action could have been maintained for the same debt (1). As the sum must be legally recoverable, a demand arising out of a transaction which is legally invalid cannot be the subject of a set-off. A defendant therefore cannot recover in respect of a claim without cause of action, (2) or barred under sect 11, ante (3), or O II r 2, or by the Limitation Act, (4) or based on a decree incapable of being enforced, (5) or in respect of an infant's debt (6). In a suit for arrears of rent the amount of a new road cess paid by the defendant was held not to have been payable by the plaintiff under the terms of the lease as a prior income tax was, and therefore not recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff, and thus not liable to be set off (7). In short, the claim sought to be set off must be one upon which a separate action could have been maintained. The money set off must be of course recoverable from the plaintiff, not from any one else, and it must be due to the defendant, who cannot set up a right subsisting in a third party. The defendant's right of set off of a demand against a person is not affected by the circumstance that the suit is brought not by that person but by an assignee of his. This is so, even where the assignment is by a sale in execution of a decree against him (8). A cannot set off against a claim made by B, in respect of separate dealings between him and A a debt due from a firm consisting of a father and two sons, one of whom is B (9). Neither can a defendant set off against a claim of money any portion of an amount in respect of which the defendant, jointly with another, not a party to the suit, can claim contribution from the plaintiff, (10). Where in a suit by a company in liquidation it was argued that the defendant's claim was not legally recoverable as his remedy was only proof in liquidation, where probably he would recover not the whole of the ascertained sum but only a dividend it was held that the words "legally recoverable" had no reference to the ability of the debtor to pay the demand in full, and that a sum was legally recoverable though in the result the creditor must be satisfied with a dividend (11).

plaintiff set off the debt due to him against the quality of their rights. The debt should not be due to and from the same person but in the same capacity. A party may act in different characters, and his private will be set off against his public character. So in a suit by a public officer in his official character, the defendant cannot set off a claim against him personally, and vice versa. Similarly, a claim which the defendant has against the plaintiff individually cannot be set off against a claim due to plaintiff as trustee. The set-off on account of the special nature of a trust is restricted to a claim due to him individually against a claim due by him as trustee (1). An account due as manager cannot be set off against a personal liability (2). A legal representative of a deceased does not fill the same character as regards his own debts and the debts of the deceased. See illustrations (a) and (b) to rule. An executor or administrator, however, fills the same character as regards debts due to and from the deceased, and so in a suit against the representative as such the latter may set off all claims against the plaintiff which his testator or intestate may have set off against him, and which, therefore, must have been due to the testator or intestate (3). Where in the case of a company in liquidation each liability arose prior to the liquidation, though the amounts were ascertained after it, both parties were held to fill the same character (4). A set-off was disallowed where the decree which was sought to be set off was a decree not against the plaintiffs but against third parties beneficiaries of the plaintiffs (5).

Written statement.—The rule is that a set-off, if claimed, must be specially pleaded. If however, the particulars are sufficiently set out, it is not necessary that it should be specifically stated that they are alleged by way of set-off. The written statement contemplated by this section is deemed a plaint for the sum sought to be set off, and must be stamped accordingly (6). But these cases have been dissented from by Banerjee, J (7). Where the defendant did not raise an issue as to set off in the first Court the Privy Council declined to entertain it (8).

Jurisdiction in cases of set off.—The amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction (9). This proviso was in the last Code contained in the second paragraph which is now omitted. It has been transferred to the first clause. The entire amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the limits of jurisdiction, the excess of such amount over the plaintiff's claim, for which the defendant may ask a decree in his favour, not being material in the question of jurisdiction (1). And where a Court has two different pecuniary jurisdictions, the jurisdiction referred to in this rule will be that in which the suit is being taken cognizance of. Thus, where a Subordinate Judge, with unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction, was invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and in the exercise of that jurisdiction took cognizance of a suit, it was held that the claim for set-off in it, of an amount exceeding the pecuniary limit of the Small Cause Court jurisdiction, could not be inquired into by him (2). A question might arise whether a Court could entertain a set off, a claim for which, though within its pecuniary jurisdiction, was otherwise not within it. It has been held that the rule does not refer to material jurisdiction in any way, or contemplate a case in which a suit for the amount claimed to be set off is beyond the jurisdiction on account of its nature, as may be the case in some Provinces as regards claims for amounts for rent of agricultural lands (3). It has, however, been also held generally that no Court can entertain a set off if it would not have had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, if one had been brought to recover the money sought to be set off (4). And see last paragraph.

Effect of set off—The set-off is to have the effect of a plant (5) in a cross suit, and being treated as a cross action it is not affected by anything which relates solely to the plaintiff's claim. It is not necessary that the plaintiff's demand should actually exist. Thus the defendant may deny the plaintiff's claim, and also plead a set off and may obtain a decree for it, although no sum may be found due to the plaintiff (6). And if a certain amount is found due to the plaintiff but a greater sum is found due to the defendant, a decree will be made in favour of the defendant for the recovery of the balance (7). And it has been held that the same rule applies in the case of a set off which is not within the purview of this rule (8).

An appeal will lie to the same Court as if the sum had been demanded in a separate suit (9). So long as set-off was deemed a mere defence the plaintiff could at any stage of the suit put an end to it by putting an end to the suit itself. It fell with the action to which it was an adjunct. However, as affirmative relief can now be given on a claim for set off, the plaintiff cannot, by refusing to proceed with the case, defeat the defendant's right to recover under his set off (1). As to lien, (2) the rule seems to assume that it is usual for a decree to make costs payable to the pleader instead of to the party (3).

Rules relating to written statements—This clause is new, see notes to other rules of same order. Court fees must be paid on set off claimed in written statement (4). Where the case was not strictly one of set off under the former section, so as to make applicable to it the provisions of the third paragraph of that section (corresponding with the second clause of this rule), it was held that the written statement need not be stamped as a plaint (5).

9. No pleading subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same [s.]

"No pleading," etc—And to sect 112 of the last Code shortened and remodelled. This rule corresponds to sect 122 of the Code of 1859. By r 1, ante, written statements must be filed before or at the first hearing, by which is meant that they must be filed before the parties have entered upon their case (6). This is subject to r 6. Accordingly an application to file a supplemental written statement after the case had begun was refused (7). Where a written statement was improperly admitted, but without prejudice to the opposite party, the Court refused to interfere in appeal (8).

"Court may at any time require"—This may be done at any time. In the Code of 1859 occurred the words "before final judgment" and it was accordingly held to mean that written statements could be called for only by the first Court and before judgment (9). The written statement may be called for from either plaintiff or defendant. The Court was held justified in calling for a written statement which did not add to or vary the plaintiff's claim, but

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non appearance

1 On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court

"Day fixed"—This refers to the day fixed for the first hearing of the suit (1) An appearance under the Code is not the same thing as appearance as it used to be in the Supreme Court and is now in the High Court where the English mode of entering appearance by attorney is recognized and according to the practice of the High Court there is power to order a case to be set down at once in the general cause list if the defendant enters appearance by his attorney before the time for appearance fixed in the summons has expired In any case a Court could by consent and on the application of the defendant issue a new summons altering the day for appearance (2) When however dealing with the question of appearance as that term is used in the Code for the purpose of determining whether the provisions in this Order apply an objection by the defendant before the day fixed for hearing to the plaintiff's application for attachment before judgment is not an appearance on that date (3)

Application of these provisions—These provisions are from their very nature and language applicable to suits in their initial stage and not to proceedings taken in execution of decrees made in those suits It was however, at one time erroneously considered that sect 647 of the Code (now 141) applied to execution proceedings as being proceedings of a miscellaneous character and by virtue of that section these provisions were so far as was practicable made applicable to such proceedings In order to overrule such decisions sect 647 was amended by Act VI of 1892 by the addition of an Explanation declaring that that section did not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits The application of sect 647 having thus been prohibited to applications for execution, it was held that there was nothing in the Code as so amended which authorized a Court to apply at the stage of execution any of the procedure enacted in the corresponding Chapter of the last Code (1) But that though this was so the Court might, where necessary, act under the inherent powers it possesses to make such just orders as are necessary for the proper disposal of the work given to it (2)

Appearance.—The word “appear” must be interpreted in the same sense in all the following rules as in other parts of this Code in which it occurs such as O XVII r 2, post, (3) and whether the plaintiff or defendant is spoken of (4) What then is appearance? If there is none, the judgment is ex parte It has been said that in most cases the question whether a decree is ex parte or not is a question of fact (5) It is necessary, however, to ascertain the law governing those facts O IX r 1 indicates what is meant by appearance, namely, the actual attendance in the Court house of the party in person or by pleader or recognized agent, who, under O III r 1, must be duly appointed to act on his behalf, or by a co party under O 1 r 12 Under the terms of O III r 1, an appearance by a recognized agent is equivalent to an appearance in person, unless the Court directs personal appearance Plaintiffs must all be represented by the same pleader, or set of pleaders, and cannot be severally represented by different pleaders (6) Defendants can, of course, be severally represented, though where such several representation is unnecessary, as where the interests are not in conflict, the Court will not allow more than one set of costs Sect 64 of the last Code, read with Form No 117 of the Fourth Schedule of that Code, explained, it was held, the nature of the defendant's appearance in obedience to the summons to appear and answer He was to appear in person or by a duly authorized pleader, duly instructed and able to answer all material questions, or who shall be accompanied by some other person (which includes a recognized agent) able to answer all such questions He was further given notice that in default of his appearance—that is, appearance in either of the ways specified—the suit would be determined in his absence, that is, under this Chapter of the last Code Thus, the appearance mentioned in that Chapter meant attendance in person or by an authorized co party or by a pleader “duly instructed,” etc or by a recognized agent who intended to appear and did in fact appear for the party, whether he was able or not to answer all material questions (7) The test of whether a defendant has or has not “appeared” is whether such of the requirements of the summons as relate to appearance have or have not been complied with (8) On this principle it is held that when a pleader attends who is not duly instructed in the suit he does not represent the defendant who in such case does not appear (1) Inasmuch as appearance is attendance in the Court house on the day fixed for hearing, it is clear that what is done before the day fixed in the summons and that the mere filing of a takalutnama is not appearing in person or by pleader, (2) nor is an 'appearance,' in the technical sense as used on the original side of the Court, by the entry of the name of the attorney on the record, nor was there appearance where the defendant had filed a takalutnama and objected to attachment issuing before judgment, but did not appear as directed by the summons, nor on a further date when the case was decided (3) Nor is merely putting in a written statement, but when the case comes on not attending in person or by pleader an appearance (4)

Nextly, the personal attendance at the day of hearing must be in accordance with law. If a person is ordered to attend in person appearance can only be effected in this way, and if he does not, but sends a pleader, he will be considered absent, and there is no appearance. See O IX r 12 post (5) If there be no such directions he may appear either in person or by a co-plaintiff or co defendant under O 1 r 12 or by a pleader or recognized agent under O III r 1. They must however represent him and therefore the appearance of an unauthorized pleader is not an appearance by the party (6) There is of course no difficulty when there is no actual attendance by any of these persons nor indeed, where there is attendance except in the cases to which reference will be made. If a party attends in person or by pleader there is appearance, though he may neither have filed a written statement (7) nor made a verbal one (8) If the Court has refused to receive a written statement but the pleader attends when issues are settled and cross examines witnesses there is an appearance (9) It has even been held that where a decree is passed on a solehnamah and the defendant alleges that it is a forgery and that she had no notice of the suit it is not ex parte (10) But this has been dissented from it being held that the defendant is entitled to go behind the decree and to show that it is in fact ex parte and that the fact that the decree appears to be based on a compromise impugned as a forgery does not make sect 108 (now O IX r 13) post inapplicable (11) The appearance more over is to answer and if an application by a party who attends for leave to be heard is rejected and the defendant is not heard then the judgment is ex parte (12) Where both parties appeared and the case was gone through in their presence and nothing remained to be done except to hear arguments, the case was held not to be one which could be dealt with as for default of appearance (1)

Contest has mainly arisen where either the party or his pleader or recognized agent does actually attend in court, but applies for an adjournment, and, when the adjournment is refused, withdraws from court. So far as these provisions are concerned, the only question is appearance or non appearance. If the party has appeared in either of the ways specified, viz in person or by authorized co party, or by authorized pleader "duly instructed and able to answer," etc., or by a recognized agent who intends to appear and does in fact appear for the party, then he has appeared, and it is immaterial for what purpose he has appeared or what action he has taken on such appearance. If, therefore, a party is present in person and personally applies for an adjournment, he has appeared, the purpose for which he appeared, or the action which he took on appearance, is immaterial (2). Appearance, however, by a pleader does not, as in the case of a party, mean mere presence. He must also be duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. Where, therefore, the party is absent, and an application for adjournment is made on his behalf by a pleader, who has no other instructions, and whose functions are at an end when the adjournment is refused, in that case the party has not appeared. If, therefore, the pleader in such case retires after an unsuccessful application for adjournment the decree passed is ex parte (3). In a recent case, after the plaintiff's case had been closed and the defendant's case partly heard, counsel for the defendant applied for an adjournment, mainly on the ground that two of his witnesses had not arrived and this was granted, but he was warned that if

Ramchandra Pandurang v Madhav Purushottam, 16 B 23, 24 (1891) [If he (pleader) had said that he had received no instructions the Court could no doubt have held that there was no proper appearance] As was pointed out in Soonderlal v Goorprasad, 23 B at p 417 the headnote in Rampertab Mull v Jukeeram Agurwallah, 23 C 901 (1896) is quite misleading. The Court did not, however actually decide the question whether or not the case fell within s 102 of the last Code but dismissed the application on the merits. Where, however, a pleader has instructions, but says the brief came to him too late to prepare himself, this may be a good reason for adjournment but is not, it has been said, a default of appearance. Churanji Lal v Kundan Lal 20 A 24 (1898), Id. Ramchandra v Madhav, 16 B 27 (1891) and Id. from Shibendra v Kuno 12 C 605 (1886). they did not appear on the following day any application for a further adjournment must be supported by proper materials. He was present on the following day, but without the two witnesses and his application for a further adjournment was refused on the ground that no proper reasons for it had been made out. On this he withdrew, and the case was then decided on its merits. When he afterwards applied to have the decree set aside ex parte it was submitted that at the adjourned hearing he had not appeared but had only applied for a further adjournment (1) and that therefore sect. 157 of the last Code (now represented by O VIII r 2) became applicable (2). It was held that the Court had no power to make an order under sect. 108 of the last Code (now represented by O IX r 13) combined with sect. 157 of the last Code and that his remedy was an appeal against the refusal of his application for further adjournment (3).

Lastly there is the case in which the party being absent the recognized agent is present. If the latter accompanies a pleader, who applies for an adjournment but who is otherwise uninstructed then it is a question of fact whether the agent is able to answer all material questions in which case the party must be deemed to appear by the pleader. In such a case the requirements of the summons as to appearance are as fully satisfied as if the party had appeared in person and applied for an adjournment and equally in such a case the purpose of the appearance or the action taken on appearance is immaterial. If however the party being absent neither the pleader applying for adjournment nor any person accompanying him whether a recognized agent or not is able to answer then apart from O III r 1 there is no appearance within this rule and the only remaining question is whether the party appears by his recognized agent under the former rule. That is a question of fact. The mere presence of the agent is not necessarily an appearance of the party. It must be determined whether he intended to appear and did in fact appear for the party in the exercise of his power under O III r 1 ante (4). Where a defendant did not appear and it was alleged that he was insane and the Judge struck off the case it was held that he should not have done so but ought to have made the inquiry contemplated in Act XXV of 1858 (5).

2 If here on the day so fixed it is found that the summons [s]

has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

“May make an order that the suit be dismissed.”—If the plaintiff has omitted to pay the court-fee by accident or the like, the Court may, on his application, direct the issue of a fresh summons. If it does not, there is no other course open but to dismiss the suit, or the Court may dismiss the suit at once, leaving the plaintiff to apply under r 4, post. The rule applies not merely where there is a single defendant, but also where one of several defendants has not been served, for the suit is incomplete, and cannot be heard without notice to all the defendants. Where, however, in the latter case no objection was previously taken, the Court declined to entertain it on special appeal (1). The suit may be dismissed whether the summons was that originally issued or that re-issued on account of non service of the original one (2). But in no case should the case be disposed of before the day fixed for hearing (3). In the under mentioned case the Court was disposed to think though the case was dealt with on the merits that an order under the corresponding former section was not appealable (4). If the court fee for serving the summons on a defendant newly added by the Court is not paid, the suit according to the Bombay High Court should be dismissed altogether even as against the original defendant but if it is proceeded with and decreed against him and he does not take that objection on appeal, he cannot raise it for the first time on special appeal (5). The Allahabad High Court appears to have taken a different view (6) holding that in such a case the suit should be dismissed against those defendants only on whom the summons could not be served but that if the suit is by mistake dismissed as against the original defendants also to avoid injustice the dismissal against them should be held to have been ordered under this rule.

Proviso—The rule contemplates a defendant appearing before service of the summons. In the under mentioned case (7) the Court stated that it was not necessary to decide whether if a plaintiff were merely to lodge a plaint and take no proceedings upon it against a defendant, the latter in such a case would have a right to appear but that where, as in that case, a plaintiff, by legal process of arrest, brought the defendant before the Court then he had a right to appear at the hearing of the case, although no summons had been served upon him.

3. Where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed.

Where neither party appears, suit to be dis-

"Called on for hearing"—The parties are bound to attend from the time the Court opens, and must be in attendance when the case is called on for hearing, and, if absent at that time, they will be treated as not appearing (1) The Court is not bound to wait for any party until it is about to close for the day, or even till the pleader for the party can find it convenient to attend on account of his engagement in another Court, as, if this were done, Courts would find it difficult to get through their work (2) The subsequent day referred to in sect. 98 of the last Code was that to which the first hearing is adjourned, (3) but the day fixed for hearing after a remand on appeal was held to be within the meaning of those words (4) The reference to adjournment has now been omitted because this matter is sufficiently covered by the terms of O XVII r 2

"Neither party appears"—It does not apply when a party is present, but has omitted to serve notice Failure to take measures to serve a person with a notice as ordered by the Court is not a non appearance (5)

Shall be dismissed—In cases where the Court does not otherwise direct, dismissal is the only consequence, and the proviso relates to the postponing of the case, and not to the making of any final order in it (6) Where neither party appears on the day fixed for the hearing of a suit, an order striking the case off the file is illegal, the only order that can be passed in the circumstances being that of dismissal (7) The rejection of an application of the respondent, asking that security for costs may be taken from the appellant on the non appearance of both the parties, has been considered, by virtue of the provisions of sect 617 (now 111) a dismissal under the section which this rule replaces (8)

"The plaintiff."—These words will include the plaintiff's legal representative, but though the latter may thus apply to have the order of dismissal set aside, the order will be set aside only if he proves a sufficient excuse, such as the plaintiff himself would have been required to prove before the order could be set aside (1) See sect 146

"Fresh suit."—Applying the principle embodied in this rule, if a suit is dismissed by an order purporting to be made under this section before the day fixed for hearing on failure to deposit talabana, this irregularity on the part of the Court does not deprive the plaintiff of his right to bring a new suit under this section (2)

"Satisfies the Court"—Each question of this kind must be dealt with, not according to any hard and fast general rule, but according to its own particular circumstances (3)

"Set aside dismissal"—When a suit has been dismissed for default, and the plaintiff has neglected to make an application within thirty days, there can be no review of judgment under sect 114, post (4) A Judge, when restoring a suit, has no jurisdiction to pass at that time any order as to the general costs of the suit (5) There is no appeal from an order setting aside the dismissal and appointing a day for proceeding with the suit (6) But where such an order has been set aside on appeal, and the last order has been reversed by the High Court, the proceedings of the first Court and the decree passed by it are not invalidated on the ground that as an effect of the reversal of the order restoring the suit, there were no proceedings in Court at the time of the passing of the decree in which such decree could be passed (7)

11 5. (1) Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails for a period of one year from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons and to satisfy the Court that he has used his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who has not been served, or that such defendant is avoiding service of process, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant

(2) In such case the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit

Object and effect of rule—This rule recognizes the practice of issuing fresh summons on the return of the original unserved, but was enacted to put an end to the reprehensible practice of instituting a suit, and then holding proceedings in terrorem over the defendant for a long period without taking any steps to bring it to a hearing (1) Time runs from the date of the return by the Nazir (2) An addition has, therefore, been made interpreting "return" as that not of the Bailiff but of the Nazir A plaintiff cannot, however, by merely applying to the Court within a year of the return, for a fresh summons, avoid dismissal of the suit He must also satisfy the Court that he used diligence in the meanwhile If he fails to establish either of the two points, his suit must be dismissed (3) It is to be observed that the exercise of the power conferred is discretionary only The refusal to take a fresh summons on a defendant, though sufficient to justify the dismissal of the suit against him, does not operate to release him from liability (4) As regards the right to bring a fresh suit, (5) see the case cited, in which the section was recently applied summons was not duly served or was not served in sufficient time, the Court shall order the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the postponement.

"Appears"—See notes to r. 1, ante. This rule is not limited in its application to defendants residing within British India (1). By sect 74 of the Dekkhan Ryots Act, the Code is only to be applied so far as it is consistent with the Act (2).

"When the suit is called on."—These words appear to have been inserted so as to limit the rule to the first day of hearing and mark the distinction between these provisions and those of O XVII r 2.

Clause (a).—No legal decree can be passed ex parte without there being proof of the due service of the summons (3). Where the summons has been served through another Court, see sect 28, ante. To justify an ex parte decree against all defendants, all must have been served, and if the defendant's liability is joint, and if a decree can only go against all, it has been held that without notice to all the defendants no judgment could be passed (4). It was held with reference to sect 56 of the Code of 1859, that "duly served" refers to the mode of service and not to the agency by which it is effected (5). Where a summons is sent by post to a defendant residing out of British India, it is not, in the absence of evidence that the person to be served was at the time residing at the place to which the summons was sent sufficient proof of service to show that the summons was posted, but there must be some evidence of its having been received by the defendant (6). The Court may proceed, ex parte, whether the defendant has been summoned only to appear and answer the claim, or, in addition, to attend and give evidence. In the latter case, it is not necessary, before proceeding ex parte, that all the processes prescribed by law for compelling the attendance of the defendant as a witness should be exhausted, it being sufficient that the service of the summons for his attendance has been effected (7). When a defendant appears, the failure to put in a defence in writing or verbally does not authorize the trial of the suit or make the decree passed in it ex parte (8), not even if the defendant should have been ordered to file a written statement (9). And if the defendant appears at the first hearing and files a written statement, the fact of his non appearance at the final hearing does not operate to make the decision passed in the case ex parte (10). In England a plaintiff is by Statute allowed in certain cases to sign judgment for default, but in this country it has been held that, in all cases where the Court proceeds ex parte, the plaintiff must produce prima facie proof of his case (1) and must prove the claim to the satisfaction of the Court, before he can obtain a decree, except in the case of summary proceedings on negotiable instruments. It is, however, to be noted now that under O VIII r 5 every fact not denied is taken to be admitted, though under that rule such admission is not necessarily equivalent to a proof (2).

The remedies open to a defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed, and who contends that the Court should not have so proceeded, are either to apply under O IX r 13 (formerly sect 108), post, or, to appeal from the ex parte decree, under sect 96. Under O IX r 13, by which a summary remedy is given, the complainant must satisfy the Court not merely that the proof required by this rule was not given, but that in fact the summons was not duly served, or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing. Where a defendant appeals from an ex parte decree, it is sufficient, in the first instance to establish that in the Court which passed that decree the necessary proof of service of summons was not given. It is not incumbent on the appellant to show that the summons was in fact not duly served (3).

Clause (b)—In the under mentioned case it was held that the Court is bound in every case to issue a fresh summons, though it may order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the postponement, and cannot dismiss the suit or reject an application governed by this rule (4).

Clause (c)—Where, if the defendant had not appeared, the Court would have been bound to postpone the hearing on the ground that sufficient time had not been given to him to appear and answer to the suit, his appearing ought not to put him in a worse position, and an adjournment should be granted (5).

7. Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance.

Procedure where defendant appears on day of adjourned hearing and assigns good cause for previous non-appearance.

Appearance at adjourned hearing only.—SECT 111 Act VIII of 1859. What the Legislature intended was that the defendant might be admitted to defend the suit merely upon a petition and without any evidence being gone into to prove the truth of the fact stated in that petition. In fact the section contains no provision for and does not appear to contemplate taking such evidence. (1) If the Court admits the defendant to defend, the suit will proceed in the ordinary course as a defended suit. If the Court refuses this, then no appeal lies from the order of refusal; (2) the suit proceeds as an ex parte suit, and the defendant may then apply to set aside the decree under O IX. r. 13, post, (3) and if that application be refused he may then appeal under O XLII. r. 1 (c); or he may appeal against the ex parte decree without resorting to the procedure laid down in O IX. r. 13, post (4) But where though the Court refuses to receive a written statement, it frames issues in the presence of the defendant's pleader, who is permitted to cross examine, the decree is not an ex parte one (5)

8. Where the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not

the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed, unless the defendant admits the claim, or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission, and, where part only of the claim has been admitted, shall dismiss the suit so far as it relates to the remainder.

Application of rule.—This rule corresponds with sect 114 of the Code of 1859 In construing an order alleged by one side and denied by the other to be an order under this rule, the order will be considered as one under it if, apart from the mere description which the Court gives of its action, and apart from the actual fact of the plaintiff's appearance or non appearance, the real meaning and substance of the Court's action is, that it dismisses the suit on the view, whether right or wrong, that the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear (6) It was formerly considered (7) that the Chapter in which the section corresponding to the rule appeared, applied to execution proceedings, but this was subsequently held not to be so, having regard to the change made in 1892 in sect 617, corresponding with sect 141, post (8) The rule is applicable to adjourned hearings of cases, (9) and to proceedings before the Court to which a reference is made under the Land Acquisition Act (1) It has been recently held by the Privy Council that this rule does not apply where the main issue of the case has been decided on its merits and there is a subsequent default in appearance (2) In this case the plaintiff had sued to recover the sum paid by him to release property from a wrongful attachment, and also for damages for it, the District Court had dismissed the first claim on its merits, the plaintiff had then abandoned the second claim and had failed to appear in subsequent proceedings, and the District Judge had thereupon dismissed the whole suit under sect. 102 of the last Code, now represented by this rule

Non appearance—An order can only be made for non appearance (3) of the plaintiff A plaintiff fails to appear within the meaning of this rule when his pleader declines to proceed with the suit, and it makes no difference that the party himself was present in Court (4) It was held under the Code of 1853 that where a commission has issued for local inquiry and the Commissioner requires the attendance of the parties, should the defendant appear and the plaintiff make default in appearing on the day appointed the proper course is for the Commissioner to dismiss the suit under this rule (5) A suit can only be dismissed under this rule for default of a nature therein described and therefore not for non attendance of witnesses (6) The Court should neither receive evidence on behalf of a defendant nor examine the merits of the case (7) If a suit is dismissed for want of evidence, the decision is one on the merits and not under this rule (8) Non appearance caused by the death of the plaintiff should not be confounded with default (9)

Judgment—The suit should either be dismissed or decreed “Struck off” is not a proper mode of disposing of the case (10) though in a case in which such an order was passed, it was held that though the correct expression had not been used, practically the case had to be regarded as having been decided ex parte (11)

Plaintiff's remedy upon dismissal—Where the suit is dismissed the plaintiff may apply for a review without any previous application under the next rule, (1) or he may apply under that rule. It is not necessary to draw up a formal decree, and the fact that such a decree has been drawn up cannot alter the nature of an order of dismissal under this rule, which is not a decree within the meaning of sect 2, and is not liable to be challenged by way of appeal. The present Code has in this respect altered the pre-existing law (2). An order dismissing a suit at an adjourned hearing for non appearance of the plaintiff and his pleader was held to be an order under sect 157 (now O XVII r 2), and its consequential section (the present rule), and not sect 158 (now O XVII r 3) (3).

9. (1) Where a suit is wholly or partly dismissed under rule 8, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. But he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

(2) No order shall be made under this rule unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Application of rule—This rule corresponds with sect 119 of Act VIII of 1859. The rule applies to original cases and not to cases in appeal (4) a special procedure in hearing appeals being provided, nor does it apply to execution proceedings (5). It bars a subsequent suit only when the plaintiff in the latter had been either the plaintiff in the former suit or represented by him (6). It does not bar a suit the plaintiff in which had been a contesting defendant in a former suit (7). When an executor presents an application for probate he cannot be regarded as a plaintiff suing in respect of some cause of action, and therefore this rule will not apply (8). It makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal order under r 8 of this Order where the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non appearance, but it does not take away the Court's power to restore the case for any other valid reason (1) It was held to apply to rent cases under Act VIII of 1869, B C, (2) and to proceedings under sect 9 of the Specific Relief Act (3) As to default of appearance before Commissioner, see notes to r 8, ante By O XVII r 2, post, the present procedure applies to any day to which the hearing of the trial may be adjourned, but not to the case of a person obtaining time to do some act and making default That falls under r 3 of the latter Order (4) This rule does not apply to suits dismissed for any other reason than non appearance, and includes suits dealt with under O XVII r 2, post, but not those disposed of under r 3 of that Order (5) Where a suit was dismissed "in default of prosecution" on the ground that the plaintiff failed to deposit talabana, the order was held not to be one under the section corresponding with this rule, (6) as was also the case where a suit was dismissed because neither plaintiff nor his pleader appeared on the day fixed for hearing the argument (7) At an adjourned hearing of a suit, witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff not being in attendance, the plaintiff applied for issue of a warrant against one of them The Court refused the application, and the pleader for the plaintiff thereupon intimated that he had no further instructions to appear, and the suit was dismissed Subsequently an application was made under sect 103 (this rule) to set aside the order of dismissal On objection by the defendant that inasmuch as the dismissal was under sect 158 (O XVII r 3) the remedy of the plaintiff was by way of an application for review—Held, that the suit was dismissed under sect 102 (last rule) read with sect 157 (O XVII r 2) and that the application was maintainable under sect 103 the present rule (8) And generally if time is given to do an act and it is not performed, O XVII r 3 applies, otherwise r 2 of the latter Order See notes to these two rules, post Sect 38 of Act XV of 1882 did not preclude a plaintiff, whose suit had been dismissed for default, from applying under this rule to have the order of dismissal set aside He had two separate remedies under different enactments If he applied for a new trial under sect 38 he had to do so in eight days, if he applied under this rule, he had to do so in thirty days (9) The rule applies to proceedings before the Court to which a reference is made under the Land Acquisition Act (10)

"Fresh suit"—A plaintiff is only precluded from instituting a fresh suit where the previous suit was rightly dismissed under r 8, for it is only to such a case that r 9 applies (1) Nextly, assuming that the case was one to which the provisions of r 8 properly apply, the statutory bar raised by this rule only applies where the cause of action in the two suits is the same. This is a matter to be determined on the facts of each particular case (2) It has been held that while dismissal of a suit under sect 102 of the last Code (now represented by r 8 of this Order) is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata, yet when read with sect 103 of that Code (now represented by this rule) it precludes a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, referring to the grounds on which the plaintiff asked the Court to decide in his favour (3)

"Reasonable cause"—This must be determined according to the facts of each particular case. See notes to r 13, post (4) Where when his suit is dismissed for default of appearance under r 8, the plaintiff applies for its restoration, the defendant cannot contest the application in limine as one which cannot be entertained at all under this rule by showing that at the time of the dismissal there was an appearance by the plaintiff, but as an answer to the application on the merits, the defendant can raise the contention that the plaintiff was not prevented from appearing, because, in fact, he did appear (5)

Appeal—If the plaintiff successfully applies under this rule no appeal lies from the order directing the suit to be readmitted, (6) though under the last Code an appeal was held to lie against an order rejecting an application under sect 588 clause (8) of that Code, and an appeal is given by O XLIII r 1 (c). But it is not every order dismissing an application which is open to appeal, but only an order rejecting an application to have the dismissal of a suit set aside (7)

An appellate or revisional authority should not lightly interfere with an order of restoration of a case dismissed for default, but should do so only upon very strong grounds (8)

decision (1) In this case a suit was dismissed for default under r 8 on non-appearance by a plaintiff whose death was not known to the Court His son applied under r 9, and an order was made setting aside the dismissal The respondent applied for revision under sect 115, and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner reversed that order and on review confirmed the reversal on the ground that the order dismissing the suit was proper under r 8 and that the application by the appellant (the son of the deceased plaintiff) had not been within time, and that O 22, r 3 only applied to a pending suit The Privy Council held that the rulings of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner were vitiated by applying to a dead man rules which referred only to a defaulter, and that the order setting aside the dismissal was correct, and that "an abuse of the process of the Court" within the meaning of sect 151 had occurred and that (apart from any section) any Court might rightly have considered itself possessed of inherent power to rectify the mistake made in inadvertently dismissing the suit

11. Where there are more defendants than one, and one or more of them appear and the others do not appear, the suit shall proceed, and the Court shall, at the time of pronouncing judgment, make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the defendants who do not appear

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several defendants.

Non attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs or defendants—These rules correspond with sect 116 of the Code of 1859 There is nothing in the latter section which conflicts with or limits the operation of sect 109 (now r 13) and the application of sect 108 is not limited to the case of a sole defendant who has not appeared or where there are more defendants than one and none of them has appeared (2)

12. Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing

decision (1) In this case a suit was dismissed for default under r 8 on non-appearance by a plaintiff whose death was not known to the Court His son applied under r 9, and an order was made setting aside the dismissal The respondent applied for revision under sect 115, and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner reversed that order and on review confirmed the reversal on the ground that the order dismissing the suit was proper under r 8 and that the application by the appellant (the son of the deceased plaintiff) had not been within time, and that O 22, r 3 only applied to a pending suit The Privy Council held that the rulings of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner were vitiated by applying to a dead man rules which referred only to a defaulter, and that the order setting aside the dismissal was correct, and that "an abuse of the process of the Court" within the meaning of sect 151 had occurred and that (apart from any section) any Court might rightly have considered itself possessed of inherent power to rectify the mistake made in inadvertently dismissing the suit

10. Where there are more plaintiffs than one, and one or more of them appear, and the others do not appear, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or plaintiffs appearing, permit the suit to proceed in the same way as if all the plaintiffs had appeared, or make such order as it thinks fit

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs.

11. Where there are more defendants than one, and one or more of them appear and the others do not appear, the suit shall proceed, and the Court shall, at the time of pronouncing judgment, make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the defendants who do not appear

Procedure in case of non-attendance of one or more of several defendants

Non attendance of one or more of several plaintiffs or defendants—These rules correspond with sect 116 of the Code of 1859 There is nothing in the latter section which conflicts with or limits the operation of sect 108 (now r 13) and the application of sect 108 is not limited to the case of a sole defendant who has not appeared or where there are more defendants than one and none of them has appeared (2)

12. Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person, or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing

Consequence of non-attendance, without sufficient cause shown, of party ordered to appear in person

(2) Coker Equitable Coal Co 8 C W N 21 (1904) As regards the case of Doorga v Shanmugam 12 W R 376 (1883) cited in the case of argum it is to be observed that if the judgment of Markby J is sound (as to which quære), the interest was the same between those who appeared and those who did not. The question, however, whether there was ex parte against the absent defendants was, according to the judgment of Hobbhouse, J., not necessary for the decision not ex parte if the defendant has once appeared, it was held that there was no ground for so limiting the meaning of the words of the last Code and that a decree is ex parte if it was made at an adjourned hearing in the absence of the defendant, whether the defendant has or has not appeared at an earlier stage of the case. The present rule therefore applies to every case in which a decree is passed ex parte, either by reason of his non appearance at the first or at an adjourned hearing (1). The former section was held to apply to proceedings under Ch VII of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, (2) and to execution proceedings where the order amounts to a decree under sect 47, ante (3).

The rule, moreover, is not limited to the case of a sole defendant, or, where there are several defendants, to cases where none of them have appeared (4). The fact that an order under r 7 has been made against a defendant and has not been appealed against, is no objection to an application being made by him under this rule (5). And it has been held that the fact that an appeal from an ex parte decree is pending will not preclude the defendant (against whom the decree was passed) from applying under this rule for an order to set it aside (6). Sect 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) does not apply to an ex parte decree. An application to set aside such a decree passed by a P S C C falls within this rule (7). Satisfaction of an ex parte decree does not disentitle a judgment debtor from applying to a Court to set it aside (8). Neither this rule nor any other portion of the Chapter of the last Code in which this rule appeared applied to execution proceedings (9). Nor does the rule apply where the case has been dismissed not for default by non appearance, but for something else, such as cases falling under O XVII r 3, post (10).

"Ex parte"—A decree is ex parte when the defendant does not appear as to whom a defendant is deemed to have appeared, see notes to r 1, ante (1) A Court has jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree if it is in fact ex parte If one of the parties alleges that it is ex parte and the other denies it, the Court must investigate the question though the word purports to show the contrary (2) When a defendant seeks to set aside a decree on the grounds mentioned in this rule, the fact that the decree appears on the face of it to be based upon a petition of compromise which is impugned as a forgery, does not make the rule inapplicable The defendant is entitled to go behind the decree and to show that it is in fact ex parte (3) And he can apply under O XVII r 1 to invite the Court to reconsider its decision in the light of facts subsequently discovered (4) Where a defendant does appear there is no ex parte decree in the strict sense of the word This rule contemplates cases of ex parte proceedings strictly and properly so, and therefore not such as are made under O XI r 21, post (5) The expression 'passed ex parte' in sect 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act means a decree "passed ex parte against a defendant, and does not include cases dismissed for default (6)

"Defendant"—The Allahabad High Court have in one case held that where a defendant against whom a decree has been passed ex parte for default of appearance dies his legal representative cannot apply under this rule (7) But the Calcutta High Court has and it is submitted rightly held that he can (8) The case is now covered by the principle enacted in sect 146 But it has been held that where the defendant dies after ex parte decree his representatives cannot apply to have it set aside unless they have been brought on the record (9) As to the procedure in the case of the non attendance of one or more of several defendants see r 11 and notes thereto

"May apply"—Under Art 161 Schedule II of the Limitation Act, the application should be made within thirty days from the date of executing any process for enforcing judgment The burden of proof is of course on the applicant (10) The very object, however, of an application under this rule is to show that evidence on the record cannot be used against the petitioner on the ground that it was taken behind his back and therefore if the applicant makes out a prima facie case the opposite party must rebut it by evidence taken word "decree" referred to is the decree described in the first sentence of the section, viz the decree passed ex parte against the defendant who has not appeared, and that the words "shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit" meant that a day is to be appointed for proceeding with the suit so far as the defendant, who has applied to the Court under the provisions of this section, is concerned (1) No difficulty arose where there was only one defendant, or where, if there were several defendants, an application was successfully made by all of them. In such cases the whole decree against the defendant, or all the defendants, was set aside. The question arose where there were several defendants, and one or more of several (but not all) applied successfully, whether the whole decree was or should be set aside against all the defendants, or only the decree so far as it affected the defendant or defendants who applied. In this connection two sets of circumstances required consideration, (a) where an application was made by one or more defendants to set aside a decree which had been made ex parte against all defendants, none having appeared, (b) where a similar application was made in a case where some of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit and some had not appeared, and a decree was passed against all the defendants. Any interpretation of the section which led to the conclusion that a Court must in all cases set aside the decree against all defendants, or could not in any case do so, led to difficulties. Some of the defendants might not object, and in fact might have no ground for objecting to the decree, and the Court would not be justified in such case in reopening the whole suit (2) On the other hand, if the Court's power was strictly limited to setting aside the decree as against the defendant who applied, difficulties equally arose (3) For instance, the relief given might be joint and indivisible.

It was therefore held that though "decree" meant "whole decree," and

Therefore, in accordance with the observation of Aikman, J, Bhura Mal v Har Krishan Das, supra, at pp 385, 396, the earlier decisions were of use.

thus the Court had power to set aside the whole decree against all defendants, the Court was not bound in every case to set aside the decree against all the defendants (1) It would do so where the decree was really one decree, proceeding upon a common ground (2) and was indivisible, (3) but it might refuse to do so where the decree, though nominally one, really consisted of several decrees against several parties (4) Where the question involved in a case was whether the liability of the defendants was joint or several, and in such case the ex parte decree was set aside, on the application of some of several defendants the entire decree was set aside (5) Similar conclusions were arrived at by Aikman, J, in whose opinion "decree" meant the ex parte decree referred to in the opening words of the section, and who held that when the decree was one and indivisible it must be set aside as a whole or not at all, and that the Court must be assumed to have the power to set aside the whole decree, if either the decree was from its nature one and indivisible, or if in order to give to the defendants against whom an ex parte decree has to be pronounced the relief to which they are entitled, it must be set aside as a whole (6) The Calcutta High Court held that the Court might set aside the whole decree even where one or more of the defendants had appeared and contested the suit, while in the case of the remaining defendant or defendants the decree had been passed ex parte (7) A contrary view was taken in the Bombay High Court, (8) and Stanley, J, and Burdett, J in the Allahabad High Court (9) reserved their opinions on the point

The proper rule is that now enacted by the proviso viz that relief is ordinarily to be given only to the party who is entitled to and applies for it If, however, in order to give such relief or for other purpose it is necessary to set aside the decree as against others also, this will be done as in cases where prepared to put in a written statement does not warrant the trial of a suit ex parte. The Judge should in that case ascertain what are the matters in issue by an examination of the defendant under this rule (1). The object of this examination is not to take evidence or to ascertain what is to be the evidence in the case, but to see whether a cause of action exists, what are the matters in dispute, and, if necessary, to allow an amendment of the pleadings (2). Under the Code of 1859, provision was made for the examination of three persons, viz the party, pleader, or companion of either. R 2 now excludes the pleader, though r 4 contemplates his examination. Under the Code of 1859, the examination was (unless the pleader was the person examined) to be on oath or affirmation. But as this provision has been omitted, the examination may now take place without oath or affirmation.

R 4 provides for the appearance of a party, not to give evidence in the ordinary way, but to put the Court in possession of information necessary to the framing of issues or other points in the conduct of the case. The power given is discretionary, the intention of the section being to enable the Court not only to get obscure points cleared up by obtaining information from either of the parties (3) but also, if possible, to get admissions so as to narrow down the issues (4). If the party does not appear, the Court may pass a decree (5) against the defaulting party, but this can only be done if the pleader has previously thereto refused or been unable to answer a material (6) question (7). If the plaintiff is in default the Court may dismiss his suit. If it be the defendant, the question arises whether the Court can or should decree the plaintiff's suit without any evidence in support of his claim (8). Apparently the Court has power to do so (9). The Court, however, is not bound to pass a decree, it may pass any order it thinks fit. The amended section substitutes "pronounce judgment" for "pass a decree". Apparently, however the two phrases are meant to intend the same thing. R 4 is of a penal character, and it is therefore incumbent on the Court which professes to act under it to take care that the contingency contemplated by it has in fact occurred (10).

ORDER XI

Discovery and Inspection

1. In any suit the plaintiff or defendant by leave of the Court may deliver interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite parties or any one or more of such parties, and such interrogatories when delivered shall have a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer. Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same party without an order for that purpose. Provided also that interrogatories which do not relate to any matters in question in the suit shall be deemed irrelevant, notwithstanding that they might be admissible on the oral cross examination of a witness.

Discovery—The provisions as to discovery have been remodelled in conformity with the present English Rules, and the English decisions will be more closely applicable. This is O 31 r 1. It does not apply to rent suits in Bengal [sect 148 clause (a) Act VII of 1885]. The words through the Court have been omitted. Other amendments are noted post. According to the former English practice actions were instituted to obtain discovery. Under the present practice these can be rarely necessary. (1) Order 31 of the Judicature Act Rules following the extended principles of the Court of Chancery, now gives power to the Court in all suits to order discovery in aid of the action. (2) This part of the Code closely follows the English Rules. The main object of administering interrogatories is to save expense by obtaining admissions from the opposite party. (3) A plaintiff may interrogate with a view to obtain information or admissions in support of his own case and this right extends with proper qualifications not only to his original case but also to any answer which he has to make to the defendant's case.

(1) See generally as to Bills for discovery Bray on Discovery 609-619, Ann Pr notes to O 31, see Orr & Draper 4 C D 12, Rever & Salisbury, 2 C D 375.

(2) See Ann Pr loc cit ed (1905) p 384.

(3) Waghji Thackersey & Khatri Rowji 10 B 167 at p 171 (1886).

But the right is always subject to the qualification that the interrogatories must be directed to a case on which the plaintiff has already determined and to which he has committed himself. He cannot be allowed to put fishing questions in order to try whether he can discover any flaw in the defendant's case or suggest any answer to it (1). Discovery is not limited to giving the party a knowledge of that which he does not already know, but includes the getting an admission of anything which he has to prove on an issue between himself and his opponent, (2) to facilitate proof or save expense, (3) and to diminish the burden of proof (4). So one party may be asked as to any admissions he may have made tending to support his opponent's cause of action (5). And discovery may be had of the names of persons to make them parties, and the names and securities of prior incumbrances (6). The interrogatory must be as to facts, and must not ask for conclusions of law, inference of facts or construction of a document (7). In short, a party is entitled to discovery of every fact which makes out his own case or shows that he is in the right and this includes specific allegations in the nature of a replication to an anticipated defence. He is not however, entitled to discovery of matters which support his opponent's case or show that his opponent is right. It has been held that he cannot ask the opposite party by what evidence he intends to support his case (8). But in a suit for the recovery of the amount on a hundi alleged to have been drawn and accepted by the defendant in consideration of a loan, it has been recently held in the Calcutta High Court that a party is entitled to interrogate on facts directly in issue in the pleadings and that therefore the defendant was entitled to discovery of all necessary details, including the names and addresses of the persons by whom it was presented (9). In this country it was formerly held that interrogatories viewed as machinery for eliciting facts bearing upon issues arising in suits were intended only to have a limited operation (1) So though English authorities establish that a plaintiff may interrogate the defendant in order that he may know what case he has to meet—not the evidence but what the defence is—such interrogatories are really framed to anticipate or supply defects of pleading But the system of procedure in this country, it was held, was different Two modes were held to be specially provided for meeting the difficulty in question If the pleading was too vague the Court might require a further and fuller written statement under the section corresponding with O VIII r 9 The other method referred to was that provided by the Code in the settlement of issues Interrogatories should not, in such a case, it was held, be resorted to in this country (2) So again it was held that sect 134 of the last Code indicated that in a case falling within it a party should proceed not by way of interrogatories but according to the procedure laid down in that section, and that the Code did not contemplate that a party should be compelled to give discovery of documents by means of interrogatories or otherwise the relevancy of which was denied (3) Further particulars may now be demanded under O VI r 5, but there can be no doubt that the framers of the present Code intended to approximate the two systems as far as possible

Time for delivery of interrogatories—The former Code contained the words “at any time” which have now been omitted In England a plaintiff is hardly ever allowed discovery before statement of claim for from the earliest times the Court has set its face against allowing discovery for the purpose of fishing out a case (4) and this must always be so under the Code where a suit is not instituted until after the presentation of a plaint (5) In Common Law actions the proper time for discovery was not until after defence for until then it was not usually possible to say what was really material But a plaintiff has been allowed to interrogate before defence, and in the Chancery Division it is common practice to allow a plaintiff discovery before defence (6) And the Court has a discretion to allow this under this rule The same principles which prohibit discovery before the plaintiff has stated his case apply to a defendant As a rule therefore in England a defendant will not be allowed general discovery before putting in his defence (7) and this was laid down as an absolute rule in all cases by the second paragraph of the former section This portion of the former proviso has been omitted and the English practice will be followed. The same procedure may be adopted in miscellaneous proceedings after decree. Interrogatories as to accounts pending or to make the judgment available, or to find out how the property in cases of mesne profits has been managed, have been allowed, and no doubt will be admitted under the Code (1).

Leave—Application should be made on petition in Chambers, the order being that the plaintiff be allowed to interrogate (2). It was held to be the duty of the Court to determine whether the applicant should be allowed to interrogate, but not to determine at that stage what questions the opposite party should be compelled to answer (3). But see now next rule. In giving leave the Court, as a rule, decides nothing as to the specific interrogatories but only that there is a case for interrogating the party, that the interrogatories may possibly be relevant, that their genuine character is not improper, and that their administration is not sought for the mere purpose of annoyance. Where the party on being served refuses to answer them the Court enters upon a considered adjudication under r 11 post, and the resulting order may be enforced under r 21. The grant of leave to one party to deliver interrogatories to another does not amount to an order requiring the other party to answer them, for that party may perhaps have good ground for refusing to answer them or some of them (r 6). Leave granted is, therefore, not an order to answer within the meaning of r 21 entailing a dismissal or striking out a defence (4).

"Interrogatories"—For form of interrogatories, see Schedule IV 123 of last Code and case cited, (5) and r 4 post. Interrogatories are only affidavits obtained in a particular way, and the party wishing to use them must put them in as his evidence (6). See as to their use r 22, post.

"Opposite parties"—Primarily this is a party on the other side of the record to the applicants (7). A party not on the other side of the record is an opposite party within the meaning of the rule if between him and the applicant there is some right to be adjusted in the action, which in Chancery might often be the case between two plaintiffs or two defendants (8). But defendants were refused leave to interrogate co defendants who had put in no defence, there being no issue between them (1)

In England formerly the decisions established that an infant, by reason of incapacity, could not be interrogated, (2) nor could he be made to give discovery of documents (3) nor could such orders be made against a next friend (4) or guardian ad litem (5) as such neither having the status of a party as that term is understood in the rules dealing with the subject. Now, however, r 23 makes the order applicable to infant plaintiffs and defendants, and to the next friends and guardians ad litem of persons under disability (6)

The Bombay High Court (7) has however, in the case cited, applying the present English rule, held that an affidavit of documents may be required from a minor defendant, though the Judge stated that he did not decide that a next friend or guardian of an infant could be directly ordered to make an affidavit of documents. It has, however, been pointed out (8) that the order as made was invalid (the guardian ad litem being willing to make an affidavit) and that the affidavit was in reality to be made by the guardian and the Calcutta High Court has in the case cited held that a minor cannot be compelled to give discovery under sct 129 of the former Code, nor on the same principle (viz, his incapacity) could he be interrogated under the section corresponding to this rule, nor could his next friend or guardian be considered an "opposite party" upon whom such interrogatories can be served within the meaning of that section. It has however, been said that a guardian ad litem may under circumstances be made a party for the purpose of obtaining discovery from him (9) But even in this case which was an exceptional one, it was held that where the guardian had been made a party defendant for purposes of discovery, the discovery was not intended to include the right to administer interrogatories

As to body corporate, or other body: Crown, (2) foreign sovereigns, (3) liquidator, (4) see cases cited. (5) The secretary of a corporation or company is, as a rule, the proper person to answer, and it was the practice of Jessel, M R, not to direct a member to answer unless there was no officer who had a competent knowledge of the facts. (6) The officer or member is the representative or alter ego of the body for the purposes of answering the interrogatories. (7) It is not his answer but the answer of the body, and, therefore, there is no obligation either to disclose his knowledge, or to obtain and disclose the knowledge of other servants or agents of the body acquired by him or them otherwise than in the course of his or their employment. (8) As regards discovery and production of documents, this is obtained by an order against the body for an affidavit of documents in its possession, to be made by the secretary, clerk, or other proper officer on its behalf (9). It should, if possible, be made by some person who has personal knowledge as to documents in the possession of the body (10).

6. Any objection to answering any interrogatory on the [s 1] ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant or not exhibited bonâ fide for the purpose of the suit, or that the matters inquired into are not sufficiently material at that stage, or on any other ground, may be taken in the affidavit in answer.

purpose of submission to the adviser, are protected (1) On the same principle as a witness cannot be examined so he cannot be interrogated as to questions of law (2) Nor is he bound to discover the evidence of his case, for this would enable his unscrupulous opponent to tamper with the witnesses and to manufacture evidence in contradiction, and so shape the case as to defeat justice (3) But according to the English authorities a party must discover the nature of his case, or the facts on which he relies in support of his case, as distinguished from the evidence of his case or the way in which he is going to make out his case (4) According to the English rule a party is not compelled to give discovery which will tend to criminate him or expose him to the risk of any kind of punishment (5) But in this country a witness is not excused from answering on the ground that an answer will criminate (6) Though, therefore, a party may and should for his protection (7) claim privilege on this ground, it would appear that he may be compelled to answer an incriminating interrogatory Objectionable or oppressive interrogatories should be disallowed (8) The mere fact that questions would be admissible in cross examination will not make them good as interrogatories (9)

7. Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous, and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories

10 No exceptions shall be taken to any affidavit in answer, but the sufficiency or otherwise of any such affidavit objected to as insufficient shall be determined by the Court

11. Where any person interrogated omits to answer, or answers insufficiently, the party interrogating may apply to the Court for an order requiring him to answer, or to answer further, as the case may be And an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer further, either by affidavit or by viva voce examination, as the Court may direct

"Insufficiently"—O 31, r 11 It does not apply to rent suits in Bengal (see r 1 ante) The same necessity for clear specific answers and absence of all evasion is required as in the case of pleading as to which see O VIII r 4 If the answer is evasive the usual practice is to require a further answer More over, matter of supererogation should not be introduced It is, of course legitimate to explain or qualify an answer But when an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing that is to say which prevents the person who asks it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matter as part of it it is insufficient (1) A party must answer to the best of his knowledge information and belief (2) He is bound therefore to state all the information he already possesses, though he is not bound to obtain it of any one except his agents and servants Of these he must inquire using his best efforts bond fide to get the information He must also examine documents in his possession or power if necessary (3) The question in all cases is whether the answer is insufficient The Court has not to go into the question of its truthfulness If the Court is clearly satisfied (from certain sources as to which see r 6 ante) that the oath of the party by which he claims his protection cannot be really available for the purpose for which he puts it forward a further answer may be ordered But the oath should not be disregarded on mere suspicion A substantial answer is sufficient under the present practice the substance and not the form being that at which the Court looks If looking at all the answers together the Court thinks that every question material to the issue has been fairly and substantially

"Relating to any matter in question therein"—The following interpretations have been given of these words—Documents containing information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either to advance his own case, or damage that of his adversary, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences (1) They are not confined to such as would be admissible in evidence (2) Every document which will throw any light on the case (3)

Objection to production—As to what documents are privileged from production, see notes to r 6, ante. The affidavit should set out the grounds on which privilege is claimed. But a party is not confined to the affidavit in which the claim is first set up. He is entitled to put in and use a further affidavit in support of his claim of privilege (4)

Sealing up—According to the Equity practice followed in the High Courts, a party may seal up such portions of otherwise material documents as he swears are privileged. A party must, however, specify what parts of the documents referred to he claims to seal up, and the grounds upon which the claim is based (5). If he does not, though the Court has allowed an application to consider the sufficiency of the affidavit, (6) yet technically the right way of raising the question is by taking out a summons for production and inspection (7). When the right of a party producing documents to seal certain portions of them is contested, the Court appoints an officer to whom the plaintiff states in confidence why he wants to inspect any portion of the documents sealed, and the officer, after looking at the documents, reports whether and in what way the part noted or desired to be noted is material to the case of the other party (8).

Objection to affidavit—When an affidavit is technically insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code, a summons may be taken out to consider its sufficiency, (9) and the party will be ordered to amend his affidavit or file a further affidavit, (10) as where the description of documents is imperfect (11) or improperly verified, (12) or where the affidavit does not specify what the plaintiff claims to seal up, and is not in the prescribed form (13). The only occasion where a party can be compelled to file a further affidavit of documents, is when the original affidavit is insufficient, that is, in its terms, and fails to comply with the requirements of the Code. If it is not alleged that the affidavit is defective in that respect, but that the affidavit contains statements which are untrue in fact, the party so alleging should specify the documents which he requires to see, and which have been omitted from the affidavit, and apply for an order of inspection under r 18, post (1). He must (as appears from that rule), in addition to the matters mentioned, show that the documents of which he claims inspection are relevant to the matters in question in the suit (2). If he is then met by an affidavit of the other party denying possession, that is a risk which the party seeking inspection must take. For just as for the purposes of discovery an affidavit of documents denying possession is conclusive, so for the purposes of production and inspection an affidavit denying possession of such documents would be equally conclusive (3). The Court, however, in this decision distinguishing cases on the question of privilege which stand on a different footing, was not prepared to assent to the broad proposition that, as the oath of the party is conclusive on the question of possession, so also in an application under r 18, the affidavit of the opposite party is conclusive on the issue of relevancy (4). An effective remedy may, however, be obtained at the hearing where possession is denied. For if on cross examination or otherwise it appears that the party has failed to disclose or refused inspection of relevant documents in his possession the Court will then direct immediate inspection to be given, adjourning the hearing at the cost of the person who has so evaded giving discovery (5). If the Court is clearly satisfied on a perusal of the affidavit, the documents therein referred to, and the pleadings, that the affidavit cannot be accepted the Court may, according to the English practice, order a further affidavit of documents. But these are the only sources to which the Court may look for this purpose (6). It is not clear upon the Indian cases what course should be taken in such a case. The case cited below (7) seems to suggest that a further affidavit will only be ordered where the affidavit is technically insufficient in its strictest sense, and where a defendant in his written statement referred to documents not set out in his affidavit, the Court discharged a summons to consider its sufficiency, holding that as the omitted documents were sufficiently described in the written statement, an application could be forthwith made for inspection if inspection were needed (8).

Conclusiveness of affidavit—Where, however, a proper affidavit has been filed, either originally or as the result of an order for a further affidavit, the oath of the party swearing the affidavit is conclusive upon the questions of possession, (1) privilege, (2) and, according to English practice, relevancy (3). The Court cannot regard the opponent's oath, the general rule in all questions of discovery being that where you have the oath of the party claiming discovery challenging the oath of the party giving discovery, the oath of the latter is for this purpose conclusive. The party seeking discovery must rest upon the affidavit, and he cannot even examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor can he do this in another form by administering general interrogatories.

14. It shall be lawful for the Court, at any time during the pendency of any suit, to order the production of documents by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such suit, as the Court shall think right, and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just

"It shall be lawful"—This rule is taken from O 31, r 14. See, as to the discretion, note "Order the production." The rule enables any party who has obtained privately, by interrogatories or by affidavit of documents, knowledge of a document in the hands of his adversary, to compel production. But no order for production can be made against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted it to be in his possession or power. See notes to r 13, ante.

"At any time"—Therefore even as late as in appeal. As regards the earliest point at which the order may be made, the Court will act upon the general principles governing the time or stage for discovery. Vide ante, notes to r 1. An order under this rule may be made even before the issues have been framed (4).

"Order the production"—Under the Evidence Act in regard to certain documents where they are absolutely privileged the Court has no power whatever to order production. But under this rule the Court does possess the discretion, and this discretion is to be exercised according to the practice of the Court (5). In the case cited the Court held that though a document might not be such as passed directly between the legal adviser and the client yet if it was of such a nature as to make it quite clear that it was obtained confidentially for the purpose of being used in litigation, and with a view to being submitted to legal advisers, then the Court will not compel the production of such a document (1) In an earlier case in the same Court it was held that a Judge has no discretion to refuse to allow inspection of documents relating to matters in question in a suit, provided that they are not privileged (2) This decision was based on Bustros v. White, (3) at which time it was held that there was no discretionary power under this rule But in England the Court has since been given a discretion by the amendment of O 31, r 18 (2) And this is so here also under the second clause of r 18, post A party is entitled to production or inspection only when the books or papers are material and necessary to establish his cause of action The exercise of the power under this rule cannot be delegated to a commissioner (4) Upon an application for inspection of documents, which is objected to on the ground of immateriality, the Court will, if necessary, order them to be produced for its own inspection in order to judge of their materiality (5) The power of refusing inspection should be exercised with great caution, and the opposite party should be allowed to inspect and take copies of the documents when they relate to matters in issue, unless they are privileged in law, relate exclusively to the case of the party producing them, and contain nothing supporting or tending to support the other side (6)

other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit.

Notice to produce for inspection.—This is r 15 of the English O 31. There is a distinction between an application for general discovery of documents and an application for production of a specified document, that is, a document referred to in the pleadings or affidavits. The order for production may be made at any early stage of the case, and, unlike the case of general discovery, a defendant is entitled to inspection although he has not filed his written statement (1). As to form of application, see No 124, Schedule IV of last Code and r 17. A Judge has no power under this rule, or r 18, to direct inspection to be given of documents unless there be as an essential preliminary to the right of inspection either the specification of a document by the party seeking the inspection, or its disclosure by the other side in the pleadings or otherwise (2).

"Other party."—A defendant may obtain discovery or inspection, as against a co-defendant, if the latter can be regarded as an opposite party (3). If the party on whom the notice is served should answer in the manner prescribed in the next rule, he should object to produce such documents as he considers he ought not to be compelled to produce, leaving his adversary to get an order for inspection under r 18, post.

"And any party not complying"—The concluding words of this rule give an express power to the Judge to allow the document to be used in evidence, a power which the Judge was originally held to have by implication. As to documents referring to party's own title and "sufficient cause," see notes to rr 1, 6, ante (4).

16. Notice to any party to produce any documents referred to in his pleading or affidavits shall be in Form No. i in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

17. The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt of such notice deliver to the party giving the same a notice stating a time within three days from the delivery thereof at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at the office of his pleader, or in the case of bankers' books or other books of account or books in constant

by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs, and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense.

Notice to admit documents—This rule, which has been considerably remodelled and is, with some slight alterations, the same as the English rule, is taken from O 32, r 2. For form of notice, see No 127 in Schedule I Part II of the former Code and the next rule. A fuller form is given in the Annual Practice, Vol II Appendix B No 11. The rule is enacted for the facility of proof and saving of costs. The rule has been held to extend to all documents which a party proposes to adduce in evidence, and whether in possession or otherwise, and even though the opposite party has stated that he would not admit them (1). According to the English practice, if a party does not save all just exceptions he is precluded from objecting to the admissibility in evidence of the documents admitted (2). Though that may sometimes be the case here, it would be necessary to consider in certain instances, eg a question of stamp and possibly in others whether the admission of the party could render that admissible which the law says should not be admitted. Further, an admission with the "saving" that a document is a copy merely dispenses with proof that it is a copy. It does not, however, dispense with proof of circumstances permitting secondary evidence being given. Admissions of documents between co-defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party cannot be entered as evidence against him (3). If the party having notice fails to prove the documents, the party refusing to admit will not be made liable for the costs of the unsuccessful attempt (4). This also appears from the words of the rule, which imply successful proof.

Notice to admit facts—This section is limited to documents. Under the English practice (5) however, and that of the Calcutta High Court, (6) notice may be given to admit specific facts, and in case of refusal to admit, the party so refusing pays the costs of proving such facts unless the Judge certifies that the refusal was reasonable. The form of notice and answer are given in the Annual Practice, Nos 12 and 13 in Appendix B, and in forms 269 E (1) (2) of the Calcutta High Court Rules. See as to admissions for purpose of trial Authors' Evidence Act, 4th ed p 349. The Code now provides in r 4, post, for admission as to facts.

3 A notice to admit documents shall be in Form No 9 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

4. Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day fixed for the hearing, call on any other party to admit, for the purposes of the suit only, any specific fact or facts mentioned in such notice. And in case of refusal or neglect to admit the same within six days after service of such notice, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court, the costs of proving such fact or facts shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs. Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular suit, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice. Provided also that the Court may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

"Not later than nine days before"—English O 32 r 1. This expression of time is unusual and might be construed to be identical with 'clear days,' i.e., exclusively of both the day of service of the notice and the day named for hearing. The day of service is in England excluded and the word "before" appears to exclude the day of hearing (1). A notice to admit facts should, where practicable, supersede interrogatories (2). This notice may be delivered with the statement of claim and the Court cannot set it aside as improper. The defendant's only course is to refuse to answer it which he would do at his peril as to costs (3). Where plaintiff disregarded a notice under this rule given by the defendant the latter was allowed to administer interrogatories (4).

"Any other party"—Semble these words mean any opposite party as in O 31 r 11 ante (5).

5. A notice to admit facts shall be in Form No 10 in Appendix C, and admissions of facts shall be in Form No 11 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

6. Any party may at any stage of a suit, where admissions of fact have been made, either on the pleadings, or otherwise, apply to the Court for such judgment or order as upon such admissions he may be entitled to, without waiting for the determination of any other question between the

by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs, and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense.

Notice to admit documents—This rule, which has been considerably remodelled, and is with some slight alterations, the same as the English rule, is taken from O 32, r 2. For form of notice, see No 127 in Schedule I Part II of the former Code and the next rule. A fuller form is given in the Annual Practice, Vol II Appendix B No 11. The rule is enacted for the facility of proof and saving of costs. The rule has been held to extend to all documents which a party proposes to adduce in evidence, and whether in possession or otherwise, and even though the opposite party has stated that he would not admit them (1). According to the English practice, if a party does not save all just exceptions he is precluded from objecting to the admissibility in evidence of the documents admitted (2). Though that may sometimes be the case here it would be necessary to consider in certain instances e.g. a question of stamp and possibly in others whether the admission of the party could render that admissible which the law says should not be admitted. Further, an admission with the "saving" that a document is a copy merely dispenses with proof that it is a copy. It does not, however, dispense with proof of circumstances permitting secondary evidence being given. Admissions of documents between co-defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party cannot be entered as evidence against him (3). If the party having notice fails to prove the documents the party refusing to admit will not be made liable for the costs of the unsuccessful attempt (4). This also appears from the words of the rule, which imply successful proof.

Notice to admit facts—This section is limited to documents. Under the English practice (5) however, and that of the Calcutta High Court (6) notice may be given to admit specific facts and in case of refusal to admit, the party so refusing pays the costs of proving such facts unless the Judge certifies that the refusal was reasonable. The form of notice and answer are given in the Annual Practice, Nos 12 and 13 in Appendix B, and in forms 269 E (1) (2) of the Calcutta High Court Rules. See as to admissions for purpose of trial Authors Evidence Act (3rd ed p 34). The Code now provides in r 4, post, for admission as to facts.

parties : and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

Judgment—The rule is merely permissive, and the plaintiff by not availing himself of it, and proceeding to trial in the ordinary way, does not thereby waive his right to rely, at the trial, on the admission contained in the pleadings (1) "This rule (1875) enables the plaintiff or defendant to get rid of so much of the action as to which there is no controversy. That is the meaning of it," (2) and the same learned Judge frequently decided that the former rule must be read as if the words "if any" were inserted after the word "question" (3) The Court will not, on motion, give judgment on admissions contained in the defence of an infant defendant nor, semble, on default of infant in filing a defence (4) The plaintiff must have a clear case, and the mere admission or non denial by the defendant of a right asserted by plaintiff, but which in fact has no existence in law, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment establishing the right (5) In any case the power of the Court is discretionary, and will not be exercised where the case cannot be conveniently tried on motion (6)

7. An affidavit of the pleader or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof is required

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents.

1. The parties or their pleaders shall produce, at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced, provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs

Documents to be ready—If a plaintiff sues or relies on a document he must either produce it with his plaint or enter it on the list attached to it (O VII r 14) Any document which has not been produced or entered cannot be received in evidence without leave of the Court (O VII r 18, see notes thereto) And by this rule the parties must bring with them and have in readiness at the first hearing, all the documentary evidence in their possession or power,⁽¹⁾ and on which they rely, and file it But they need not file them unless they are good and assignable cause, abstained from bringing it before the Court at the first hearing, (4) or formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents (5)

documents unproved but it is also the duty of the pleader of the party to whom they are intended to be used, to insist that they should not remain on the record at all (1) Where a document tendered in evidence in a Court of first instance is rejected as inadmissible but is nevertheless allowed to remain on the record of the case the mere fact of the document remaining on the record does not make it evidence in the Appellate Court, but it must be tendered in evidence in that Court and accepted thereby (2)

8 Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 5 or rule 7 of this Order or in rule 17 of Order VII, the Court may, if it sees sufficient cause, direct any document or book produced before it in any suit to be impounded and kept in the custody of an officer of the Court, for such period and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit

Court may send for papers from its own records or from other Courts.

(2) Every application made under this rule shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit showing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made, and that the applicant cannot without unreasonable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(3) Nothing contained in this rule shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the law of evidence would be inadmissible in the suit

"The Court"—This rule, which corresponds with sect 138 of the Code of 1859, except that the latter section empowered the Court to send for records from public officer also, applies to Appellate Courts as well as those of original jurisdiction (1) The Judge should pass a distinct order on the application instead of recording the objectionable and meaningless order "Autli Shamel pesh" (2) But where a party petitioned the Court to send for certain documents and an order was made that the matter should be decided at the hearing, but no further application was made, it was held that the applicant was not entitled to appeal on the ground that the record had not been sent for (1)

"May."—The Court has a discretion, and is not bound to send for the record (2) though the discretion must be judicially exercised, and, as in other cases where the legislature uses the word "may," where a proper case for the exercise of the power arises, the Court should exercise it (3) The Court will see that the facts set out in the second paragraph are made out in the affidavit. But if so the Court ought not to refuse the application merely because in its opinion the documents cannot be produced before the termination of the trial (4) The Court is not bound to send for the whole record, but only such papers as are mentioned in the application (5)

"Application"—This must show that the record is material, (6) that copies cannot be obtained, or that if obtainable they are insufficient, the original being necessary, as where copies cannot be attested by subscribing witness (7) It was held that in all cases the party for whose benefit the documents have been used should be required to file copies in the record (8)

"Other Court"—As already stated the Court cannot now, as under the Code of 1859, send for records from public offices (9) The record must be that of a suit or proceeding in another Court. The proper means of obtaining the other records is by summons directed to the proper officer. The Court to which the direction is issued has no discretion to refuse to send records which have been sent for by another Civil Court (10)

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon

- 1 (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other
- Framing of issues.
- (2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which show a right to sue or his defence
- (3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue
- (4) Issues are of two kinds (a) issues of fact (b) issues of law
- (5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend
- (6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence

2 Where issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case or any part thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

Object and effect of issues—The object of pleading is that each side may be made fully aware of the questions which are about to be argued in order that each may bring forward evidence appropriate to the issues (1) The pleadings, therefore, are the first stage at which the differences between the parties are made to appear. They may contain an express admission. Pleadings, however, in this country have hitherto not been construed with the same strictness as in England, where legal assistance of a highly expert character is always available. The Courts therefore, have refused to apply to Indian pleadings the strict rule that averments not traversed must be taken to be admitted (2) Orders VI and VIII now require a stricter practice which is itself justified by the increased professional efficiency. Where, however issues have been framed, it was held prior to this Code that averments upon which no issue has been framed must be taken to be admitted (3) For if parties intend to raise a question they should request the Court to frame an issue upon it. Where parties in a lower Court allow a suit to be conducted as if a certain fact was admitted, they cannot afterwards in appeal question it, and recede from the tacit admission (1). It has been said that the duty of raising issues rests under the Code on the Court, and that an admission cannot be inferred from the omission to ask the Court to raise an issue (2). The Court no doubt frames the attention to it, with a view to ascertain if it is contested or admitted, and if contested to raise an issue on it. If this is done and no issue is raised, then the averment must be taken to be admitted, otherwise these provisions are useless. As regards other cases, something may depend on the circumstances, but if the dictum cited was intended to be of general application, it is, with respect, submitted to be unsound.

"One party."—That is ordinarily the plaintiff on one side and the defendant on the other. An issue between co defendants is generally not allowable (3). In some cases, however, this may be done, as where the recording and determination of such issue is necessary to giving the appropriate relief to the plaintiff (4). No issue can be decided between co defendants if the suit is dismissed (5).

"Shall" Omission to settle issues.—The Court is directed to do so, and to omit to settle in order that the parties may before the trial know to what points they would have to address themselves is a great irregularity (6). At the same time, if it appears that the necessary points have been raised and discussed, the omission to settle issues is not fatal to the trial of the suit (7). The Code contemplates the settlement of issues whether there is a written statement or not, though it is not obligatory on the Court to frame issues if the defendant makes no defence (8). And where both parties invoked the decision of the Court upon a question raised by the pleadings and the question was argued,

it was held that the judgment upon it was not ultra vires because an issue was not framed embracing the whole question (1) Where, however, a settlement of issues is considered necessary the case may be remanded on appeal for a new trial after settling and recording the points in dispute, (2) as also where the issue does not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main question to be decided (3)

On what fixed.—In the first place issues may be framed on the plaint and written statement which are the pleadings in the suit (4) When the issues come to be stated wider questions may be propounded (5) The Court is not bound to try the suit in the manner in which the plaint is framed, for its object is merely to bring the matter in dispute between the parties before the Court but on the settlement of issues the Judge is to ascertain the question (6) In fact the issues fixed, and not the pleadings, ought to guide the parties as to production of evidence (7) The real points, however, are often missed or obscured by the infelicitous mode of drawing pleadings which sometimes prevails in the Mofussil And it is therefore the duty of the judge to ascertain from enquiry of the parties or their pleaders the real points in dispute between them A Court is not bound down to the language of the pleadings (8) Issues, it has been said, may be settled even where a plaint discloses no cause of action (9) though a Court has also in such case a discretion to reject it A defendant is not precluded from setting up a defence which does not appear in his written statement (10) But the issues raised should not be inconsistent with the pleadings Thus, where the plaintiff sued alleging a deed purporting to be executed by himself to be a forgery, the Court should not admit the inconsistent issue whether it was executed under undue influence (11) The Court may also look to interrogatories and contents of documents produced

What should be subject of issues—As a general rule only such averments should be made the subject of issues as are essential to support the cause of action and are denied by the defendant, or as are essential to support a plea and are denied by the plaintiff, and mere pieces of evidence which are to be adduced to enable the Court to infer the truth of a material statement ought not to be made the subject of separate issues (1) Where a fact is expressly or impliedly admitted no issue, of course, arises, nor is proof of that fact necessary. But where the proof given falls short of legal requirements, the mere default of a party to contest a point which also falls short of an admission will not avail to cure the actual want of evidence (2) If a plaint and its proof lead to particular issues the Court should raise them and give relief, provided they do not come by surprise on the defendant and are within the scope of and not inconsistent with the pleadings (3) But a plaintiff will not be allowed to set up one case, and having proved another, ask issues to be raised to suit the proof (4) See, however, notes on "Amendment of Issues," post If a case not alleged by the plaintiff is disclosed on the evidence the Court can allow it to be set up, provided a specific issue is raised for it, and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it (5)

by them (1) Where a defendant pleaded limitation but placed that issue upon the simple fact that he himself had possession for twelve years and upwards which issue was found against him held it was too late for the defendant in appeal to object that that finding did not dispose of the issue of limitation (2)

Order of disposal—A Court is not under any obligation as to the order in which it is to try the issues which are raised before it, but may dispose of them in the way which it considers most likely to conduce to the ascertainment of the truth (3) But issues should be tried separately, and not mixed up together (4) Issues of law may, under the circumstances stated in r 2, be tried first (5)

"Nothing in this rule"—It was held under the Code of 1859, that if both parties appear, issues should be recorded, but if the defendant does not appear it is not possible to ascertain the points at which the parties are at variance In such a case a Court does not frame issues, but hears the cases ex parte (6) The rule expressly excludes such a case

Amendment of issues—It will be observed that the word "may" occurs in the early part, and the word "shall" in the concluding portion of the first paragraph of r 5 The power of amending issues is almost the same as that given by the Common Law Procedure Act, and it has been held that a Judge is not bound to make such amendments, except for the purpose of more effectually putting in issue, and trying, the real question in controversy as disclosed by the pleadings on either side In some cases the Courts, in their discretion, have gone beyond this, and, where no injustice would be done to either party, have allowed issues to be raised on matters which do not strictly come within the scope of the pleadings The power to allow such amendments is given by the first part of the rule which give a discretion, and not under the obligatory words of the latter part of the rule (7) The power which is given to the Court by r 5 (corresponding with sect 141 of the Code of 1859) to modify the issues in the course of the trial is meant to enable it to bring out the questions really arising out of the counter averments of the parties It is not intended that the Judge should take the case altogether out of the hands of the litigants and make for the plaintiff or defendant a case which he had no intention of making for himself (8) A Court's power of raising additional issues is co extensive with its power of amending plaints, and is subject to the same restrictions. A Court therefore was held not authorized by the corresponding section to this rule to frame new issues which had the effect of altering the nature of the suit (1). A permission to a defendant to file a supplemental answer does not entitle him to make a new case or raise a fresh issue in contradiction of his former defence (2). Every matter fairly within the scope of the plaint, if important for the decision of the substantive difference between the parties, should be framed into an issue, and the duty of framing them is thrown on the Court in order to render substantial justice, and to prevent a party suing from being remitted to a new suit, when, by a suitable order as to terms upon which amendment shall be made, the Court, by framing additional issues, can determine in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties (3).

The rule says "at any time" before decree. But when there has been a hearing and settlement of issues, the Court will, ordinarily, not exercise its discretionary power to raise a new issue except on clear proof of inadvertence, or mistake, or the discovery of new matters affecting the merits not within the knowledge of the parties at the date of the former settlement of issues (4). If the Court intends to frame an additional issue, it should do so and then fix a day for the further hearing upon such issue. It should not merely record its intention to do so and leave the actual framing for the time of giving judgment (5). A plaint has been amended in first appeal and the suit remanded for the determination of a fresh issue arising upon such amendment (6). The form, however, of a suit may not allow of particular rights being declared in it (7). An amendment may be set aside in appeal (8).

Although, under certain circumstances, a Judge at a trial may allow amendments or raise issues other than those settled, yet when a Judge at the settlement of issues, has refused to raise a certain issue, that question ought not to be reopened at the trial, and the Judge at the trial ought not to modify the issues so as to re-open any question which the Judge settling the issues has decided (9). When a Judge transfers a case to his own file he is at liberty to amend the issues first laid down, and to frame additional issues and to go into the whole case, except upon any question upon which there has been a judicial finding (10). The first part of cl. (1) of r. 5 leaves it in the discretion of the Court to frame such additional issues as it thinks fit, but the latter part makes it imperative to frame such additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy (1)

Appellate Courts—In appeal the case should be dealt with not on the mere wording of the plaint, but on the issues settled for trial, and the manner in which the case was tried by the first Court (2) A ground of defence, which was not taken in the written statement nor made the subject of issue, was not allowed to be argued (3) Where issues have not been settled, but the judgment states the points for consideration which appear to have been raised by the parties, then these points have been taken as the issues (4) Where a new issue is raised in the Appellate Court, it should be done in such a way as to give the parties the fullest opportunity of producing evidence upon it (5) See O XLI IT 25, 26.

6. Where the parties to a suit are agreed as to the question of fact or of law to be decided between them, they may state the same in the form of an issue, and enter into an agreement in writing that, upon the finding of the Court in the affirmative or the negative of such issue,—

Questions of fact or law may by agreement be stated in form of issues.

7. Where the Court is satisfied, after making such inquiry as it deems proper,—

Court, if satisfied that agreement was executed in good faith, may pronounce judgment.

(a) that the agreement was duly executed by the parties,

(b) that they have a substantial interest in the decision of such question as aforesaid, and

(c) that the same is fit to be tried and decided,

it shall proceed to record and try the issue and state its finding or decision thereon in the same manner as if the issue had been framed by the Court, and shall, upon the finding or decision on such issue, pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement, and, upon the judgment so pronounced, a decree shall follow.

Agreement to state issue—These rules deal with the stating by consent of a special issue in a suit, whilst O XXXVI deals with proceedings without suit on the agreement of the parties (1) These rules provide for what may be called the adjustment or compromise of a suit, not absolutely as does O XXIII r 3, but contingently on the opinion of the Court on certain issues of fact or law submitted to it (2) Upon the finding of that issue the adjustment or compromise becomes absolute, and when it does, the duty of the Court is to pronounce judgment (3) The word “may” in the corresponding section to r 7 meant “shall,” and the Court was bound to give judgment according to the agreement, even though specific performance of it might ordinarily be refused (4) In a case decided under the Code of 1859 the defendants filed a regular appeal. The respondent objected that no appeal would lie as both parties had entered into an agreement in writing to abide by the determination of a single issue set forth in the agreement, and which had been decided against the appellant. It was held that the Lower Court’s decision on an issue so determined by agreement could not be contested in the appeal which was dismissed (5) These rules deal with a question being referred to the finding of the Court. But where the question of fact was referred to the finding of a Commissioner it was held that the principles laid down in these rules were applicable and that the defendants were estopped

ORDER XV.

Disposal of the Suit at the first Hearing.

1. Where at the first hearing of a suit it appears that [s. 1]
 the parties are not at issue on any question Parties not at issue. of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment.

Parties not at issue — This rule corresponds with sect 114 of the Code of 1859, and 152 of the last Code. If the defendants voluntarily appear in Court and confess judgment, no summons is necessary for their appearance, and the Court may at once give judgment for the plaintiffs (1). When the plaintiff sues the right person, but serves the summons on another person of a similar name, who appears and denies liability the suit should be dismissed with costs (2).

2. Where there are more defendants than one and any one [s. 1] of the defendants is not at issue with the

 the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants

One defendant not at issue — In an action commenced against several joint debtors, judgment recovered against one of them who admits the claim does not bar the further prosecution of the suit against the others (3).

3 (1) Where the parties are at issue on some question of [s. 1] law or of fact, and issues have been framed Parties at Issue by the Court as hereinbefore provided, if the Court is satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, and that no injustice will result from proceeding with the suit forthwith, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and, if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision, may pronounce judgment accordingly, whether the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only or for the final disposal of the suit.

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them objects.

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

Determination of issue—A Judge cannot dispose of a suit at the first hearing if a party appears and objects to the adoption of that procedure (1) When a summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, a Judge should not proceed and try the cause unless under the circumstances laid down in this rule, for otherwise he might preclude a party from adducing evidence in support of his case, (2) but if the evidence adduced is decisive of the matter in dispute, then the Judge may dispose of the cause unless either of the parties distinctly objects and asks for time to produce evidence in support of his case (3)

In the under mentioned case (4) the Privy Council observed "Before entering upon the particular questions raised by this appeal, it may be right to observe, that the Courts in India, in disposing of the case, were bound to proceed as the High Court appears to have proceeded, upon the facts alleged by the plaintiff, and upon the assumption of the truth of those facts. When a plaintiff, on certain alleged facts, asks relief, and is unable to obtain a trial of the facts, and a hearing on the facts that he may establish, by reason of the conclusions of law which the Judge forms on the case in its then condition, justice requires that the Court should proceed upon the plaintiff's allegations. The case must be determined as if it had arisen on a demurrer to a pleading or to evidence where such procedure exists. Courts cannot be justified in refusing to allow cases to go to proof upon any other assumption than that the facts alleged are capable of proof, and are proved. This assumption of the truth of the facts alleged must, however, be limited to the consideration of the legal effect of the facts alleged upon the bars raised against the trial of those facts

4. Where the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit and either party fails to produce evidence, without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues

Failure to produce evidence—It was held under sect 145 of the Code of 1859, which corresponds to this rule, that although a case may have been set down for final disposal, yet if it be a case in which further evidence is required the Judge is bound to adjourn the case, unless he is satisfied that the plaintiff has, without sufficient cause, failed to produce his evidence (5)

The circumstance that the application is made at a late stage is no ground for refusing it though the Court may when the case is heard, refuse to adjourn the hearing (6)

(1) See Chunder P. v. Arango Munjuz, 23 W. R. 82 (1874), where the Court held that parties who have the benefit of legal advice ought to be left to manage their own cases without interference from the Court.

Under the Code of 1859 the Court had very little, if any, discretion at all in the matter, and the present as well as the last Code show there is none except where there is abuse of procedure. See Rajendro Naram v. Rajah Kumud Naram, 3 C. L. R. 569, as regards exemption from giving evidence in Court, see s. 401.

(4) Ram Phul Pandey v. Wahed Ali Khan, supra.

(5) Sect. 151 of 257, Cr. Pr. Code, though there was no express provision of the same character in the last Code, the matter might have been dealt with under the inherent power stated.

(6) Haji Ahmad v. Haji Mahamad, 9 B. 308 (1884), Abdul Kadir v. Shaikh Abu Mirdha, 24 W. R. 240 (1870). Under the Code of 1859 the Court had a discretion to refuse summons if the application was made at a time which appeared to render it impossible that the witnesses should be brought. Rajendro Naram v. Rajah Kumud Naram, 3 C. L. R. 569 (1878). Indro Chunder v. Dunlop, 9 W. R. 530 (1868), but see Brojo Nath Mookhopadhyay v. Pretap Chunder, 22 W. R. 236 (1874), and now the Court should issue summonses at the applicant's risk, and unless proper cause is shown refuse to adjourn the hearing if the witness is not in attendance. Bhagwat Das v. Dabi Das, 16 A. 218 (1891).

Where the party had himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses it was held that his failure to do so was no sufficient reason for depriving the party of his right to have subpoenas issued, although it might be a reason for not waiting for them if the plaintiff's case had been in other respects finished before they could be examined (1). In fact the question whether a Court should issue a summons or should adjourn, are two entirely distinct matters (2). The Court has, except in cases of manifest abuse of procedure, no discretion to refuse an application for summons. Even after issues have been fixed or the hearing has commenced, the Court must grant summonses if applied for, though it may inform the party applying that it does not intend to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witness. For it might happen that the hearing was not concluded before the witness appeared and that it would be right to hear the witness so summoned, (3) and a Court cannot tell beforehand what means a party may have for facilitating the attendance of his witnesses (4). If the Court wrongly refuses summons the High Court may interfere in revision (5). If summons has been granted and the witness does not appear, the Court will proceed unless an application is made is shown. The Court first fails, or to take stronger measures, as to which see O. XVI. rr. 10-12, 17, 18. It is, however, the business of the party to move the Court to do what is necessary for his case (6). When, however, a witness has been summoned to give evidence in a case which is not reached, it is not necessary to issue a fresh summons to the witness. He need only be warned that his attendance will be required on the day to which the hearing of the case may be postponed (7). The question of the issue of summons must also be distinguished from the question whether a party will be allowed to supplement his evidence after his case has been closed (8).

2. (1) The party applying for a summons shall, before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed, pay into Court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

(2) In determining the amount payable under this rule, the Court may, in the case of any person summoned to give evidence as an expert, allow reasonable remuneration for the time occupied both in giving evidence and in performing any work of an expert character necessary for the case

(3) Where the Court is subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to any rules made in that behalf

Expenses of witnesses—See sect 151 of Act VIII of 1859 Before a witness is summoned, a sufficient sum for his expenses in going to and from the Court and for one day's attendance must be deposited in Court (1) It was in an early case (2) held that the sum fixed must have reference to the travelling expenses or other charges of a similar nature, and where a witness who had incurred no expense in travelling asked for compensation for loss of time the application was refused A party need not pay any more into Court until it has fixed what is reasonable (3) Once sworn, a witness must give his evidence even though his expenses have not been paid But he does not cease on that account to be under the protection of the Court, and he is entitled to be paid his expenses though he has not applied for them before giving his evidence (4) The provisions relating to the payment of witnesses no doubt contemplate that the expenses should be paid by the party who asks the Court to summon the witness before he gives his evidence but they do not declare that unless this is done the Court has no power to require their payment They are intended for the benefit of the person summoned and there is nothing in them to protect the party who asks the Court to issue a summons from his liability to pay the expenses of the witness if the Court per incuriam or in order to save delay issues the summons without seeing that the party applying for it discharges the duty imposed on him by law If he partially fails in such duty, and deposits some part but not the whole of the expenses the Court may require him to pay a further sum, and may levy the amount summarily from him There is no reason why the party should be in a better position when he fails to deposit any part of the expenses or if the witness has given his evidence than if he has not done so (5) A Court while bound to fix a reasonable amount to defray the expenses of a witness may allow only travelling expenses and charges of a similar nature not including compensation for loss of time It may be a question whether this is in all cases sufficient The case of expert witnesses is, however, recognized as exceptional and the section has been amended to allow of a fee to such a witness or to produce a document, the provisions as to witnesses shall apply to him so far as they are applicable

Parties—The preceding rules deal with witnesses who are not parties. A party may appear by pleader or in person. In the former case if the pleader refuses or is unable to answer any material question the Court may direct the absent party to attend under O X r 4 and on his failure to do so may pronounce judgment against him. If a party whether appearing by pleader or in person who is present in Court refuses without lawful excuse to carry out an order under r 20 the penalty is that stated therein. Under sect 170 of the Code of 1859 a party who being summoned to give evidence or to produce a document failed without lawful excuse to comply with the order was also liable to have judgment passed against him. But this section has not been re enacted and by sect 178 of the last Code and r 21 of this Code a party is to be dealt with in such a case on the same footing as any person summoned as a witness. The liability therefore to judgment in case of default is limited to the specific instances mentioned in O X rr 4 and 20 supra. Contempt of Court may be punished by fine and imprisonment (1). This rule gives a further power which is one to be used with forbearance and is to be enforced generally in cases of contumacious refusal (2). What is or is not lawful excuse must depend upon the circumstances of each case. The decision in one case can scarcely be a guide in another unless the facts are precisely the same (3). R 20 applies to Probate cases but it will not justify the Judge in dispensing with proof of the execution of a will (4). It has

Adjournments

1. (1) The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, at any stage of the suit grant time to the parties or to any of them, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit

(2) In every such case the Court shall fix a day for the further hearing of the suit and may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the costs occasioned by the adjournment

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded

"Grant time"—That is at the instance of the parties It has been held that the sections in the last Code which correspond with this and the next rule did not apply to an adjournment which is not made at the instance of the parties but which is necessitated by the rules of Court which regulates the disposition of its own business (1)

"Sufficient cause"—This must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case and precedents (2) are not generally of use The Court however should act reasonably and with indulgence towards litigants where there is no ground for imputing a deliberate intention to delay A party has a legal right to ask the assistance of the Court in obtaining summons to or a commission for the examination of a witness But if he has delayed so long that he fails to get the process executed in sufficient time he of course must take the consequences of his delay The Court will not adjourn the case to remedy his neglect (3)

Costs—This rule gives the Court ample discretion as to the particular directions to be given in the matter of costs occasioned by the adjournment

(3) Hari Dass v Meer Moazzam, 15 W R 447 (1871)

Sufficient opportunity should be given to the party obtaining the adjournment to enable him to carry out the order of the Court and produce his evidence (1)

Review. Appeal—Once an order for adjournment has been made it should not be rescinded on review unless on good and sufficient cause shown and in the presence of the other party (2) Orders under this rule are not open to appeal (3) Their propriety can be questioned in an appeal from the final decree An Appellate Court, however, is not generally inclined to interfere with inferior Courts, in the exercise of the discretion allowed to them to grant or refuse an adjournment (4) An order made by a Judge of the High Court at settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of a suit is not an order under this rule and is appealable under the Letters Patent (5)

2 Where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear on day fixed. to appeal, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX or make such other order as it thinks fit

Applicability—This rule is an application to adjourned hearings of the procedure prescribed for the first hearing The distinction between this rule and the next is that where there is a default in the appearance of the parties and their pleaders on the date fixed for the adjourned trial of the suit, a decree may be passed under this rule and subsequently the case may be revived under O IX r 9, but where time has been given to one of the parties to do an act and he fails, the order is passed under the next rule, and the matter cannot be revived but is only subject to review of judgment or to appeal (6) This rule, which speaks of the disposal of the suit includes cases in which there may not be any materials before the Court to enable it to pronounce a decision on the merits The next rule contemplates a case in which the Court has materials before it to enable it to proceed to a decision of the suit The contingency, however contemplated in this rule may happen in a case which falls within the letter of the next rule In such a case, if there are no materials on the record, the appropriate procedure to follow would be that laid down in this rule, whereas if there are materials the Court should proceed under the next rule (7) The effect of this rule is to make O IX r 8 applicable to adjourned hearings of cases (8) See notes to that rule

“Any day.”—That is the specific day to which the suit is adjourned. The

the hearing of the case, if the hearing had not taken place on the day originally fixed (2)

“Dispose.”—This term in this rule refers not only to the disposal of the suit ex parte, but also to the final disposal of it, and includes therefore not only the procedure up to the passing of the decree, but also the procedure for setting aside that decree when made. A Court, therefore, which has rightly dismissed a suit on an adjourned hearing by virtue of the provisions of this rule and O IX r 8, may also restore it under r 9 of that Order (3)

“Other order.”—The Court is not bound to proceed under the rules mentioned (4)

Appeal.—It was held that an order dismissing a suit at an adjourned hearing for non appearance of the plaintiff and his pleader was an order under sect 157 of the last Code, and its consequential sect 102 and not 158 and a refusal to consider an application under sect 103 of that Code was appealable (5). No appeal was held to lie from an order under the section corresponding with this rule read with sect 108 of the last Code setting aside a decree passed ex parte in default of appearance of the defendant on the day to which the hearing of the suit had been adjourned. Under O XLIII an appeal is given in the case of orders under rr 9 and 13 (6)

3. Where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith

Court may proceed notwithstanding either party fails to produce evidence, etc.

Applicability.—This rule applies to a party to whom time has been given to do some act and who makes default (7). As to the distinction between it and the last rule see notes to that rule and post. It was held under the last Code that the former section did not apply to proceedings in execution (1)

"Any party"—The rule does not refer to adjournments by the Court at its own motion, (2) and appears to apply to a case where any one party and not both has had a case adjourned (3). Where after issues had been settled the hearing was adjourned to a fixed date for final disposal, and on that date plaintiff did not appear on which the suit was dismissed, it was held that the former section did not apply, as it had been adjourned in the ordinary way and not in favour of either party for the purposes mentioned (4).

"To whom time"—A date must be fixed within which the act must be done. The stringent provisions of the rule cannot be put in force unless the party has had distinct notice in respect of time of what is required of him and default in the matter of time is of the essence of the particular kind of default contemplated (5).

"Fails"—It must be shown that a specific order has been disobeyed either as regards time (vide ante) or otherwise. So as costs are ordinarily recoverable in execution there is no default to obey an order as to costs in the absence of a specific direction making the payment of costs a condition precedent to the hearing of the evidence of the party in default (6). Where the Court refused to grant plaintiff's application to be allowed to examine a defendant as a witness on her behalf and on the adjourned date of hearing the plaintiff failed to produce any other witness it was held that as plaintiff's application should not have been refused she had not committed default (7).

"Any other act"—The rule while mentioning the production of evidence and the attendance of witnesses (8) says any other act, provided that that act is necessary to the further progress of the suit, such as the payment of costs for the issue of a commission (9) but not where the plaintiff fails to make up a deficiency in respect of stamp such matter having been provided for by sect 54 now O VII r 11 ante (10).

"To decide the suit"—Default does not lead to the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit or the decreeing of the claim against the defendant if the plaintiff or defendant make default respectively (11) nor is an order striking the case off the file regular (1) The words "notwithstanding such default" clearly imply that the Court is to proceed with the disposal of the suit, in spite of the default upon such materials as are before it. If in the case of a plaintiff such materials fail to substantiate the claim the suit will be dismissed for this reason and not for the default. If default be by the defendant the suit cannot be decreed without taking any evidence or without reference to the evidence which has already been adduced. In both cases the decree is on the merits (2) The effect of a decision, provided that the case comes within the terms of the rule (3) is to bar a second suit (4) Under the Code of 1859 the Court was bound to decide the suit "on the record". The effect of these latter words was that though the Appellate Court could remand a case for decision the Lower Court could not admit any evidence after the remand, but was bound to decide it on the record as it stood when the case was remanded (5) These words were omitted in the former Code. Where a suit is dismissed under this rule on the merits, the plaintiff's remedy is by way of appeal (6)

ORDER XVIII.

Hearing of the Suit and Examination of Witnesses.

1. The plaintiff has the right to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin

"Right to begin"—This rule is taken from the Explanation to sect 179 of the last Code, the remainder of the section being incorporated in the next rule. The party on whom the onus probandi lies as developed by the record must begin. As to this, see the Authors' Evidence Act, 5th ed, pp 629-70. At the hearing of a case on a preliminary issue the defendant by whom the issue is raised has the right to begin, (1) and if in appeal the respondent objects that no appeal lies the appellant begins (2)

2 (1) On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove

(2) The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the Court generally on the whole case

(3) The party beginning may then reply generally on the whole case

3 Where there are several issues, the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party, and, in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning; but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case.

Statement and production of evidence—The first paragraph of r 2 is the first paragraph of sect 179 of the last Code. The third rule is taken from sect 180. The plaintiff and such of the defendants as support the plaintiff's case, wholly or in part, must address the Court and call their evidence first, and the other party (namely the persons opposed to the plaintiff's case and that of the defendants supporting it) must address the Court and call their evidence (1)

4. The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Court in the presence of the witnesses to be examined in open Court and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge.

Witnesses—The parties must select their witnesses, summon them, and if they do not attend, move the Court to secure their attendance, and when a Commission has been issued the Court must be moved to wait for the return. It is not the business of the Court to determine what witnesses shall be examined. They should then call upon the Court to examine such of them as may be offered for examination (2). It is the duty of the Court to examine every witness tendered, though he has not been summoned or his name has not been enlisted in the list, (3) unless it is clear that the intention of the party producing the witness is to delay or obstruct justice (4). He should not select a certain number only for examination, (5) nor send some away because he had examined as many on one side as on the other, (6) or because he thinks their evidence will probably not be of much value, (7) or because they would only prove the same facts as already deposed to (8). It is in the discretion of the Court of first instance to allow a party to call further evidence after he has closed his case (9). 13 In cases in which an appeal is not allowed, it shall not be necessary to take down the evidence of the witnesses in writing at length; but the Judge, as the examination of each witness proceeds, shall make a memorandum of the substance of what he deposes, and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Judge and shall form part of the record.

Evidence in appealable cases.—This rule does not apply to High Courts or the Punjab Chief Court in the exercise of their original Civil jurisdiction. See O XLIX r 3, and note to r 5. It is not in force in the Central Provinces. See Act II of 1879, sect 19 and sect 3, ante. The rule is also applicable to suits for the recovery of rent in Bengal whether an appeal is allowed or not (sect 148 (f), Act VIII of 1885). For power to direct that evidence in suits between landlord and tenant in agricultural villages in Ajmere and Merwara be taken in the form prescribed by the rule see the Ajmere Courts Regulation (I of 1877), sect 29. In Bengal there is no fixed practice but, as a rule the memorandum is written legibly in the vernacular of the Judge or in English if he is sufficiently acquainted with that language, and signed by the Judge and dated (1) A Judge of a Small Cause Court is bound to take down in the language of the witness the substance of what each deposes (2).

ORDER XIX.

Affidavits.

- 1.] 1. Any Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing, on such conditions as the Court thinks reasonable.

Power to order any point to be proved by affidavit.

Provided that where it appears to the Court that either party bonâ fide desires the production of a witness for cross examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit.

by affidavit subject to the proviso Affidavits cannot in this case be used without an order of Court, nor at all if the opposite party desires the production of the witness for cross examination (1) It is common practice to admit affidavits at the hearing when there is no contention as to the facts, which, however, have to be proved and cannot be admitted as against minor parties to the suit. The words "of first instance and any Appellate Court" after the words "any Court" have been omitted as doubtless redundant.

- 5.] 2 (1) Upon any application evidence may be given by affidavit, but the Court may, at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross examination of the deponent.

Power to order attendance of deponent for cross-examination.

(2) Such attendance shall be in Court, unless the deponent is exempted from personal appearance in Court, or the Court otherwise directs.

Affidavits in interlocutory proceedings—This rule is taken from O 38, r 1. The practice here is the reverse of that which takes place at the hearing, affidavits being the rule and attendance for in loco cross examination the exception. There is no obligation on the Court to make an order for cross examination upon an affidavit filed in a motion (2) As a rule in interlocutory proceedings, cross examination is not allowed because it would defeat the whole object of such proceedings, namely, despatch. The party moving has however, a right to file affidavits in reply. Ordinarily these affidavits are confined to rebutting the allegations of the opposite party and should not bring forward further direct proof of the applicant's case which should have been given in the original affidavits upon which the application is made. As to persons exempted, see sects 133, 135, ante

3 (1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the [s] deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statements of his belief may be admitted provided that the grounds thereof are stated

Matters to which affidavits shall be confined

(2) The costs of every affidavit which shall unnecessarily set forth matters of hearsay or argumentative matter, or copies of or extracts from documents, shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid by the party filing the same

Form and contents of affidavits—The affidavit consists firstly of the "title" Every affidavit should be constituted in the cause or matter in which it is sworn, giving the style of the Court the matter or suit in which it is made and the names of the parties as given in the proceedings. Then follow the name and place of abode of the deponents and after this the matter of the affidavit. This rule states what this should be (1) Evidence on information and belief, though generally admissible on interlocutory application as a matter of necessity, is not, it has been held admissible in a proceeding which though interlocutory in form, finally decides the rights of the parties (2) But it is necessary that the grounds for this belief should be shown (3) Though in practice this is frequently not done, nevertheless a party against whom such an affidavit is made is entitled to take the objection and if it be one of substance the Court is bound to pay regard to it (4) And the English Court of Appeal has commented strongly on the irregularity of an affidavit founded upon information and belief merely without giving the source of such information and belief (5) The final part is the jurat, which states that the deponent or deponents was or were sworn and the day of the month on which the affidavit was made and should describe the person before whom it was sworn and show that such person was authorized to administer the oath of the declarant. As to who are such persons see sect 139

Judgment and Decree.

3] 1 The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders

Judgment when pronounced.

Judgment—Act VIII of 1859, sect 183 It does not apply to High Courts (1) in their original jurisdictions As to the taking of evidence, see Order XVIII The meaning of the rule is (2) that judgment must be given upon evidence duly recorded before the Judge himself, except where the Code allows of such evidence being taken before another Judge or person, as in the case of O XVIII rr 15 16 or commissions under Order XXVI As to the meaning of the term 'judgment,' see notes to sect 2, ante There is no objection to a Judge at the close of the hearing stating at once orally the judgment which he intends to record and deliver but he must afterwards pronounce his written judgment in open Court (3) It was held that the pronouncing of judgment out of Court—though an irregularity—was not a good ground of appeal (4) At the same time a failure to observe the provisions of the section in this respect has been strongly disapproved of, for apart from its being contrary to law the omission to pronounce judgment in open Court is highly inconvenient and deprives the Court and litigants of a valuable safeguard against error Pleaders should attend when judgment is pronounced and assist the Court by pointing out any error that may occur (5)

Predecessor's Judgment—This rule adopts the decision in Parbutty v Higgins, (1) which distinguished Mutty Lull Sen v. Desh Kar Roy, (2) where the written opinions were regarded as mere minutes, and not as judgments, on the ground that in order to there being a final judgment of the Court, there must have been a final meeting and consideration by all the Judges who heard the case as to what their judgment was to be (3). An objection having been raised to the legality of a judgment on the ground that the Judge wrote it after he had been transferred, it was held that this section afforded an answer. (4) It is not necessary that the judgment should have been written by the Judge before he has taken leave or left the post which he was occupying when he heard the case (5). This rule is not mandatory (6).

3. The judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by section 152 or on review.

"Altered."—Act VIII of 1859, sect 185. Rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts (O XLIX r 3) in their original jurisdictions. Where a party dies after hearing, but before judgment, which is reserved, entry may be made nunc pro tunc (7). The judgment, which must be written, may be altered either before pronouncement, or after pronouncement, but before signature, provided that in such latter case the alteration is itself pronounced. This rule prohibits the Judge, subject to the exceptions stated, from adding to (or altering (8)) his judgment after he has pronounced, dated, and signed it (9). Where a Court raises several issues, and records findings on some only of them, it is not open to it subsequently to add to its judgment further findings on the remaining issues, although they may lead to the same conclusions as previously arrived at (10). In the High Court, where judgments are often delivered orally and taken down by the Assistant Registrar, the Judge may and does usually, revise the judgment out of Court before signature, and then returns the judgment to the record.

Small Cause Courts — See sect 185 of Code of 1859 The rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts (O XLIX r 3) It is in conformity with the limited summary jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts that their judgments should also be of a summary character invested with Small Cause Court, reasons for the decision, and thus Courts (O XLIX r 3) This rule renders it imperative upon the Court to pronounce its opinion upon such issues as may be necessary for the disposal of the suit. It does not, however, disable the Court from determining the other issues also (1). In fact, it is convenient that this should be done where evidence has been allowed to be given on all the issues, since by omitting to do so a case may have to be remanded which might otherwise have been finally decided on appeal (2). The findings, however, on issues other than those upon the determination of which the decree is based ought not to form part of the Court's decree, and will on application for that purpose be struck out (3).

6. (1) The decree shall agree with the judgment. It shall contain the number of the suit, the names and descriptions of the parties, and particulars of the claim, and shall specify clearly the relief granted or other determination of the suit.

(2) The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the suit, and by whom or out of what property and in what proportions such costs are to be paid.

(3) The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by the other shall be set off against any sum which is admitted or found to be due from the former to the latter.

Applicability of rule.—Act VIII of 1859, sect 189. This rule does not apply to High Courts (4) in original jurisdiction. An opinion has been expressed that the section of the former Code, by virtue of the operation of sects 582 and 632 of that Code, was applicable to the High Courts on the appellate side, but that if that was not so the Court had an inherent jurisdiction to bring its decrees in accordance with its judgments (5). As to decrees in appeal, see O XLI r 35, post. A judgment ordering a decree to be entered up in terms of a petition of

As regards this case, it is to be observed that the Court need not have tried the question of occupancy at all. The question referred to in the text is whether, if evidence is taken on an issue, the Judge should express his finding on it. The case cited, however, expresses an opinion in the negative.

Contents of decree.—The decree must agree with the judgment, and under the next rule the Judge should be satisfied of such agreement before he signs it. The material findings in each case should be embodied in the decree, and if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties to avoid their being bound by decisions against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to the Court which passed the decree to amend it in accordance with the judgment, (2) for evidence cannot be given in execution to clear up uncertainty in the decree (3). Decrees should be drawn up in such a way as to be certain and capable of execution (4) and as to be self contained and capable of execution without reference to any other document (5). But if on reference to the record the defect in the decree can be so far met as to render the decree capable of execution, it should be executed (6). For though Courts should be careful not to draw up imperfect decrees, it is also just that litigants should not be deprived of the fruits of their success owing to the carelessness of the Court or its officers in the preparation of the decree (7).

In order to see what an ambiguous decree really means, the Court may look both to the judgment, pleadings and the record, for the decree states only the relief or other determination of the suit, but not the grounds of determination, nor does it afford any information as to the matters which were in issue (8). And the Judge passing the decree being the most suitable person to construe it, a Superior Court will not ordinarily feel itself justified in placing on it any different construction (9). In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court a decree of a lower Appellate Court was set aside on second appeal, not because it was erroneous but because its meaning was doubtful (10).

A person cannot get anything by execution other than that which the decree describes (11). No person takes anything under a decree unless it is given cancellation of instrument, (1) contribution, (2) of a declaratory character (3) maintenance, (4) in mortgage, (5) and in Hindu law cases, (6) see cases cited below. Where the plaintiffs were entitled to ask for the performance of the part of a contract in which they were interested, and the defendant claimed execution of the whole, to which the plaintiffs did not object, the Court, it was held, ought to have passed a decree directing execution of the whole contract instead of rejecting the claim (7).

In a suit against a legal representative, the decree should state that it is against the defendant in that character (8).

During the pendency of a suit brought by A for immoveable property, A died, and his only son was allowed to represent him. It was held that in the decree he should be described as "substituted appellant as representative of his father A" (9).

It is not within the scope of this note to discuss what relief should be granted in any particular case but certain principles of general application may be here referred to. The relief granted should be consistent with the pleadings (10). As a general rule a plaintiff should not be decreed more than, or a relief different from that are mentioned in the decree, though the judgment says they should be given (1) The mere specification of costs without an allotment of responsibility for them is not sufficient (2) But it was said to be not necessary that the specific sums which go to make up the costs should be set forth (3) Where an order denotes generally that costs should be paid, and then afterwards specifies a particular sum in respect of those costs, the specified sum comprises all the costs to which the party will be entitled (4) It is not the practice, where costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, to consider that an award of the general costs of the suit interferes with the order disposing of those partial costs (5) If there is a set off on account of costs, interest should only run after the set off has been deducted (6) The third clause is taken from sect 221 of the last Code It has been held that a decree for the payment of money and for costs in the suit is indivisible, so that its benefit as regards costs cannot be transferred apart from the rest (7) See notes to sect 35, ante

Amendment of decree—Every Court has inherent power over its own records so long as those records are in its power, and it can set right any mistake in them (8) A decree is the decree of the Court and not of the parties It is the bounden duty of a Court, of its own motion, to see that its decrees are in accordance with the judgments, and to correct them if necessary There is, therefore, no limitation for an application to amend the decree (9) R 3 prohibits the alteration of a signed and dated judgment save (except in the case of clerical errors) by review Sect 152, which embodies the third paragraph of the former sect 206 gives a power to amend the decree, it being a right incident to any Court to correct its formal records in such way if needed as will make them represent truly the decision which was intended to be judicially expressed when the judgment was delivered (1) This may be done where there is clerical or arithmetical error, (2) or a variance with the judgment (3) The power is, however, limited to this, and should not be exercised except in accordance with the terms of r 3 or sect 152, ante (4) When a decree is in perfect accordance with the judgment, it cannot, subject to the provisions of sect 152, ante be altered, however erroneous the latter may be (5) The Code gives no power to alter or vary the decree. A review of judgment or an appeal can alone do this (6) The High Court has no power to alter its own decrees except under the provisions of this rule or sect 114, ante (7) It has, however been recently held that a party is not limited to the remedy given by these provisions, and that a suit will lie to rectify a mistake in a decree, (8) but in another case it has been stated that this can only be in special circumstances, and that as a general rule such a suit is not maintainable (9) An application to amend may be refused if made a long time after the date of the decree, and the latter should not be amended after execution is barred (10) A decree however has been amended subsequently to a Court sale (11)

Apparently according to one view under the last Code a decree might have been altered either by way of application under sect 206 or under sect 623 (12) If an application for review was made on several grounds and one of them referred to a clerical mistake and if the other grounds were held to be untenable, the Court might reject the application and refer the applicant to his remedy under sect 206 If it did not do so but on the application for a review amended the clerical mistake the decree drawn up became the final decree and an appeal lay if it was brought within the prescribed time from such final decree (13)

Proceedings under sect 206 could not it has been said be regarded as of the same nature in any respect as proceedings under sect 623 corresponding with sect 114 In the former case the correctness of the judgment is not questioned, it is assumed, but the jurisdiction arises from the fact that the decree as drawn up and signed is not in accordance with the judgment. In the latter case, not only the correctness of the decree but the correctness of the judgment is questioned, and if the application under sect 623 (now 114) is allowed, a rehearing of the suit or appeal becomes necessary. In the former case there is no rehearing (1). It has, however, also been held that there may be a review not only where there is something faulty in the judgment itself, but in cases of amendment of decree which do not necessitate any alteration in the judgment, and that therefore an order passed on an application under the former section was substantially an order passed on review within the meaning of Art 179 of the Limitation Act (2).

There is a distinction between a case of amendment and one of novation or substitution. Where an instrument is amended so as to express the real intention which it was intended to express, but which it did not completely express, the transaction is not in substance varied but its inaccurate description is only rectified. Except, therefore, as specially provided for in sect 32 of the last Code (now O I rr 8-10, 11), an amended decree is operative from the date of the original decree (3). Assuming however, that the date of the decree is the date of the judgment, and therefore the date of the decree is not the date of amendment when the date of the judgment remains unaltered, the question arises whether an application for execution of a decree is affected by an application under this rule. It has been held that such an application is not a step in aid of execution (4) and therefore as such does not save limitation. It has however also been held that an order passed upon an application under the former section was substantially an order passed upon review of judgment within the meaning of the third clause of Art 179 of the Limitation Act, and that such an application saved limitation (5). A decree, moreover, is not operative until the amount for Court (6). It was amended the date of the time in which any appeal may be preferred against such decree. But where a decree is wrongly varied a party affected by such variation is entitled to calculate the time during which an appeal may be preferred as commencing from the date of the variation (1) The rest of the Court, however, apparently held that the time for appealing must be reckoned from the date of the original decree and not from the date of the amendment, but that it could strike out the improper amendment, no petition for revision being necessary (2)

What Court may amend—Where a decree requires amendment, the party aggrieved should apply to the Court in which it was granted, and should not appeal on this ground, as in default of such application an appeal is unnecessary (3) Where the decree was imperfect and could not be drawn up from the judgment, and the Judge who gave the judgment was no longer Judge of the district, the High Court ordered a fresh trial (4) The decree of an Appellate Court supersedes the decree of the first Court, even where the appellate decree merely affirms the original decree and does not reverse or modify it Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended is the decree to be executed, viz that of the Appellate Court, and the only Court which has jurisdiction to amend the appellate decree is the Court of Appeal If, therefore, the Appellate Court reverses modifies or affirms by dismissal of the appeal the decree of the first Court, the Lower Court has after the appellate decree, no power to amend (5) The Bombay High Court has held (6) that an exception exists to this rule in the case of appeals dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI r 11), it being said that such a dismissal leaves the decree of the Lower Court untouched, neither confirmed nor varied nor reversed with the result that it remains the decree of the Lower Court, which can amend it Practically however, the effect of such dismissal is to confirm the decree and it has also been held that the Lower Court cannot amend either in the case of appeals dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI r 11) or tried after notice to the respondent (7) Where a decree after being affirmed on appeal is amended by the original Court and no step is taken to set aside the amended decree the latter is binding between the parties and its validity cannot be challenged in execution proceedings on the ground that the original Court had no jurisdiction to make the amendment (1) The Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to amend a decree on the application of a non appealing defendant, when the decree has been confirmed on an appeal by the other defendants (2)

In executing a decree the Court of execution must take the decree as it finds it. It cannot amend the decree or alter it in any way, though it is bound, of course, to construe the decree. The decree in execution may be the decree of the High Court, and the proper Court to execute that decree may be the Court of the Munsif by whom the suit was first decided. The Munsif in respect of a decree made by an Appellate Court would be bound, as the Court executing the decree, to execute the decree whether he approved of it or not, even if the decree had been one made by himself (3). And no evidence can be given in execution to amend uncertainty in the decree sought to be executed (4).

Notice—The Court can only amend the decree after such notice as may enable either party to prefer objections (5).

Erroneous order of amendment, how to be attacked—An order passed amending a decree is a separate adjudication and is not merely a part of the original decree (6). Such an order is not appealable (7). It may, however, be revised under sect. 622 (now s. 115) (8) or, it has been held, sect. 15, of the Charter (9). As already observed, the decisions are not entirely agreed upon the point whether a wrong order should be attacked by way of appeal from the decree as amended or by way of revision of the order of amendment. It is plain that if a decree is properly amended and exception is taken to the decree and not to the amendment, then an appeal should be brought against the amended decree. If no objection is taken to the decree as originally framed, but it is alleged that it has been improperly amended, then, as what is complained of is the order of amendment, the remedy should be according to the weight of authority by way of revision of the order of amendment, and not by way of appeal against the amended decree The third case is where there is objection both to the original decree and to the amendment on the ground that it was not warranted, there being no variance or clerical error. It is not clear on the authorities what course should be taken, but it would appear reasonable to allow all questions in such a case to be raised in an appeal from the amended decree. An order amending can be objected to in execution of the decree (1) and an appeal lies from an order passed in execution (2).

High Court—Rules 1-8 of this Order do not apply. See O XLIX r 3.

Revision—It was held that proceedings under sect. 206 of the last Code terminated in an order which could be dealt with on revision, as where the Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in making an addition to the decree not warranted by the judgment (3).

7. The decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced, and, when the Judge has satisfied himself that the decree has been drawn up in accordance with the judgment, he shall sign the decree.

Decree—This rule does not apply to High Courts in exercise of original jurisdiction, O XLIX r 3. When a person has the judgment of the Court that he shall have a decree it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decree when it is drawn up afterwards relates back to that time (4). But a formal decree must follow judgment, and is a necessary part of the ultimate procedure in all suits though inadvertently it is not in so many terms required by the Code as a necessary proceeding after judgment. Without a decree a judicial record does not speak and wanting it no proceeding subsequent to the judgment can with any certainty be taken. It is in substance as well as form the mouthpiece of the suit in its immediate result (5). Whatever be the form of decree a separate formal decree should be drawn up. A copy of the judgment with the schedule of costs appended is insufficient (6). A decree must be in a civil suit (7) and differs from an order in that the former expresses the result of the judicial proceeding by way of suit or appeal and so far as suits and appeals are concerned, the latter are confined to such orders as are given in the course of proceedings and do not finally dispose of them. Date—The decree must bear the date on which judgment is delivered, and not the date on which it is drawn up, (1) and a decree operates from this date and not from that on which it may be subsequently amended (2) Limitation thus runs from the date the decree bears, that is, the date of the judgment, (3) though a suitor is entitled, in computing the period within which he can appeal, to deduct the time between the delivery of the judgment and the actual issuing of the decree (4)

"Satisfied himself."—It is the duty of the parties, or rather, of their pleaders, to see that a decree is drawn up in the proper form, and the signatures of the pleaders are generally obtained before the decree is finally signed (5) But though the duties of the pleaders remain as they were the Judge is not relieved by any action on their part from satisfying himself personally as to the correctness of his decree

"Sign."—After the decree has been duly signed it becomes and must be regarded as a decree of that date Once a judgment is pronounced and the decree signed, it becomes a final decree, which may become the subject matter of appeal or review It cannot be altered except under the provisions of sect 152 or O XX r 3, or those relating to review (6)

Decree for immoveable property.—Act VIII of 1859, sect 190. Sect 207 of 1st Code. The words "can be" have been substituted for "is identified". The decree should show distinctly and accurately what property it deals with giving the boundaries and details of the property which the Court intends shall be covered by the decree, for if these are not given the decree may be impossible of execution (1). Where this is not done the decree holder's remedy lies in an immediate application to the Court which made the decree to have it rectified (2). Evidence cannot however, be given in the execution department to amend any uncertainty in the decree (3). Where a Judge decreed possession with vaslat without declaring specifically that plaintiffs were to recover the share which they had purchased in an undivided estate or specific land representing that share, the plaintiffs were held not entitled to be put in possession of any specific lands (4).

10 Where the suit is for moveable property, and the decree

Decree for delivery of is for the delivery of such property, the moveable property. decree shall also state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery cannot be had Suit for moveable property—Act VIII of 1859, sect 191. If there is a dispute as to the moveable property claimed the Court must of course determine it before passing its decree. It cannot leave the matter to be settled in execution (5). If it then passes a decree for delivery, it must state the amount to be paid as an alternative. This is ordinarily the value of the property in question (6). The Court may also pass a decree for damages (7). This section is in accordance with English law which took away from the defendant the option to retain the goods or pay their value. Now payment can only be made if delivery cannot be had. If the goods are capable of delivery they must be delivered (8). An alternative prayer for value of goods as compensation does not alter the character of a suit (9).

11. (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may for any sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments, with or without interest, notwithstanding anything contained in the contract under which the money is payable
- (2) After the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor and with the consent of the decree holder, order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed or shall be made by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit

Decree for payment of money—Act VII of 1859, sect 194. Ordinarily, if a party is entitled to relief he is also entitled to a decree awarding it to him at once. Therefore it was held that a Court in making a decree could not allow the defendant a period for payment of the amount decreed for the effect of such an order is that the decree holder is debarred from executing his decree until the expiration of such period (1). This rule, however, authorizes the Court in a particular class of cases, viz. decrees for money, to give the debtor time to discharge the amount awarded by directing payment in instalments. But the authority given is strictly limited to these cases. Therefore the section is not applicable in a suit for the recovery of the amount of a bond debt by the sale of property hypothecated by such bond, such a suit not being merely one for money, (2) nor to a suit to enforce a lien or an annuity called nannar (3). It was, however, held to apply to cases referred to in sect. 58 of Act VII of 1869 and to give the Courts powers to make rent decrees payable by instalments (4). The former section it was held did not confer any authority on the Courts to relieve a contracting party from an express stipulation, in a bond payment by instalments, as to the consequence of default in punctual payment of the instalments (5). In the case cited the decree did not in compliance with the Code contain any direction as to the agreement to pay by instalments (6). It has been held that a decree for payment of money includes a decree made under O XXXIV r 6 (7).

"The Court."—That is to say the Court which passed the decree (1) The order may be made in or at the time of passing the decree, or subject to consent after the decree. If the case is one in which the Court itself could not have made a decree for payment by instalments, much less can the Court of execution vary that decree so as to give it an illegal effect in carrying it into execution (2) On the other hand, an order under this rule alters the decree, which can only be executed subject to such alteration (3) and therefore if the Court erroneously grants time to pay, the order if not corrected must be executed as passed (4)

"Sufficient reason"—The existence of this will depend upon the facts of the particular case. The Court will consider the circumstances under which the debt was contracted, the conduct of the debtor, his financial position, and so forth, and instalments should be directed where the defendant shows his bona fides by offering to pay anything like a fair proportion of his debt at once (5)

"Postponed" "Instalments"—Payment by instalments means that the defendant is to be directed to pay the amount decreed by partial payments to be made at specified periods. The former section did not authorize a Court to say that the defendant has the option of paying the amount decreed within a particular period after the decree (6). Now the rule expressly provides for an order postponing payment of the decretal amount. A temporary postponement is a smaller concession than a scheme of instalments, and in many cases such a discretion might be fitly exercised without waiting as under the former Code for a judgment debtor's arrest under sect 337A of that Code. The powers given should be exercised with a due consideration for the interests of the creditor as well as those of the debtor. Thus an order allowing nine years to pay a debt of Rs 110 was reversed and the period reduced by half (7). The rule gives the Court a discretion and it is not unusual to state in the order for payment by instalments that in default of payment of one instalment the whole debt shall become payable (8). The Court has a discretion to order or refuse interest but if it be the intention to give interest this should be expressly declared (9)

Order after decree — As the effect of such an order is to alter the decree, this can only be done with the consent (2) of both parties. Where a debtor applied for time to pay and notice was served on the decree holder, who did not object, the order was made absolute (3). In the under mentioned cases the question was considered whether the order passed was (4) or was not (5) an order under the second clause of this rule. The limitation for an application to pay in instalments by consent is six months from the date of the decree (6).

(2) Where an inquiry is directed under clause (b) or clause (c), a final decree in respect of the rent and mesne profits shall be passed in accordance with the result of such inquiry

Application of rule — This rule embodies with alterations the substance of sects 211 and 212 of the last Code. The corresponding sections of the Act VIII of 1859 were sects 196-197. The rule only applies to suits of the nature described where the plaintiff has a specific interest and not to a suit for partition where the plaintiff has no specific interest until decree (1) A suit for mesne profits only is not within the section (2)

"Recovery of possession of immoveable property."—The section does not apply to other suits for damages, in which suits the question of damages must ordinarily be determined at the trial (3) O XXVI r 9, however, allows a commission to issue to ascertain the amount both of any mesne profits or damages (4)

"Mesne profits."—The Code of 1859 did not contain any definition of this term The Code of 1877 added an Explanation, which was the same as that attached to sect 211 of the last Code down to the word "thereupon" That section repeated that explanation with an addition, viz "together with interest on such profits" (5) The definition of mesne profits has now been removed to sect. 2, clause (12)

Mesne profits are in the nature of damages, which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case (6) There is no analogy between interest awarded under sect 34 and mesne profits claimed and awarded under this rule (7)

The object of a suit for mesne profits is to compensate the owner of land for being kept out of possession and deprived of the profits of the land The measure of the compensation is ordinarily the loss which he has suffered (8) Where a party is dispossessed of immoveable property, the cause of action as to vasilat accrues to him on the date on which he would, but for the fact of dispossession, have received such vasilat (9) Parties in possession are liable for vasilat to the legal owners whom they keep out of possession, even though there was no mala fides on their part, (10) and whether the wrongdoer derived any profit himself from the possession of the land or not, (11) though, as the principle is that the defendant should make up to the plaintiff what he has lost, a Court is right in excluding lands of such a nature as would under ordinary circumstances yield no profit (1)

All persons in wrongful possession, irrespective of how they got in, are liable, (2) such as a mortgagor from date of foreclosure, (3) an auction purchaser whose purchase is declared invalid, (4) a person in bona fide possession without knowledge of defect in his title, (5) an iyadar together with his zemindar, (6) a body of intermediate holders combining to keep the true owner out of possession, (7) a sebat claiming the land as such (8) In the under mentioned case the defendants were not all in possession, yet as they had all combined to oppose the plaintiff's possession they were held all jointly liable for the uasul (9) But where a person is in rightful possession until a sale or decree is set aside, though he is bound to account for mesne profits the calculation of which is to be based on a proper discharge of the stewardship of the property, he is not a trespasser, and as such liable to make good any loss sustained by the rightful owner being kept out of possession (10) In the case, moreover, of any wrong, the liability of a defendant is limited to damages for the wrong which he has himself done, and if the defendant was excluded from possession he cannot be said to have actually or even impliedly received the profits, nor could he with diligence have received them (11) So the Privy Council have held that a person who had not himself received the mesne profits having come into possession of a taluk upon its being released from management under the Oudh Taluqdar's Relief Act, 1870, would not be chargeable with sums which as it was alleged, might have been received by way of mesne profits but had not been received in consequence of the manager's wilful default Whatever case might have been made against the manager of the estate, the taluqdar could not be charged with anything more than was actually received by him (12) Mesne profits ought not to be estimated for any period during which the defendant who is to be made responsible for them was not active in keeping the plaintiff out of possession Therefore a defendant cannot be made to pay in respect of years when possession was in the hands of an officer of the Court (13) But where a defendant who had been in wrongful possession abandoned the land without notice to the decree-holder, it was held that the land must be held to have continued in the judicial possession of the judgment-debtor, who was liable for mesne profits (1) In a suit for damages against several persons for jointly combining to keep plaintiff out of possession they are all equally liable to him, and none of them can restrict their liability for mesne profits to that portion only of which by their joint agreement, they were in possession (2) In some cases, however, the liability has been decided in proportion to the amount of profits that each has derived from his own individual wrongful possession (3) The Court is competent to apportion the damages in respect of the portions of land held by the defendants, aliter where the defendants have jointly taken possession of a particular portion of such land (4) It was held that a plaintiff must bring a suit against joint wrongdoers, though what he does in execution of his decree is another matter (5)

If the Court finds that a plaintiff has been dispossessed he is prima facie entitled to mesne profits in respect of the period of dispossession, and it is not necessary for him to prove the actual collections made during this period, for this is proof which he would possibly be unable to supply It is sufficient to show what is the annual profit which in ordinary years can be collected, as, for instance, the profits for the years preceding or subsequent to the period of dispossession (6)

Mesne profits include profits actually received, or which might have been received In other words, if the mesne profits actually received are those which ought to have been received, the plaintiff gets them If however, they are less than what the plaintiff could have got, they must be assessed on the basis of his possible profits The Court has to ascertain what the person in wrongful possession could have realized by ordinary diligence and not merely what he actually received (7) This really means what the plaintiff could have realized, for the person in wrongful possession may place himself in the position of, and for this purpose is taken to be in the position of the true holder, so as to charge him with the profits which might have been made by the true owner (8)

It was said to be not clear whether a Court of Equity would eat-mark the profits of a trespasser invested in real property and follow them (1)

Wilful default is charged against persons in rightful possession, though accountable for their dealings with the property. Mesne profits are chargeable against those wrongfully (2) in possession. Indeed, the adoption of the principle of wilful default would be more favourable to the defendant than the principle of the Code, for there may be values recoverable by ordinary diligence which yet it would not be wilful default not to recover (3)

Mesne profits, how calculated.—There is no abstract principle independent of the particular facts which determines the assessment of mesne profits in every case. The Court ought first to ascertain the facts and the nature of the plaintiff's possession of the land before ouster, and then determine the principle applicable in the particular case (4). When the facts are disclosed, the determining principle is this—What was the character of the possession of the plaintiff before he was ousted? and what has the owner lost? (5). Mesne profits are thus whatever profits the wrongdoer might with ordinary diligence have received from an occupation or position similar to that of the party wrongfully dispossessed, whether it be that of a cultivating ryot, landlord or zemindar (6) or talookdar (7). Where a person claiming mesne profits was himself the cultivator before dispossession, he is entitled to the profits which he would have made cultivating the land if he had not been dispossessed. The measure of damages is the value of the crops (8). And there is no distinction in respect of assessment of mesne profits between ranyati land held by a ranyat and the proprietor's cerait, or private land ordinarily cultivated by him, except as to the costs of cultivation (9). Where land is ranyati, and the true owner is a rent receiver, assessment of mesne profits should be made on the basis of fair and reasonable rent (10). Prima facie it is fair to infer that a person in possession of land may by ordinary diligence get rent for it according to the prevailing rates for such land, and that the true owner wrongfully dispossessed has been a loser by that amount (1)

If the true owner is placed in the same position as if he had all along been in possession that is all that he is ordinarily entitled to, and it is not reasonable that he should receive any additional benefit, or that the person in wrongful possession should not only make compensation but be fined as well. On this principle it has been held that ordinarily the collection and other expenses incurred by the trespasser will be allowed and that it is only when the trespass is of a very aggravated character (2) that the Court in its discretion may refuse such expenses (3). The principle has been stated in another form, namely, that costs of collection and expenses should only be allowed when the trespasser entered the land in the exercise of a bona fide claim of right, but that when the trespass is malicious and without bona fides, though the trespasser may still claim all necessary payments, such as Government revenue or ground rent, it is not imperative on the Court to allow him even such charges as would ordinarily but voluntarily be incurred by an owner in possession (4). But though a person, when sued may be entitled to a deduction he has no right to sue to recoup himself for his losses against the true owner and must bear the burthen of his own wrong (5).

The mode of calculation in cases of decrees for and against each of the parties, is to calculate and ratably divide them, and then to allow a set off to the extent of the profits actually received by each sharer, the deficit in each year being made good by the party who received in excess of his share (1)

Proof necessary.—In a suit for mesne profits it is, as in other cases incumbent on the plaintiff to establish not only the existence of his right but also the extent of it. The first he does by proof that the defendant has wrongfully deprived him of enjoyment, (2) and the second by proof of the duration of the wrongful possession, and it is for that period only that damages are claimable (3). Where, however, it is shown that a particular jama is payable in respect of a property, it lies upon the wrongdoer to show that the sum has not been realized (4). On him, as the party in possession and having the means of information, lies the onus of proving what is the actual amount of mesne profits (5). It cannot be laid down however, as a general proposition that the burden of proof in this respect is always on the defendant. It depends on the circumstances, according to which presumptions may or may not arise in favour of the plaintiff (6).

In calculating wasilat, evidence is usually taken of the rent paid. The party in possession is called on to produce his accounts, which are compared with the potahs and dakhilas in the ryots possession. Jummabundi papers filed by patwaris under the zemindar's supervision have been accepted as prima facie evidence of the profits of the estate (7). But settlement papers thirty years old without inquiry into the actual proceeds of the estate during the period of dispossession are useless as a basis to work on (8). When the amount of mesne profits demanded is merely approximately given, the plaintiff is not bound by what he has said in the plaint, but may be given more, though, of course such statement may be used as evidence against him (9). The ordinary rule, however being that a plaintiff cannot recover more than he claims in the plaint.

he will be limited to it where the rate or amount is not stated approximately (1)

As regards mesne profits before suit as these have accrued due and the plaintiff has a cause of action in respect thereof a plaintiff suing for mesne profits is bound to put forward his whole claim. If he does not a subsequent suit for mesne profits prior to the first suit will not lie (2)

Mesne profits are demandable from the date upon which they become annually due (3). But a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title has been held not liable for mesne profits from any date earlier than the institution of the suit where the plaintiff has been guilty of laches (4) and mesne profits were only allowed from the date of suit in other cases (5). Under Art 109 of the Limitation Act a defendant is liable for mesne profits received or which might have been with due diligence received during the three years before date of suit and not before. This period has no reference to the time when rents fall due (6).

Accruing before suit—The assessment of mesne profits was held to be an essential part of the decree in the suit and not a proceeding in execution and therefore something which must be done by the Court trying the case which was authorized to make a decree in it. It cannot be left to another Court which when the final decree is made may have to execute it (7). In a suit for recovery of possession and for mesne profits from the date of suit it was held that a Munsif could ascertain and award mesne profits even though they were in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court (8). The Court had either to determine the matter itself or direct an inquiry. But it must have done one or the other. Thus a decree awarding immediate mesne profits at the rate admitted by the defendant and larger mesne profits contingently on a higher rate being proved at the time of execution was held to be irregular (9).

Decree.—A decree declaring the liability for mesne profits, but not determining the amount if worked out after the death of a defendant, did not, it was held, bind the heirs not parties (1)

Under the Code of 1859, the Court might reserve the inquiry "for the execution of the decree," a phrase which gave rise to difficulty (2) The Court under the last Code might "direct an inquiry." The proceedings were part of and a continuation of the suit, and no final decree existed to execute or appeal from until they were closed That part of the decree which denoted possession to be given was final, but the other part was interlocutory, and became final when the amount payable was fixed An application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits was not an application for execution, but an application by which the decree holder moved the Court in a pending suit to make a final decree regarding mesne profits (3) And for this reason an application to ascertain the amount of mesne profits awarded by a decree was not affected by limitation (4) The Bombay High Court, however, held that a decree under sect 212 of the last Code was necessarily subject to the limitation laid down in sect 211 of the same Code, and that mesne profits for more than three years from the date of the decree should not be awarded, even though possession was not delivered during that period (5) The investigation into mesne profits, directed by the decree, was nothing more than a continuation of the inquiry which was set on foot at the trial into the merits of the plaintiff's case against the defendant, was not called upon to answer the plaintiff's case until the plaintiff had given some evidence in support of it (6) The direction as to the inquiry into the amount of mesne profits need not it was held necessarily be contained in the decree, (7) as to the form of which, see case cited below (8) Once the liability of a party was fixed in the Appellate Court the Lower Court had to confine its inquiry to the assessment of the amount of damages (9)

The language of the amended section makes the procedure plain The Court may either determine the amount in the decree or may give a decree for possession, and then direct an inquiry into mesne profits, etc., and dispose thereof in the final decree. In a recent case where a plaintiff had brought a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of his title, which was granted, and for mesne profits, which were disallowed, it was held that sub-sect (2) of this rule implies that the decision with regard to possession is a preliminary decree within the meaning of sect 2 (1).

Accruing after suit.—Sect 211 of the last Code, which referred to mesne profits accruing subsequent to institution of suit, was held to be an enabling one, and it would, it was said, (2) be neither unreasonable nor illegal to refuse subsequent profits up to date of decree and decree immediate possession, leaving the party in whose favour the decree was made to his remedy by a regular suit if immediate possession was not had. The mere abstention therefore of the Court to award mesne profits after date of suit was held not to be a bar to any suit in respect thereof (3). A claim for mesne profits was held distinct from a claim for recovery of possession, and it was only under sect 44, rule A, of the last Code that such claims might be joined in one suit (4). In order to avoid multiplicity of suits the Court was empowered to assess damages not only so far as they accrued up to the commencement of the suit, but also those accruing after suit and during the continuance of the trespass. But the section was not imperative or obligatory but discretionary (5). Where the decree was silent touching interest or mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit they could not be given in execution, but the plaintiff was still at liberty to assert his right to such mesne profits in a separate suit (6). matter was made clear by para 2 of sect 244 of the last Code (See, however, now post) But it had to be ascertained on a proper construction whether the judgment and decree was silent on the point Wasalat by law is demandable up to possession, and therefore a decree for "possession with wasalat" was held to give wasalat up to the date of possession and not merely up to the date of suit (1)

A judgment dismissing an appeal is in reality an informal mode of confirming the decree appealed against Where, therefore, mesne profits were awarded from the institution of the suit until decree only, and the Appellate Court simply dismissed the appeal without providing for subsequent mesne profits it was held that these could not be recovered in execution (2) But where the original Court granted a decree for possession with "future mesne profits" and the Appellate Court approved that decree without expressly mentioning mesne profits, it was held that mesne profits were granted by reference to the original decree (3) Where a decree was given for certain of the properties claimed and mesne profits, and the suit was dismissed as regards the other properties, and on appeal the Appellate Court reversed the decree of dismissal, it was held that the appellate decree imported an award of mesne profits on all property, the possession of which was decreed to the plaintiffs (4)

As to Court fees (5) and form of decree under sect 211 of the last Code (6) see cases cited below

Under sect 244 clauses (a) and (b) of the last Code, the Court of execution determined questions relating to the execution This is not so now under sect 47 of the present Code The present rule enacts that the Court of trial shall in continuation of the suit inquire into the question (cf notes to sect 17) The penultimate section of sect 244 of the last Code has not been re-enacted, and probably any claim made and not expressly granted in the decree will be deemed to have been refused within the meaning of Explanation V of sect 11

"Relinquishment of possession"—This clause is new With a view to the curtailment of delay and expense, it is enacted that the claim for mesne profits should not continue till actual delivery of possession if the defendant prefers to relinquish the land with notice to the plaintiff to which mesne profits could be awarded short of that of obtaining possession. The Code of 1877 introduced the further limitation which now exists, and the rule thus restricts the time for which mesne profits can be allowed in a decree to three years from the date of the decree. Consequently where no period is mentioned the decree cannot be construed as giving the plaintiffs profits for a period longer than what the law allows the Court to give (1). So proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining mesne profits were held to be a continuance of the original suit, and the Court was bound by these provisions. Where, therefore, a decree directed that plaintiffs should get mesne profits from a certain date until delivery of possession, the amount to be fixed in execution held that the decree was necessarily subject to the limitation laid down in sect. 211 of the former Code and that mesne profits for more than three years could not be awarded even though possession was not delivered during that period (2). In executing a decree which awards mesne profits, and which is affirmed by a final Court of Appeal, the three years from the date of the decree until the expiration of which alone mesne profits are recoverable must be calculated from the date of the decree of the final Court of Appeal, and not from the date of the decree of the original Court (3).

Interest.—The Code of 1859 provided that interest might be decreed, (4) but the Code of 1882 first included interest in the definition of mesne profits. There being no rule of law obliging the Court to allow interest upon mesne profits it is a matter for the discretion of the Court, upon consideration of the facts, whether to allow interest or not (5). No difference should be made as regards interest between waslat paid in kind and paid in money (6). A decree for interest on mesne profits from the date they were ascertained was held to mean the date on which they were ascertained by the Court, and not by the Amn (7).

The words "together with interest on such profits" in the definition of mesne profits (see sect. 2) do not refer to interest due after the ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits due under the decree, because the Courts have otherwise been given a discretion to award interest separately on the amount so ascertained. The words, therefore, contemplate that interest should form a separate item in the calculation of the amount due as mesne profits, and a decree holder is entitled to receive interest year by year on the amount found to be due, and not only on the amount actually ascertained and embodied in the decree (1). The Court has jurisdiction to give or refuse interest on mesne profits as it chooses. But if it does not intend to grant interest it should expressly refuse it, for, having regard to the additional words "together with interest on such profits," a decree which merely grants mesne profits, and is silent as to interest, must be taken to mean that the mesne profits shall carry interest on them (2). Where a decree granted mesne profits and said nothing about interest, the amount of mesne profits being left for determination in execution of the decree held, that the decree holder was entitled to interest upon the mesne profits due to him until such mesne profits were actually paid to him by the judgment debtors (3).

plaintiff has an interest in the estate and that the defendant is an accounting party, and such a decree can only be averted by payment or the admission of assets and submission to a personal decree. But the Court has power to stay or dismiss frivolous or vexatious actions, and will see whether there is bona fides, whether real and substantial questions exist for determination, and whether an administration decree is the necessary and proper relief (1). In such a case it is necessary to pass a preliminary decree, directing all such inquiries to be made and accounts taken which cannot be conveniently done in Court but which have to be carried out before the Court is in a position to pass its final decree. The first paragraph provides for this. An order under the first paragraph is a decree, and is appealable as such. See sect. 2, ante, and notes thereto.

Insolvent estates.—The second paragraph of this rule is taken from sect. 10 of the Judicature Act of 1875 (38 & 39 Viet. c. 77). Before the Judicature Act, in administration in Chancery, a secured creditor, who had not realized his security, could prove against the assets for the whole debt and receive a dividend. He could then realize his security, and if he received in the whole more than 20s. in the £, he paid over the excess. In bankruptcy he had to realize his security and prove for the balance. The Act made the rule in bankruptcy applicable to administration actions. It did not (nor does this section) apply all the principles of bankruptcy to insolvent estates, but established uniformity of administration in respect of the four heads which are specifically mentioned in this section (2). A decree for administration is a decree in favour of all creditors, and as all of them are included in the same decree, it is inequitable that one should be in a better position than another under that decree and therefore the Court divides the assets amongst them (3).

(b) if and in so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, that the claim of the inferior pre-emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the said provisions

Pre-emption—Sect 214 Code of 1877 and 1889 amended is indicated in italics. The former section, which was frequently criticized as inadequate, has been considerably altered. In sub clause (1), para (b), the day is fixed. As to the power of the Appellate Court to specify another day, (1) see note. As regards delivery of possession in the same paragraph, the duty of executing and registering any necessary instrument (2) has been held to be upon the defendant. In sub clause (2) provision has been made for the form of decrees in the case of claims decreed in favour of rival pre-emptors (3).

The Mahomedan law is the only system prevalent in India which provides substantive rules relating to the right of pre-emption in a systematic form, though local Acts and the Code recognize the existence of the right, and lay down rules belonging to the remedy. In all cases in which the right of pre-emption is claimed, the Courts in administering equity will by analogy follow the rules of Mahomedan law, even in cases where the right is not claimed under that law, but under local usage or custom. The rules of customary pre-emption no doubt depend upon the custom itself, but where such custom is silent upon any particular point, the rule of Mahomedan law must by analogy be taken to be the rule of decision (4).

Rules in regard to decrees in pre-emption suits were formulated for the first time in the Code of 1877 and it is conceivable that in introducing the new rules the form which they took fell short of comprehending all the various cases that might arise in consequence (5). Sect 214 of the last Code thus laid down no rules as to the form of the decree in cases where rival pre-emptors, possessing equal rights of pre-emption, came forward to enforce the right in respect of the same sale, or where one of rival pre-emptors possessed superior right of pre-emption to the other. The Court had to deal with such cases upon general principles of equity suited to the exigencies of each case (1). The section again provided only for cases where costs have been decreed against a plaintiff, but not for cases where costs, instead of being awarded against the pre-emptor, were awarded in his favour by the decree. But it was held that there being no specific provision in the Code to meet this case, the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience were applicable and that under the general rules of set off, which are so consonant with these, a plaintiff was entitled, when depositing the purchase money under the decree, to deduct the sum awarded to him as costs (2).

The former section it was held, contemplated cases where the party seeking to enforce a right of pre-emption is out of possession, and was therefore inapplicable to instances in which parties setting up such a right were already in possession (3).

Payment of purchase money—If on the day on which the time for payment expires the Court is closed the pre-emptive price may be paid on the next day that the Court is open (4). If the pre-emptive price is not paid within the prescribed time then as the right decreed is dependent on payment within such period, the decree for pre-emption cannot be enforced (5). Where the plaintiff paid the money into Court, petitioning that it should be retained until mutation of names had taken place and the defendant refused to accept the money on the ground that the payment was clogged with a condition, it was held that the payment was not saddled with a condition precluding payment before mutation and the objection was disallowed (6). In making the payment the plaintiff may deduct his costs (7). The question whether the plaintiff has paid the purchase money in time is not a matter relating to the execution of a decree under sect. 244, corresponding with sect. 47 ante (8). A decree in a suit directed that the purchase money should be paid within a certain period from the date the decree became final. The period of limitation prescribed for an appeal from this decree expired on a day when the Court was closed. It was held that the appeal could be filed on the first day it opened and that the decree did not become final till then (9). A plaintiff who has obtained a decree can appeal within the limitation period whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day fixed (10).

But the mere appeal by a plaintiff or defendant will not of itself extend the time for payment (1) The Appellate Court may if it thinks fit extend the time for payment (2) But if the appellate decree says nothing about extending time it has not the effect of giving the plaintiff whether appellant or respondent, the corresponding period of time from the date of the appellate decree for payment to that which he had from the date of the decree of the Court of first instance For this rule says that if the pre-emptive price is not paid the suit shall stand dismissed and the decree, on the expiration of the time limited without payment by the plaintiff becomes a decree in favour of the defendant (3) (See first paragraph) If the pre-emptive suit has arisen and been decreed before the vendee has paid the whole or part of the purchase money to the vendor, the Court in disbursing the purchase money deposited will make an order directing that the whole or part of the purchase money (as the case may be) should be paid to the vendor or vendee, both of whom must necessarily be judgment debtors and as such be liable alike to payment of the costs awarded to the pre-emptor (decree) (4) It has been held that the profits of the property accruing between the date of the sale and the date when the pre-emptor, in accordance with the decree paid the pre-emptive price belonged not to the pre-emptor nor to the original vendor, but to the original vendee (5) and that a suit could not be successfully maintained by a pre-emptor to recover profits accruing between the date of his decree and the time when he obtained mutation of names (6)

15 Where a suit is for the dissolution of a partnership

Decree in suit for dissolution of partnership or the taking of partnership accounts, the Court, before passing a final decree, may pass a preliminary decree declaring the proportionate shares of the parties, fixing the day on which the partnership shall stand dissolved or be deemed to have been dissolved, and directing such accounts to be taken, and other acts to be done, as it thinks fit

Suit for dissolution of partnership—The usual forms of decree in such a suit were given in Nos 132 and 133 Schedule IV of the last Code. It was held that in a suit for an account of a dissolved partnership, a decree should be passed under sect 215 of that Code in accordance with form No 132, Schedule IV and it should direct an account to be taken of the dealings and transactions between the parties, and of the credits property and effects due and belonging to the late partnership, and it should direct the appointment of a receiver of the Decree in suit for account between principal and agent.

Suit for account between principal and agent—In a suit by a principal against an agent for an account, on the fact of agency being established, it is the duty of the Court to direct an account to be taken of the defendant's dealings as agent. When once the plaintiff has shown that the defendant is an accounting party, it is then for the defendant to prove the amount of his receipts and disbursements (2) When an appeal is pending in the High Court against a preliminary order made by a Subordinate Court under this section, the High Court having seisin of the appeal can apart from the question whether the case falls within sect 545 of that Code, make an order staying the carrying out of such order pending the hearing of the appeal (3) These suits are not affected by section 10 (4)

the Government, the decree shall declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but shall direct such partition or separation to be made by the Collector, or by any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with such declaration and with the provisions of section 54,

(2) if and in so far as such decree relates to any other immovable property or to moveable property, the Court may, if the partition or separation cannot be conveniently made without further inquiry, pass a preliminary decree declaring the rights of the several parties interested in the property and giving such further directions as may be required

Suits for partition—The former Code contained no provision definitely prescribing the form of a decree for the partition of an estate or the separation of a share, though a somewhat special procedure was rendered applicable in such cases. Sect. 265 of the Code relegated the actual partition or separation of revenue paying estates entirely to the execution department, and entrusted it to the Collector. On the other hand, sect. 396 of the same Code contemplated in the case of other immovable property a preliminary order ascertaining the rights of the parties, which was itself a decree, but involved a final decree upon the report of the Commissioners. These sections have been in part modified, and the present rule, which is new, inserted. Any local enactment by which jurisdiction to effect "imperfect partition" of revenue paying land is reserved exclusively to the Revenue Courts, and which contemplates a procedure inconsistent with this rule, will be saved by the terms of sect. 1, ante. The Code contemplates one preliminary decree and no more. Thus, where after the confirmation of a preliminary decree for partition on appeal the Court of first instance directed that actual partition should be made in accordance with certain directions then given by it, it was held that no appeal would lie against such order, but its propriety could be questioned in an appeal from the final decree. ORDER XXI.

Execution of Decrees and Orders

Payment under Decree

1. (1) All money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows, namely —
- (a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, or
- (b) out of Court to the decree holder, or
- (c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs
- (2) Where any payment is made under clause (a) of sub rule (1) notice of such payment shall be given to the decree holder.

‘Payable under a decree’—Costs ordered to be paid under sect 215 of the last Code (as now sect 30) it was held were not paid under a decree and should be paid under that section (1) An amount due under a decree may, under this rule be paid into Court (2) When an order has been made for the payment of money in a suit on a certain date and the Court is closed on that date, a payment made on the following day would be a good payment for the purpose of that order (3) Payment into Court is a valid compliance with a decree, even though the decree directs payment to the decree holder (4) On the death of a decree-holder, the debtor should either pay the debt into Court under cl (a) or ask for directions under cl (c) (5)

2. (1) Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree holder, the decree holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly
- (2) The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment for adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, and if, after service of such notice, the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly.

(3) A payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree.

Applicability — As to the principle upon which the rule proceeds and the cases to which the prohibition contained in it is applicable see notes post.

Remedies of judgment debtor — The rule applies only to the case of parties who stand in the relation of judgment debtor and judgment creditor at the date of the transaction (1). It applies only to a question of payment or adjustment of a decree and does not recognize an application by the decree holder (2). The former section was held not to govern payments made in execution of decrees passed under Act X of 1859 in the Revenue Courts (3).

"Under a decree" — In Madras it was at one time held that the former section applied only to the execution of money decrees (4) and it was doubted whether the section applied to decrees for restitution of conjugal rights (5). In Calcutta and latterly in Madras also it was held that the section dealt with the adjustment of any decree and not merely with the adjustment of a money decree (6). The amendment by the addition of the words of any kind adapts this latter view. The decree may be of any kind but money must be payable under it. As to instalment decrees see O XX r 11. The rule presupposes that there is a decree in existence. So where A sued B and obtained a decree which was reversed in the first Appellate Court, and B was about to file a special appeal when A compromised the case and gave up the property it was held that the compromise having been effected after the decree in favour of B had been reversed it need not have been certified to the Court (7). And if payment is made under a decree which is set aside on appeal the decree holder must make restitution even though the payment has not been certified (1). Where rent was payable for a mirasi tenure and not under a decree, the provisions of the section were held inapplicable (2). The rule does not apply to the case of a surety who having paid the amount due under the decree, afterwards sues the principal (3).

"Out of Court"—The rule relates to voluntary adjustments of a decree made between parties to a suit out of Court, and not to a case where a debtor pays to the officer of the Court under the authority and pressure of the Court's process (4). When money is paid into Court the latter must pay it out immediately to the decree holder (5) or his ordinary legal heirs, (6) though if the payment is made by the debtor to prevent his arrest, it is not a voluntary payment, and he is entitled to be heard before the money is paid out (7).

"Adjusted"—See as to the meaning of this term cases cited (8). It only applies to matters occurring during the course of execution (9).

"The decree holder shall certify"—One joint decree holder is not bound by the acts of another who has compromised or received payment out of Court, (10) and a joint decree holder has ordinarily no power to give a discharge out of Court to a judgment debtor for more than his own share of the decree (11). The debtor should therefore not pay unless jointly or to the extent of the admitted shares (12).

The word 'decree holder' therefore must be read as decree holder or decree holders. The Court will not recognize a payment to one decree holder only in excess of that to which he is himself entitled. One of two or more joint decree holders is not competent without being authorized by the other or others to certify satisfaction by payment out of Court of the entire decree, though he may certify satisfaction in respect of his own interest therein (13).

The ordinary way of certifying a payment or adjustment is by petition (1) made by the decree holder or judgment debtor to the Court whose duty is to execute the decree, (2) but it can also be certified under O XXI r 11, clause (e), on an application to execute the decree. It is for the party applying for execution to state any adjustment after decree (3). If, however, one of the parties is a minor his guardian must first obtain leave to compromise under O XXXII r 7 (4). Application may be made for a certificate of part satisfaction (5). To certify a payment or adjustment within the meaning of the section, it is sufficient for the decree holder to certify that money has been paid or that an adjustment has been arrived at without specifying the amount of the payment or mentioning the terms of the adjustment (6). Under this rule as there is no time fixed within which the decree holder is bound to certify a payment made out of Court such payment may be certified at any time (7). Intimation to a Collector in charge of the execution under the provisions of the Third Schedule, amounts to a due certifying of the adjustment under this rule (8).

It has been held that an application in 1905 for certifying payments in satisfaction of a decree sufficed to give a fresh start for limitation, either as an acknowledgment within the meaning of Sect 19 of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) or as a step in aid of execution (9).

"Judgment debtor"—This term includes persons claiming through the judgment debtor or in his right e.g. an assignee from the judgment debtor of the equity of redemption after decree (10).

Remedies of debtor—Under the second paragraph of the rule the judgment debtor may apply to the Court executing the decree (11) if the decree holder does not certify that the adjustment be recorded (12) and he is allowed ninety days within which to take that step (13). Notice must issue to the decree holder to show cause. This does not mean merely to allege cause nor even to make out that there is room for argument but both to allege cause and to prove it to the satisfaction of the Court (1). If the judgment debtor applies to certify and the application is refused, then an order under this rule being applicable (2) under sect. 17 (formerly 211) he should appeal and not bring a separate suit. An application, whether by a plaintiff or defendant, for a certificate, though decided under this rule, is none the less a question relating to the execution of the decree, and an appeal being available no separate suit lies. If, however, neither the creditor nor debtor apply to certify and the decree has in fact been satisfied in whole or in part and yet the creditor sues out execution the debtor has a remedy by suit. As already observed, this rule prohibits recognition of an uncertified adjustment only by any Court executing the decree. But the right of suit is controlled by the provisions of sect. 17, as the operation of the latter section is not restricted by this (3). The subject has nowhere been more lucidly treated than by Pigot (4). In considering whether a suit is prohibited by sect. 17, regard must be had to two points, viz., the cause of action and the relief claimed. Numerous cases establish (5) that a Court other than a Court executing the decree can recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment of a decree in a suit based upon such payment or adjustment. This goes to the cause of action. The principle upon which such cases are allowed has been that there is a cause of action arising from negligence, fraud (6) agreement or trust (7). So suits have been to recover the money paid or property delivered (8) or for damages (9). Where, however, the relief sought comes within the prohibition contained in sect. 17, then a suit is barred. That section is framed to prohibit in a separate suit between the parties to the decree, any relief being granted which shall interfere with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree (10). As a general rule, questions relating to the satisfaction of the decree must be settled by an order made in the course of execution and not by a regular suit, but no Court can settle a question of satisfaction by an order made in execution unless such satisfaction shall have been duly certified (11).

Thus a suit which interferes with the execution, such is a suit seeking a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to execute a decree and an injunction restraining execution (1) or for a declaration that the decree has been satisfied, (2) or a suit which seeks to set aside an execution sale, whether the purchaser be the judgment creditor (3) or a stranger (4) will not lie, being prohibited by the terms of sect. 17, as also, it has been held a suit to secure sums paid in execution in excess of what was due under the decree (5).

If the creditor fraudulently executes a satisfied decree and does not enter the satisfaction in his application to execute he may be proceeded against criminally, the provision is regards uncertified adjustments not affecting the substantive Criminal Law (6). In a recent case it was held that an application which did not recite the terms of an alleged adjustment could not be deemed to be an application of the kind contemplated by the second clause of this rule (7).

Clause (3)—This clause corresponds with amendments (vide post), with the last paragraph of sect. 258 of the former Code (see sect. 206 of Code of 1859), which was inserted by sect. 27 of Act VII of 1888. The effect of this insertion was that uncertified adjustments could be recognized by other Courts than the Court executing the decree, the prohibition only extending to Courts executing decrees (8) and to no others (9). So the rule does not debar a Criminal should, like the decree itself, be a matter of record and that unless it is made a matter of record no Court having to determine whether the decree has been executed shall recognize it as evidence of a valid adjustment. But see Ramayyar v Ramayyar 21 M 356 (1897), where the Court went into the question of adjustment though not certified there having been a fraud committed.

Court (1) from recognizing an uncertified payment, or a Civil Court which is not executing the decree (vide ante). An adjustment not certified cannot, however, be taken cognizance of under sect. 17 by a Court of execution, and the decree must be executed notwithstanding the adjustment (2). Prior to the addition of the last clause it was held that if the decree holder had been induced to compromise by fraud this was a matter which can be dealt with under the same section (3). It was subsequently held that the proviso did not stand in the way of the judgment debtor proving fraud (4). But this decision has been doubted (5) and it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the executing Court cannot enquire even when the conduct of the decree holder has been alleged to be fraudulent (6). An objection that the provisions of the former section had no application to any payment made in pursuance of an invalid agreement not sanctioned by the Court was overruled the section making no reference to validity. Therefore a sum paid under an agreement void under the former section 257A cannot be recognized unless certified (7). It has been held that though uncertified payments could not be recognized as adjustments of the decree yet a creditor might give evidence of uncertified payments in order to defeat the plea of limitation (8). The former section ran: "It shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree." These words have been omitted in order to make it clear that the Court cannot recognize a payment or adjustment which has not been certified for any purpose whatsoever. It follows that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot now operate to prolong the period of limitation for applying for execution under the Limitation

Act, (1) neither can it give rise to an estoppel, for the doctrine of estoppel cannot be invoked to nullify an express statutory provision (2)

But, where the Court to which the decree is to be sent for execution is situate in a different district, the Court which passed it shall send it to the District Court of the district in which the decree is to be executed.*

"Directly."—Where both Courts are in the same District one Court may send to the other direct (2). A District Court on receiving a decree transferred for execution can, under r 8, direct any Subordinate Court to execute it. When, and in whatsoever manner, the decree has been transferred for execution to another Court, the holder of the decree must, under r 10, make due application for execution to the latter Court.

6. The Court sending a decree for execution shall send—
 (a) a copy of the decree,
 (b) a certificate setting forth that satisfaction of the decree has not been obtained by execution within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, or, where the decree has been executed in part, the extent to which satisfaction has been obtained and what part of the decree remains unexecuted, and
 (c) a copy of any order for the execution of the decree, or, if no such order has been made, a certificate to that effect.

"Shall send"—Upon the maxim 'omnia præsumentur rite esse acta' an attachment will in the absence of evidence be deemed in this respect to have been correctly made (3). The omission, however, to transmit to the Court executing the decree the certificate required by this rule is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the sale (4). The Court to which a decree is so sent shall cause such ^{the} copies and certificates to be filed, without any Court receiving copies of decree, etc., to file same without proof. further proof of the decree or order for execution, or of the copies thereof, unless the Court, for any special reasons to be recorded under the hand of the Judge, requires such proof.

"Filed."—The filing of the copies and certificate is quite distinct from executing the decree, for which an application should be regularly made.

Inquiry into jurisdiction.—The former sect 225 contained after the words "copies thereof" the following, "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," thus recognizing the right of the executing Court to inquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree (1) These words, however, have now been omitted, as it was considered that another Court ought not to go into any question as to the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it (5)

Sect. 38 enacts that a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisions contained in the Code. Sect 39 provides that the Court which passed a decree (6) may, on certain conditions, send it, on the application of the decree-holder, for execution to another Court, and may of its own motion send it for execution to any Subordinate Court There is no express provision as to whether the Court to which a decree may be so sent must be a Court having jurisdiction over the amount of the suit in which the decree was passed or whether the mere sending of the decree will confer jurisdiction on a Court for all the proceedings to be taken in its execution On the ground, however, that sect 6 limits jurisdiction and that the word "suits" in that section include proceedings taken to execute the decree, the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts hold that a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit can have no jurisdiction to execute a decree made in that suit (7) So a Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree

 - (iv) by the appointment of a receiver,
 - (v) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require

(3) The Court to which an application is made under sub rule

Immediate execution—Ordinarily the application for execution is in writing. It is to be noted that under the former sect 256 application for immediate execution could not issue simultaneously against both the person and property or against any property except moveable property (1) within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the particular Court. In the case of a warrant of arrest, this would only issue if the debtor was within the same limits. Moreover the section only related to decrees not exceeding Rs. 1,000. The Legislature has now omitted this limitation imposed under the former Code on oral applications for immediate execution. As to exemption from arrest, see sect 13.

- 12 Where an application is made for the attachment of any moveable property belonging to a judgment debtor but not in his possession, the decree holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached, containing a reasonably accurate description of the same

Application for attachment of moveable property not in judgment debtor's possession

Not in judgment debtor's possession—This rule refers only to an application for the enforcement of a decree by attachment of moveable property belonging to the judgment debtor (2) but not in his possession. Rules 12-46, 51 prescribe the mode of attachment in such cases. Rules 13-45 deal with cases where the property is in the judgment debtor's possession. The inventory must be delivered into Court along with the application for execution (3). Under O 39, r 7, the Court has jurisdiction to make an order for preparation of an inventory (1).

- 13 Where an application is made for the attachment of any immoveable property belonging to a judgment debtor, it shall contain at the foot—
(a) a description of such property sufficient to identify the same and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, a specification of such boundaries or numbers, and

(b) a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in such property to the best of the belief of the applicant, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same

Description—Clause (a) has now been amended to expressly require boundaries and numbers to be given where such boundaries exist in a record of settlement or survey (1) The Code has been passed to be observed and not to be treated as a dead letter as regards this or any other provision (2) Still the Court will not press against a party a mere formal defect when the property which is sought to be attached can be identified (3) and in any case a defect of description can be remedied (4)

Specification—In case of a joint family the application should state whether it is the judgment debtor's share or the joint family property which is sought to be attached It should also specify the family property (5) The former section which this rule replaces required that the description and specification should be verified in the manner of a plaint This has, however, been omitted, as it was considered that a verification separate from that prescribed by r 11, second sub section, was not necessary An omission to verify the inventory of property sought to be attached was held to be an irregularity only not vitiating the application (6)

"It shall make such order"—One of several decree holders has no right to claim execution. Sufficient cause must be shown. The Court has a discretion, and before executing it should give notice to the other decree holders and hear what they have to say, (3) notice, however, is not obligatory (4) If made, the order ought in express terms to reserve the rights of the other decree holders to share in the proceeds of execution, and, meanwhile, the interests of the non applicants should be protected (5) either by taking security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit. The judgment debtor may be compelled to pay into Court the whole amount due under the decree upon which the share of each decree holder will be determined. The judgment debtor cannot object to the share which one or more decree holders may claim (6) Under the Code of 1859, where the Court did not reserve the rights of the other decree holders to share in the proceeds of execution, an appeal was entertained as to the distribution of the assets realized (7) See ante

"The interest of any decree-holder"—The additions are intended to remove any doubt (1) in regard to the power of the transferee of the interest of one out of several joint decree holders to apply for execution. One of several decree holders may assign his interest under the decree, and as regards joint decree holders, see last rule. The transferee of a portion of a decree is a transferee of the decree within the meaning of this section (2).

"Is transferred"—This excludes the owners of any interest in existence before decree. The section does not apply where the person seeking to execute is not a transferee from the original decree holder, or to cases where the right to an equitable interest in a decree is contested, and was not intended to enable the Court to try such a question as the legitimacy of an heir (3). And apparently if the decree holder's interest in the property itself and not the decree be assigned the decree should be executed by the decree holder (4). The transferee of a decree stands in the same position for getting execution as the transferor (5). If a decree is sold the purchaser as assignee of the decree is entitled to any moneys or profits thereunder (6). A decree for the payment of a sum of money and for costs of the suit is one and indivisible and the decree so far as it may be only for costs cannot be separated from the rest of the decree and transferred (7). As for transfer of rent decrees in Bengal (8) and of village Munsiffs in Madras (9) see below.

"In writing"—An oral transfer is not recognized for the purposes of the rule (10). Where S obtained a decree against D the owner in possession and subsequently in a suit brought by J against S a decree was passed by consent that J should execute S's decree it was held that J was a transferee within the section (11).

"Operation of law"—The words "by operation of law" must be understood to mean the operation of law as administered in Indian Courts (12). Where minor succeeded to an estate, which up to the date it fell into his hands had been in possession of the executrix, it was held that there was a transfer by operation of law, (1) as also where an order setting aside an adjudication passed the benefit under a decree from the Official Assignee to the applicant (2) The holder of a certificate of administration under Reg VIII of 1827 is a transferee by law of a decree obtained by the deceased (3)

"May apply"—Unless an application is made to it, all that the Court has to do is to look to the record. Unless therefore, a decree holder applies to the Court to certify a transfer of his interest the Court can take no notice of such alleged transfer (1) An application for the transmission of a decree has been treated as an application for execution under the former section, under which notice has issued to the assignee and judgment debtor (5) Mere notice and nothing else has been held not to operate as a revivor of the decree (6) A decree is not a debt within the meaning of sect 131 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the notice required by this rule is, on assignment, sufficient (7)

"To the Court which passed it"—An application by the transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree (4)

May be executed—It was formerly held that the transferee was not entitled to have execution as of right like the original decree holder for the matter was one within the Court's discretion (3) but that the discretion must be exercised reasonably. The mere fact of the existence of a cross claim against the assignor of a decree by his judgment debtor was no reason for refusing issue of execution on the application of the assignee (10) Nor was the probability that the decree might be executed against some particular judgment-debtor sufficient ground for refusing a transfer (11) If there was no dispute it might admit him, or if the dispute was one which it could decide it might try it, and upon the result of that trial admit the assignee to carry on the decree (1) In this country an assignment can always be impeached by third parties who can show that it is not a real transaction (2) A Court may refuse to recognize a benamidar as transferee, but it may allow execution to proceed at the instance of a person who is in fact such, if it thinks fit, and such proceeding if in proper time, keeps the decree alive The legality of the proceedings depends, not on the reality of the transfer, but on the sanction accorded (3) If a decree is transferred to one as benamidar for the actual purchaser the latter is entitled to execute the decree, and his right course is to apply under this section (4) If the application is sanctioned, then the transferee is placed in the same position as regards execution as the original decree holder (5) Under the present Code it has been held that this rule does not specifically lay down any restriction upon the assignment of a decree, and that the assignee's right of execution does not depend upon the discretion of the Court (6) The rule makes no provision for the transferee's name being placed on the record and though the actual substitution of the name of the assignee may not be necessary for the validity of the execution proceedings, yet ordinarily the assignee's name should be brought on the record (7) Where the decree was transferred and the transfer admitted by the decree holder in Court, the debtor could not, it was held, contest the right of the transferee to execute it, except on plea of payment to the original decree holder (8) Decisions under this rule are only summary for purposes of procedure, and are not decisive of the rights of persons claiming to be transferees, and where there is no appeal, a suit lies (9) A transferee whose application to execute has been rejected can if no appeal be brought bring a separate suit for a declaration that he is the person entitled to execute the decree, (10) or rather for a declaration as to the validity of the assignment and a declaration that the assignee is entitled to execute being, under this rule a matter for the Court of execution, (1) or it may be (as where there is an invalid assignment), a party may sue for refund of money paid by him (2)

Notice—The penalty imposed by the proviso is that there should be no power to execute if the proviso is not complied with (3) Where there are more transferors than one, all should be cited (4) If a decree is transferred by assignment after the death of the judgment-debtor, notice may be served on his legal representative The death of the judgment debtor does not render the transferred decree incapable of execution (5) As to the procedure in such a case, see case cited (6) If a transfer is made after notice to transferor and debtor and the decree partly executed, the representative of the judgment debtor cannot subsequently object (7) It is illegal (and not merely irregular) to execute the decree before hearing the objections (8)

Money decrees.—This proviso applies only to decrees for money personally due by two or more persons, (9) and in cases coming within the proviso the assignee is left to a regular suit (10)

Appeal—Disputes as to share transferred arising between a judgment-debtor and decree holder must be determined under sect 47 by order of the Court executing the decree (11) There is no express appeal given from an order on an application made under this section, but if the Court in disposing of the transferee's application is acting under and determines a question of the nature referred to in sect 47, then an appeal lies Upon this there is a conflict of decision In some cases it has been held that no appeal lies against an order dismissing an application for execution by a transferee, either on the ground that as the Court had not recognized him and accepted him on the record as a representative, either such transferee did not become a representative within the meaning of sect 47, or that the question as to whether such transferee should order is immediately granted to execute the decree Sect 245 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, provided that the Court should reject such applications or allow their amendment This might be done then and there, or the application might be returned for amendment within a time fixed If the application was not amended it was to be rejected, but if it was not rejected there was nothing to prevent the Court from extending the time for amendment (1) If amended, the application was admitted, and the Court proceeded to order execution according to the nature of the application The rule, in the first place, substitutes for the term "amended" the phrase the "defect to be remedied," because the first term does not cover the remedying of a defect, such as the omission to produce a copy as required by r 11, third sub section As regards the subject-matter of the second sub section of this rule it was originally (in order to meet various difficulties which were raised regarding defective applications) proposed to enact that until an application returned under this rule was presented with such amendments as the Court might have required, it should not be deemed to be in accordance with law This was proposed in view of a decision of the Calcutta High Court (2) The Select Committee, however, rejected this proposal and have relaxed the stringency of this rule and have allowed the application to date back to the time of its original presentation on the lines followed in connection with plaints It was proposed to enact that when once an application had been admitted it was to be deemed to be in accordance with law for the purpose of limitation, even though it was eventually dismissed after hearing the parties On the other hand, to prevent dismissals for defect of form not affecting the merits, it was proposed to allow the Court, even after admission, to allow any amendment not converting an application into one of another and inconsistent character The suggested additions, however, have not been made Though under the previous Code, applications for execution were often allowed to be amended without objection as to the Court's competency to allow it, (3) it was a matter of doubt whether the Court had any power to amend after admission and registration (4) In a recent case where within a short time of the expiration of the period of limitation a decree holder applied under this rule for leave to file a list of immoveable properties and his application was granted but the list was not filed till after the period had expired it was held that the proceedings in execution were barred by limitation (5)

(a) A holds a decree against B for Rs 1 000. B holds a decree against A for the payment of Rs 1,000 in case A fails to deliver certain goods at a future day. B cannot treat his decree as a cross decree under this rule.

(b) A and B, co plaintiffs, obtain a decree for Rs 1 000 against C, and C obtains a decree for Rs 1,000 against B. C cannot treat his decree as a cross decree under this rule.

(c) A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1 000. C who is a trustee for B obtains a decree on behalf of B against A for Rs 1 000. B cannot treat C's decree as a cross decree under this rule.

(d) A, B, C, D and E are jointly and severally liable for Rs 1 000 under a decree obtained by F. A obtains a decree for Rs 100 against F singly and applies for execution to the Court in which the joint decree is being executed. F may treat his joint decree as a cross decree under this rule.

Applicability.—The rule contemplates that where a decree is sought to be set off against another, the decree against which the set off is asked for must be before the Court for execution (1). A judgment debtor is entitled to set off a decree whether the judgment creditor may or may not intend to object on appeal to the judgment debtor's decree, for a decree is a decree till it is reversed whether it be appealed or not (2). Should either decree be reversed in appeal the decree of the Appellate Court can then be executed (3). The rule does not preclude a claim of set off of a sum due on a decree which is not under execution the rule being inapplicable to such a case (4). The transferee of a decree holds subject to equities enforceable against original holder (sect. 49). The purchaser of a decree against which a cross decree may be set off, takes his decree subject to the set off (5). Where there were cross decrees and one of the decree holders was, by an order of Court, made with the consent of both parties, bound in executing his decree to set off the amount of the decree against him, held that it would be inequitable to allow the other decree holder to obtain execution in full without setting off the amount decreed against him (6). In the under mentioned case a course was adopted which if not strictly in accordance with the letter, was in accordance with the spirit of this and the next rule, and at all events should be allowed on principles of natural equity (7).

"To a Court"—That is the Court to which the application is made for execution and which is dealing with the case as to whether execution shall be issued or not (8). The former section contained the words, "produced to the Court". This would seem still to be necessary as if all the decrees are not produced to the Court it will not have jurisdiction over them all.

"In separate suits"—The insertion of these words is intended to show that for the purposes of execution a counterclaim is not a separate action (9). This rule deals with cross decrees and not with cross claims under one decree. That is provided for by the next rule (10).

so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree

Cross claims—This rule proceeds on the same principle as the last, applying not where there are several decrees but one decree only. All that the decree holder is entitled to enforce execution of is the difference between the amount found recoverable by him and the amount which the judgment debtor is entitled to recover against him (1). The rule is not limited in its application to cases in which the remedy of each party against the other is of precisely the same nature (2). This rule does not apply to a case of pre-emption but only to counter-claims in suits for money, but the principle on which it is based is applicable, and under an order to deposit the purchase money costs may be deducted (3).

20 The provisions contained in rules 18 and 19 shall apply to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge
Cross decrees and cross claims in mortgage suits

Mortgage suits—This rule is new. It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross decrees and cross claims apply to the case of mortgage decrees (1). The rule also incidentally makes it clear that the expression "decree for the payment of money" and other similar expressions in the Code do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

21 The Court may, in its discretion, refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor
Simultaneous execution

Execution against person and property—It is discretionary with the Court either to grant or to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor. An appeal however, has been held (5) to lie on the question whether this discretion was properly exercised.

the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him :

Provided that no such notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for execution if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution, or in consequence of the application being made against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, if upon a previous application for execution against the same person the Court has ordered execution to issue against him.

(2) Nothing in the foregoing sub-rule shall be deemed to preclude the Court from issuing any process in execution of a decree without issuing the notice thereby prescribed, if, for reasons to be recorded, it considers that the issue of such notice would cause unreasonable delay or would defeat the ends of justice.

Notice—This rule is materially altered. Clauses (a) and (b) are the same as in the last Code. The Explanation to the corresponding section (248) of the last Code has been omitted and the second sub section inserted, as it was represented that even in the cases referred to in clauses (a) and (b) issue of the notice may involve an unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice. The Courts have thus been given a discretion in the matter. Where a judgment debtor appears and contests the decree holder's right to execute his decree he cannot object that no notice was served on him (1). The notice should be addressed to the widow of a deceased Hindu who held joint undivided property along with his brothers, for it must be as quasi separate property that the attaching creditor had a claim to it (2). As to proof of service of notice see below (3). As to whether the issuing of notice acts as a revival within the meaning of art 180 of the Limitation Act, (4) and as to the time provided for by art 179 (5) see cases cited. The judgment creditor should ask for the execution of the decree and not for the issue of a notice, it being the duty of the Court to issue the notice (6).

If neither party appears on the day on which the notice under this rule is made returnable the application for execution can be dismissed (1). Under the last Code it was held that the issuing of notice was a condition precedent to the valid execution of a decree in cases falling within clauses (a) (2) and (b) (3). More recently, however, the Privy Council held that where the debtor and his estate were made properly subject to the decree, the fact that notice was given to the wrong person and sale took place without notice to the legal representative, though constituting a material irregularity, did not render the judicial sale a nullity (4). Where a defendant respondent dies before judgment in appeal is pronounced, it may be entered nunc pro tunc, and the decree may be executed under this and cognate sections against the heirs of the deceased without placing them on the record (5). An application to set aside a decree on the ground that the notice had not been served under this rule must be made under sect 17, and not under r 90 of this order, and can only succeed on proof that the omission to serve the notice caused substantial injury to the owner of the property sold (6).

"Court executing the decree."—It was held under the last Code that though the notice under sect 248, corresponding with this rule, must be issued by the Court to which the decree was transferred for execution, the application to execute against a legal representative should be made to the Court which passed the decree (7). But an omission to apply to the latter Court was held to be a mere irregularity (8). It has been held under the present Code that a notice under this rule is not required to be issued upon an application for transfer of a decree, and that such notice must be issued by the Court which has seized of the application for execution, whether it be the original Court which made the decree or the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution (9).

Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed.

(2) Where such person offers any objection to the execution of the decree, the Court shall consider such objection and make such order as it thinks fit.

"Does not appear."—The person . . .

has contributed by his own conduct to his being placed in the position in which he finds himself (1)

"Offers any objection."—When a petition of objection (which, it has been held, need not be verified (2)) is presented under this rule the Judge is bound, whether a day for hearing has been fixed or not, to fix a day for consideration of it, and (even if the petitioner is not present either personally or by a pleader) to consider those objections, and to pass such orders as may be just and proper for it might be that the grounds of objection raised would be of such a nature as that the Judge might prima facie, and without going further into the case, see reason for not proceeding with the execution (3)

Process for execution

24. (1) When the preliminary measures (if any) required by the foregoing rules have been taken, the Court shall, unless it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree.

(2) Every such process shall bear date the day on which it is issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed.

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed

Issue of Process.—This rule amalgamates with some alterations sects 250 and 251 of the last Code, the first of which sections was amended by sect 3 of Act VI of 1886 by the introduction of the words "subject to the provisions of sect 245 A and 245 B," which have been now omitted. Sects 245 A and 245 B are now sect 56 and r 37 of this order respectively. Probably the words "subject," etc., were omitted as unnecessary, as this or any other provision of the Code must be subject to other provisions contained in it. For the word "warrant," the word "process" has been substituted, as being more exhaustive and familiar. It was pointed out under the last Code (4) that though in cases of the decree holder's default the Court might, under sect 250, suspend the issue of its warrant, that course, if adopted, would not have disposed of the application for execution which would still remain undisposed of in the register of pending cases. A distress warrant issued under the Public Demands Recovery Act, which has been extended beyond the original date of return, but does not bear on the face of it the altered date, is not a legal warrant under this rule (1) See now as to default, r 57, post

It was held under the preceding section that a day had to be specified on or before which it was to be executed, and after that date no lawful order was in force (2) If the process is not signed by the Judge or other officer it is bad (3) The execution of the process may be delegated to another by the officer to whom it is addressed the words "to be executed," seeming to imply that it was not intended that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him (4) An officer cannot arrest without having the warrant in his possession (5) As to proof of execution, (6) see below

25. (1) The officer entrusted with the execution of the Endorsement on pro process shall endorse thereon the day on, cess and the manner in, which it was executed, and, if the latest day specified in the process for the return thereof has been exceeded, the reason of the delay, or, if it was not executed, the reason why it was not executed, and shall return the process with such endorsement to the Court

(2) Where the endorsement is to the effect that such officer is unable to execute the process, the Court shall examine him touching his alleged inability, and may, if it thinks fit, summon and examine witnesses as to such inability and shall record the result

Stay of execution.

39.] 26. (1) The Court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was passed, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of first instance or appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto.

(2) Where the property or person of the judgment-debtor has been seized under an execution, the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution of such property or the discharge of such person pending the result of the application

1 (3) Before making an order to stay execution or for the restitution of property or the discharge of the judgment-debtor, the Court may require such security from, or impose such conditions upon, the judgment-debtor as it thinks fit

Power to require security from, or impose conditions upon, judgment-debtor.

Stay of execution—Ordinarily a debtor once discharged after arrest cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree (2) Under the former (as under the present) Code, execution was stayed on the application or objection of the judgment debtor, to enable the latter to apply to the Court which passed the decree, or to a Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or its execution This is necessary both to prevent precipitate execution when the decree itself or some order passed in execution is still under appeal, and also because the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution had no jurisdiction to decide certain matters It has been held that an applicant can exclude the period of stay (even if the order only relates to a part of the decree, as, for instance, recovery of costs) in computing the period of limitation (3)

Security and conditions—Where a condition precedent is infringed, execution must continue as a matter of course, whereas conditions subsequent may be enforced like decrees It has been held that an order for security in stay of execution is not applicable, for it is not an order determining the rights of the parties, and is neither an order within meaning of sect. 17 nor a decree within meaning of sect. 2 (1).

27. No order of restitution or discharge under rule 26 shall prevent the property or person of a judgment-debtor from being retaken in execution of the decree sent for execution.

Liability of judgment-debtor discharged.

"Shall prevent."—The words "order of restitution" have been added to bring the rule in conformity with the wording of the second clause of r. 26. Ordinarily a debtor once discharged after arrest cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree (2). It has, however, also been held, distinguishing the first, and dissenting from the second of the cases cited, that though the Code specifically provides for retaking of the person under certain defined circumstances, it does not follow from this that a second arrest is in all circumstances forbidden (3). In any case this rule creates a specific exception.

28. Any order of the Court by which the decree was passed, or of such Court of appeal as aforesaid, in relation to the execution of such decree, shall be binding upon the Court to which the decree was sent for execution.

Order of Court which passed decree or of Appellate Court to be binding upon Court applied to.

"Binding"—The transfer of a decree to another Court for execution amounts to a qualified delegation of the powers possessed by the Court that passed the decree, in discharging its functions relating to the execution of that decree. Such delegation is, however, not complete, nor does it entirely divest the Court which transfers the decree of its powers and functions "in relation to the execution of such decree," for under r. 26 and the present rule the highest authority in some matters still rests with that Court notwithstanding the transfer, (1) and the ordinary Court of appeal would still exercise its jurisdiction in respect of any order passed by the Court to which a decree was sent for execution. See sect. 42, ante.

29. Where a suit is pending in any Court against the holder of a decree of such Court, on the part of the person against whom the decree was passed, the Court may, on such terms as to security or otherwise, as it thinks fit, stay execution of the decree until the pending suit has been decided.

Stay pending suit—The provisions of this rule are limited to staying execution, and have no reference to a case in which execution has already been carried out and the decree holder placed in possession of the property decreed to him (1) It was held under the last Code that the section was not limited to a Court executing its own decree (2) An appeal lies from an order staying execution (3) The rule refers to the parties to the suits pending or about to be executed Execution cannot be stayed on the ground that a stranger to the decree impeaches it on the ground of fraud He should file a suit and obtain an injunction for the purpose (4) An award filed in Court under sect 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act is nothing more than an award although it is enforceable as a decree and execution of an award cannot be stayed under this rule (5)

Mode of execution

4] 30 Every decree for the payment of money, including a decree for payment of money as the alternative to some other relief, may be executed by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment debtor or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both

Imprisonment—This rule, as it appeared in sect 254 of the Code of 1882 was a repetition of that in Act X of 1877, the latter being the same as sect 201 of Act VIII of 1859, though differently expressed and amplifying the expression "decree be for money" in the earlier Code In the Code of 1883 it commenced "Every decree or order directing a party to pay money as compensation, or costs or as the alternative" and included the terms "enforced" and "imprisonment" for the present "executed" and "detention in the civil prison"

"For the payment"—A decree for rent without charging any property, against a putnidar may be executed as a decree for money, (6) while a decree for maintenance payable monthly stands on the same footing as a decree by instalments and may be executed from time to time as the instalments fall due (7)

"Alternative"—A decree for the delivery of moveable property shall state the amount of money to be paid as an alternative if delivery be not made (8)

"Some other relief"—An order directing refund of money, awarded as compensation under the Land Acquisition Act and wrongly paid out can be executed under this rule (1) The Court executing a decree has no power to direct payment of interest on costs where the decree of the Privy Council is silent as to interest (2)

"May be executed."—A Court should execute the decree in the manner applied for by the decree holder, (3) but it has discretion to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor, (4) and may in a suit for money call upon the latter to show cause why he should not be imprisoned (5) A woman, however, cannot be arrested on a money decree (6) As to costs of applications under this rule, see sect. 35

"Detention in the civil prison."—The High Court's power to commit for contempt is unaffected by this Code (7) An insolvent obtaining a protection order is not liable to imprisonment for arrears of maintenance included in his schedule (8) A suit to recover damages on account of injuries caused by wrongful arrest can only be maintained if the original suit has been finally decided in favour of the plaintiff, if the arrest was made without reasonable or probable cause, and the injuries cannot be compensated by costs (9)

Decree for specific movable—In the Code of 1859, sect 200 included sects 259 and 260 of Act XIV of 1882. The words 'or for any share in a specific movable or for the recovery of a wife' and the second clause were added by Act X of 1877. This clause was altered by Act XIV, and the words 'and the decree holder has applied to have the attached property sold' and 'in cases where any amount has been fixed under sect 208 such amount and in other cases,' were also added and the last clause appended. In the present rule the italicized words "executed" "detention in the civil prison," and "by the decree to be paid as an alternative to delivery of movable property," have been substituted for "enforced" "imprisonment" and "under sect 208," appearing in sect 259 of the Code of 1882 and the words "for the recovery of a wife," have been omitted as there can be no such decree, a wife not being a chattel to be delivered over to the husband. Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in case of disobedience either by the imprisonment of the defendant, or by the attachment of his property or by both. This rule is not applicable where the property sought to be attached is not in the possession of the judgment debtor (1). A decree being given for specific immovable and movable properties and the Ameen directed to ascertain the extent of the movables, an order was made in execution for the Ameen to give possession of such movables as he could find and to inquire into the nature, amount and value of such as he could not find. On appeal it was held that this order was not one for alternative damages, but to enable the Court if necessary to make a sufficient and not excessive order for imprisonment or attachment of property in case of non delivery (2). A writ of attachment against the person of the judgment debtor will not be granted without notice to him (3).

(5) Where a decree for the specific performance of a contract or for an injunction has not been obeyed, the Court may, in lieu of or in addition to all or any of the processes aforesaid, direct that the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the decree holder or some other person appointed by the Court, at the cost of the judgment debtor, and upon the act being done the expenses incurred may be ascertained in such manner as the Court may direct and may be recovered as if they were included in the decree

Illustration

A, a person of little substance, erects a building which renders uninhabitable a family mansion belonging to B. A, in spite of his detention in prison and the attachment of his property declines to obey a decree obtained against him by B and directing him to remove the building. The Court is of opinion that no sum realizable by the sale of A's property would adequately compensate B for the depreciation in the value of his mansion. B may apply to the Court to remove the building and may recover the cost of such removal from A in the execution proceedings Decree for specific performance—Sect 200 of Act VIII of 1859 was divided up by Act X of 1877 into two sections 259 and 260. To the latter section the Code of 1877 added or for restitution of conjugal rights, altered "it shall be enforced to" to "I as had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it the decree may be enforced", deleted from the earlier section the words 'and keeping the same under attachment until further order of the Court', and added the second clause. By the Code of 1882 were added the words "or abstinence from" to the first clause the words 'and the decree holder has applied to have the attached property sold' to the second clause, and the whole of the last clause. The portions in italics as also the Illustration, were added by the present Code which also substituted "an injunction has been passed" for 'the performance of or abstinence from any other particular act, has been made', and 'detention in the civil prison' for "imprisonment," and in clause 3 'shall' for 'may', and in clause 4 'or if made has been refused' for "and granted" This section is inapplicable to Parsees as far as restitution of conjugal rights are concerned (1)

"Restitution of conjugal rights"—These words were added to meet the objection raised in the case of Gathra Ram v. Moohita Kochin, (2) though sect 200 of Act VIII of 1859, as it stood, was held to cover such a case (3) A person directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, and who permitted her daughter to reside in her house, is not thereby guilty of such interference as would justify execution under that section (4) The Court has now a discretion under O XXI r 33, in executing decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights No provision is made for executing a decree for the recovery of a wife in this or the preceding rule, as no such decree can be made Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in the manner provided by this rule

"For an injunction"—A decree directing the removal of certain obstructions in a pathway can only be enforced as directed by this rule and not by directing the Court Ameen to remove the obstructions, (5) similarly in regard to a decree directing the removal of a building, (6) or one for removal of obstruction to light and air, (7) but see sub clause (1) and the Illustration to this rule Each breach of a perpetual injunction may be enforced under this rule (8) A decree settling a scheme for the future management of a temple should be executed in accordance with this rule, (9) so where the decree directed certain property to be jointly managed by the plaintiff and defendant and both their names to appear in all papers connected with the same on the defendant disobeying the Court can direct attachment of his property (10) A decree ordering delivery of certain moveables and declaring title to certain rights is not incapable of being executed under this rule as being merely a declaratory decree, (11) but a decree ordering that payment in kind accruing after the decree be from time to time given is too indefinite for execution (12) An order for the refund of money, awarded under the Land Acquisition Act and wrongly paid out, should be executed under sect 145 rather than under this rule (13)

"An opportunity of obeying"—All a Court has to see is whether the party bound by the decree has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it (1) The proper course when an application is made to execute a decree for the removal of a building, is to serve notice upon the judgment debtor calling upon him to comply within a time to be fixed by such notice, with the order in the decree, and on his failure to do so to make an order in terms of this rule, (2) but that is not a general rule; the rule does not require notice to issue, and it is discretionary with the Court (1)

“May be enforced.”—When an application was dismissed on the ground that the defendant had not been afforded an opportunity of obeying, a second application after such opportunity was not barred as res judicata (3)

attachment of the person or property of a recalcitrant judgment debtor but in England this mode of execution has been put an end to by the enactment of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1881, 17 & 18 Vict c 68 (cf sects 2-4) It has been considered that some relaxation of the provision in force in India is desirable, but that it was doubtful whether it should go as far as this For the present Courts have been given a discretion in the matter, and they have been enabled to follow a procedure slightly adapted from the English practice in cases in which attachment and imprisonment appear inappropriate

11 34 (1) Where a decree is for the execution of a document or for the endorsement of a negotiable instrument and the judgment debtor neglects or refuses to obey the decree, the decree holder may prepare a draft of the document or endorsement in accordance with the terms of the decree and deliver the same to the Court

(2) The Court shall thereupon cause the draft to be served on the judgment debtor together with a notice requiring his objections (if any) to be made within such time as the Court fixes in this behalf

(3) Where the judgment debtor objects to the draft, his objections shall be stated in writing within such time, and the Court shall make such order approving or altering the draft, as it thinks fit

(4) The decree holder shall deliver to the Court a copy of the draft with such alterations (if any) as the Court may have directed upon the proper stamp paper if a stamp is required by the law for the time being in force, and the Judge or such officer as may be appointed in this behalf shall execute the document so delivered

1 (5) The execution of a document or the endorsement of a negotiable instrument under this rule may be in the following form namely —

“ C D, Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), for A B, in a suit by E F against A B ” and shall have the same effect as the execution of the document or the endorsement of the negotiable instrument by the party ordered to execute or endorse the same

(6) The Court, or such officer as it may appoint in this behalf, shall cause the document to be registered if its registration is required by the law for the time being in force or the decree holder desires to have it registered, and may make such order as it thinks fit as to the payment of the expenses of the registration

Execution of instrument and endorsement — Sub rule (6) has been extended to cover optional as well as compulsory (1) registration, and an order for the payment of expenses of either kind may presumably be summarily enforced in the execution department. The Registrar of the High Court can if directed by that Court execute a conveyance on behalf of a party refusing so to do so as to pass his estate, but he cannot enter into a covenant on his behalf (2). Objections to draft conveyances or draft endorsements can be made the subject of appeal under O XLIII r 1 (e).

35 (1) Where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and, if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property [s 20]

(2) Where a decree is for the joint possession of immovable property such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree

(3) Where possession of any building or enclosure is to be delivered and the person in possession, being bound by the decree, does not afford free access, the Court, through its officers, may, after giving reasonable warning and facility to any woman not appearing in public according to the customs of the country to withdraw, remove or open any lock or bolt or break open any door or do any other act necessary for putting the decree holder in possession

"Decree"—The decree should describe the land accurately so as to avoid any objection (3) in execution as regards the lands covered by it. Possession should not be given unless it is so ordered by the decree (4). If the plaintiff is entitled to possession it should be given him. He cannot be compelled to accept compensation against his will (5). When a decree is obtained for possession that decree should be executed and a second suit will not lie for the purpose (6). Where an adverse title is unsuccessfully set up the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for his possession under this rule (7) and having set up only an adverse title in the suit, the defendant cannot be allowed for the first time when the decree is being executed to plead his occupancy as a tenant (1) As to growing crop see below (2) It was held that if the decree was silent as to a building situated on the land, it was not within the province of the executing Court to direct that the building be pulled down (3)

Possession—Possession may be actual or formal or, as it is often called symbolical possession. The delivery of possession which is directed to be given by this rule is the placing of the decree holder in actual possession, which act may involve the dispossession of some other. Whilst this rule relates to the delivery of what is known as Uhas or immediate or direct possession the following rule provides for the case where the immoveable property is in the occupancy of a tenant or of some other person entitled to occupy the same. Formal delivery of possession consists in the reading by the officers on the land of the order for putting the decree holder in possession and taking a receipt from him. Whether what occurs on the occasion of giving delivery has the effect of dispossession is a question which must be decided on the evidence (4) It has been held that the delivery of formal possession in execution of a decree for possession gives a cause of action against a defendant who remains in occupation of the possession which may be enforced in a regular suit (5) Rules 97 and 98 provide for any resistance or obstruction to the delivery of possession complained of by the decree holder, and r 100 to any complaint on the part of a third party as to his being dispossessed in execution of the decree. Where in execution of a decree a person not a party to the suit is dispossessed his dispossession does not give him a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the Mamlatdar. Rule 100 (formerly sect 332) applies (6)

Joint possession—A plaintiff who is entitled to possession jointly with other persons can be granted a decree for joint possession whether he had been originally in joint possession or not (7)

"Bound by the decree"—This includes not only the judgment debtor but persons taking from him and affected by the lis pendens. A person who purchases during the pendency of the suit is bound by the decree that may be made against the person from whom he derives title. So one who takes title or possession from a defendant in execution pending the suit is bound by the judgment, and can be evicted by the person who shall issue therein although he is not a party thereto (8) Lis pendens continues during the pendency of an appeal (1) There has been some conflict whether the rule of lis pendens applies to a sale in execution But the weight of authority appears to be in favour of the view that a purchaser at a sale in execution pending a suit is bound by the result in that suit (2) Where sons living with their father had no independent juridical possession the possession which was obtained through the Court against their father was held to operate as well against his dependents as against himself (3) Decree holders seeking to obtain lis pendens possession of property which is already in possession of a surburakar under order of Court should apply for his removal to the Court which appointed him in the matter of the suit in which he was appointed (4)

Undivided share—Difficulty was often felt (5) in executing a decree obtained by the proprietors of an undivided share in immoveable property for lis pendens possession The second sub clause of this rule now regulates this matter Thus where a decree holder in execution of her decree purchased an undivided share in a house which the judgment debtor owned jointly with a third person and the judgment-debtor resisted her attempt to get possession it was held that on the construction of this rule with r 90 of this Order the decree holder was entitled to have him removed from the premises (6) be made by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree in regard to the property.

Occupancy of tenant—In order to a legal possession being given under this rule it is essential that all its requirements should be carried out (1) But if the party in possession when the decree is being executed admits to the Court that the decree holder has formally obtained possession, he cannot afterwards plead a title by adverse possession, denying that the decree holder ever received possession (2) "The substance of the decree in regard to the property" which must be proclaimed to the occupant may or may not be a declaration that the decree holder is the immediate landlord of the occupant, and as such entitled to receive rent directly from him, as there may be an intermediate holder. Probably both the intermediate tenant as well as the cultivating tenant or actual occupant would come within the terms of the rule (3) In executing a decree under this rule the Court should confine its action strictly to the terms of the law, and should not add to the decree an order directing the ryots to pay rent to the decree holder (4)

Arrest and detention in the civil prison

15B] 37 (1) Notwithstanding anything in these rules, where an application is for the execution of a decree for the payment of money by the arrest and detention in the civil prison of a judgment-debtor who is liable to be arrested in pursuance of the application, the Court may, instead of issuing a warrant for his arrest, issue a notice calling upon him to appear before the Court on a day to be specified in the notice and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison

(2) Where appearance is not made in obedience to the notice, the Court shall, if the decree holder so requires, issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment debtor

Discretionary power—This rule was introduced into the Code by Act VI of 1888. By the present Code the words 'the payment of' have been added and the words "detention in the civil prison" and 'the civil prison' have been substituted for 'imprisonment' and 'jail in execution of the decree' respectively. This rule applies to cases under O XXI r 11 (5) where in respect of decrees for the payment of money, the Court may order immediate execution against the judgment debtor on the oral application of the decree holder

"The Court may"—It has discretion to refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor (1) It is the practice of the Calcutta High Court to issue notice to the party whose arrest is sought in execution in all cases Even after a vesting order has been made the Court may under this rule direct execution by arrest and imprisonment where protection has been refused by the Insolvent Court (2)

"Issue a notice"—Notice may issue against a judgment-debtor who in other execution proceedings has made an application to be declared an insolvent (3)

38. Every warrant for the arrest of a judgment-debtor shall direct the officer entrusted with its execution to bring him before the Court with all convenient speed, unless the amount which he has been ordered to pay, together with the interest thereon and the costs (if any) to which he is liable, be sooner paid.

Warrant for arrest of judgment debtor—Act VIII of 1859, sect 221 For form of warrant, see Schedule IV No 154, of former Code The executing officer is only empowered to arrest the defendant and detain him for such a reasonable time as is sufficient to allow of his being brought before the Court, and having an opportunity of applying for his discharge, the detention of a defendant after such reasonable time and without further authority of law is illegal (4) So where a sheriff's officer of his own motion took a prisoner, in custody under a warrant directed to the Superintendent of the Presidency Jail, to the Alipore Jail and delivered her there, it was held that the imprisonment was unlawful and that she was entitled to her discharge (5)

39. (1) No judgment debtor shall be arrested in execution of a decree unless and until the decree-holder pays into Court such sum as the Judge thinks sufficient for the subsistence of the judgment debtor from the time of his arrest until he can be brought before the Court

(2) Where a judgment debtor is committed to the civil prison in execution of a decree the Court shall fix for his subsistence such monthly allowance as he may be entitled to according to the scales fixed under section 77 or, where no such scales have been fixed, as it considers sufficient with reference to the class to which he belongs

Attachment of property

7.1 41 Where a decree is for the payment of money the decree holder may apply to the Court for an order that—Examination of judgment debtor as to his property

(a) the judgment debtor, or
 (b) in the case of a corporation, any officer thereof, or
 (c) any other person, be orally examined as to whether any or what debts are owing to the judgment debtor and whether the judgment debtor has any and what other property or means of satisfying the decree, and the Court may make an order for the attendance and examination of such judgment debtor, or officer or other person, and for the production of any books or documents

Examination of judgment debtor—This rule is an amplification of the provisions of sect 319 of Act VIII of 1859 modified by sect 267 of Act X of 1877, but none of the decisions hereinafter referred to are based on any particular wording appearing in the earlier forms of this rule under which the examination then was “in respect to any property liable to be seized in satisfaction of the decree”

Examination—In executing a decree for possession all the Court has to do is to put the decree holder in possession of the property described in the decree if the description is so uncertain that it is impossible to ascertain what is decreed execution cannot be given. The examination cannot be to ascertain what is decreed, (2) but it may be to ascertain what is the subject upon which the decree operates. When a judgment debtor maintains that the property which the judgment creditor specifies is not the subject of the decree an inquiry should be held and the judgment debtor is at least in honesty bound to point out the actual subject of the decree (3). For the purpose of ascertaining the subject of the decree, the executing Court is not precluded from considering other decrees between the same parties for the purpose of explaining and supporting the subject of the decree (4). In execution of a decree against two or several co sharers the Court should give possession of the shares of the two judgment debtors, but is not authorized to hold any inquiry into the extent or amount of those shares in relation to the remaining co sharers. This can be done by separate suit (5).

"For the production."—On an application for execution of a decree by attachment of debts the Court can require the judgment debtor to produce his books in Court (2)

42. Where a decree directs an inquiry as to rent or mesne profits

Attachment in case of decree for rent or mesne profits or other matter, amount of which to be subsequently determined or any other matter, the property of the judgment-debtor may, before the amount due from him has been ascertained, be attached, as in the case of an ordinary decree for the payment of money

Attachment where decree directs inquiry—This section was introduced into the Code by sect 255 of Act X of 1877, which then ran "If a decree be for mesne profits," etc. It embodies the decision in Sharoda Moyee Burmonee v Wooma Moyee Burmonee, 8 W R 9 (1867). The decree, however, will not be binding on the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, after whose death the amount of the decree was determined, unless they be parties to the suit (3)

43. Where the property to be attached is moveable property, other than agricultural produce

in the possession of the judgment debtor, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the attaching officer shall keep the property in his own custody or in the custody of one of his subordinates, and shall be responsible for the due custody thereof

Provided that, when the property seized is subject to speedy and natural decay, or when the expense of keeping it in custody is likely to exceed its value, the attaching officer may sell it at once

Attachment of moveable property—The first clause of this rule corresponds with sect 233 of Act VIII of 1859. The words "other than the property mentioned in the first proviso to sect 266" were added by sect 269 of Act X of 1877, and these words have been altered to "other than agricultural produce" by the present Code, by which also the words "is likely to" and "attaching" were substituted for "will" and "proper" respectively while the last clause (as to the power of the Local Government to make rules for maintenance of attached live stock) appearing in sect 269 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 has been omitted. The next two rules deal with the attachment of agricultural produce and rr 47 and 49 with the attachment of shares in moveables and of partnership property respectively

share and other property not in possession of judgment-debtor.

(a) a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument,

(b) a share in the capital of a corporation,

(c) other moveable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor, except property deposited in, or in the custody of, any Court.

the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting,—

(i) in the case of the debt, the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court,

(ii) in the case of the share, the person in whose name the share may be standing from transferring the same or receiving any dividend thereon,

(iii) in the case of the other moveable property except as aforesaid, the person in possession of the same from giving it over to the judgment-debtor.

(4) A copy of such order shall be affixed on some conspicuous part of the court house, and another copy shall be sent, in the case of the debt, to the debtor, in the case of the share, to the proper officer of the corporation, and, in the case of the other moveable property (except as aforesaid), to the person in possession of the same

(5) A debtor prohibited under clause (i) of sub rule (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same

Debts, shares and other property not in possession—This rule enacts in different language the provisions contained in sect 236 and partly in sect 239 of Act VIII of 1859. The clause commencing “A debtor prohibited” was added by sect 268 of Act X of 1877. That Act also provided —“No attachment under this section shall remain in force for more than six months, at the end of which time, if the judgment debtor has not obeyed the decree, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree holder such compensation as it thinks fit, and pay the balance, if any to the judgment debtor on his application” This provision was repealed by Act XIV of 1882, which Act also added three clauses affecting the salary of a public officer or the servant of a Railway Company, and which matter is now dealt with by O XXI r 18. The only other alteration made by the present Code is to substitute “a” for “any public Company or” and “affixed” for “fixed”. The term “debt” has been used in this rule in its legal sense of a debt either due or accruing due (1) that is, a sum of money which is either now payable or will become payable in the future by reason of a present obligation (1) A sum payable upon a contingency does not become a debt till the contingency has happened (2) An allowance payable as an annuity is not a debt, and cannot be attached under this rule until it has fallen due (3)

"Debt not secured by a negotiable instrument."—Includes a decree of a Revenue Court (5) If a debt under a deed of hypothecation is intended to be sold alone or jointly with immovable property in order to recover it by personal remedy, it should be attached under this rule, but where the interest under such a deed was attached under O XXI r 54, the absence of an attachment under this rule did not affect the right of the purchaser to realize the amount due under it (6) The rights and interests under his mortgage of a mortgagee out of possession should be attached under this rule and not under sect 274 of the former Code and O XXI r 54 of the present Code (7) In a recent case in the Madras High Court, the effect of the words "debt not secured by a negotiable instrument" was considered, and it was held that they are undoubtedly wide enough to cover a debt secured by an hypothecation bond or a simple mortgage, and that r 54 of this order is not applicable to such cases, though the General Clauses Act and Transfer of Property Act speak of such a debt as an interest in immovable property (8) The form of prohibitory order is given in the First Sched App E No 10 If such a debt be attached a claim may be preferred by a third party and investigated under O XXI r 58 (9) The corresponding section in the Code of 1877 provided that an attachment under this rule could not remain in force more than six months, but the property could then be sold Under such section it was held that bonds which would be barred in the mean time could not be made available for satisfaction of a decree in execution by the Small Cause Court (10)

"Share in the capital"—The form of prohibitory order is given in the First Sched App E No 11

lien, but cannot be sold or realized until the deposit is at the disposal of the judgment debtor freed from the lien (1)

"Not in the possession"—When the moveable property of the judgment debtor is in the hands of a third party, the decree-holder must proceed under this rule. He cannot sue the third party, (2) but it would be otherwise if the decree declared the decree holder entitled to the immoveable property (3)

"The creditor from recovering"—An attachment under this rule does not prevent the debtor suing for the debt, (4) but he cannot realize it (5)

"May pay the amount of his debt into Court"—He cannot be ordered to pay or to show cause why he should not pay (7) nor can he be ordered to pay into Court a debt he denies is due (8). In Bombay, however, it has been held that clause (1) of this rule implies that the Court may make an order for payment of the debt which the garnishee is to obey including an order for payment to the judgment creditor (9). Where instead of paying into Court, the debtor paid the money to the only person who had it been paid into Court would have been entitled to withdraw it and the payment was certified by the Court it was held the payment amounted to a sufficient compliance with the former section (10). Money paid into Court under the former section was held to be assets realized in execution under sect 295 corresponding with sect 73 (11). In the Calcutta High Court after the attachment of a debt an order can be made giving liberty to the debtor to pay the amount attached into Court, and appointing a Receiver to sue for and realize the debt if it be not paid in within a time to be fixed by the order. A voluntary payment by a debtor of his own choice and at his own risk made in a Court of inferior jurisdiction, with full knowledge of an attachment by a higher Court was held not to discharge him (12)

If such rights are not exercised before the presentation of a petition in insolvency they will not create a title so as to prevail against that of the Official Assignee under the vesting order (1). Until a debtor receives a notice under this rule he is bound to pay his judgment creditor, and it is no part of his duty to inquire whether his creditor is or is not entitled to receive the money (2). The payment of a cheque given before notice of attachment cannot be stopped (3). In England an order for attachment does not give the judgment creditor a charge until it is served (4) and there is no difference between the service of an order nisi and of an order absolute (5).

47 Where the property to be attached consists of the share or interest of the judgment debtor in moveable property belonging to him and another as co owners, the attachment shall be made by a notice to the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from transferring the share or interest or charging it in any way

48 (1) Where the property to be attached is the salary or allowances of a public officer or of a servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court, whether the judgment debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, may order that the amount shall subject to the provisions of section 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct, and, upon notice of the order to such officer as the Government may by notification in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, appoint in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be company or local authority, as the case may be, while the judgment debtor is within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends and while he is beyond those limits if he is in receipt of any salary or allowances payable out of His Majesty's Indian revenues or the funds of a railway company carrying on business in any part of British India or local authority in British India, and the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, shall be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule

Attachment of salary, etc—In the Report upon the Bill it was pointed out that the provisions here enacted are not altogether a novelty in the history of execution. Officers of the Army serving in this country, whether they do or do not belong to the Indian forces, are public officers within the meaning of the Code. Under sect 151 (3) of the Army Act (44 & 45 Vict c 58) such officers were liable to stoppage of one half of their pay in execution of decrees and such orders remained in force wherever the judgment debtor was in India. When this provision was repealed as a sequel to the abolition of the Courts of Request an addition was made to sect 136 by the Army (Annual) Act 1890 to legalize deductions authorized by any law passed by the Governor General of India in Council. This provision in view of the definition of "public officer" placed military and civil officers on the same footing for the purposes of attachment under the Code of Civil Procedure. Owing to the comparatively more frequent and rapid transfers of military officers to places at a considerable distance attention has been directed somewhat more pointedly to an inconvenience which to a greater or smaller extent is experienced in connection with the various branches of the public services in India. A public officer, whatever the amount of his indebtedness remains by virtue of statutory exemption in enjoyment of one moiety of his salary while his creditor, by reason of the application of the provisions relating to local jurisdiction, must follow him from Court to Court all over the country with troublesome and expensive applications for transfer and attachment. It has moreover been represented that a tradesman at a distance ought not to be burdened with responsibility for tracing out the actual officer disbursing the salary and it is possible in practice for a public servant acting as his own paymaster to place the most serious obstructions in the way of execution. In these circumstances a reversion has been made, in substance to the provisions of sect 151 sub sect (3) of the Army Act which have been extended to all public officers, railway servants and servants of local authorities and the responsibility is cast on the Government or the company or authority concerned for making its arrangements for receiving notice and for effecting the proper deduction. As a corollary to these provisions it is believed that the order may reasonably be declared effective not merely while the judgment debtor is in India but while he is in receipt of emoluments from the Indian revenues or from the funds of an Indian local authority or of a Railway Company carrying on business in British India.

Salary or allowances—This rule is new though it partly includes the provisions in the last three clauses of sect 268 of Act XIV of 1882 There is no inconsistency between it and the explanation to sect 61 (1)

"Within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction"—Under the earlier Codes, which contained no such provision as this, it was held that a Provincial Small Cause Court could not directly attach the salary of a public officer disbursed outside its jurisdiction, (2) nor that of a railway servant when not actually due disbursed outside such jurisdiction (3) This rule provides a special rule in the case of certain judgment debtors because r 46 does not entitle the execution Court to attach a debt payable by a non resident outside the jurisdiction (1)

"May order that the amount shall be withheld"—The order should also prohibit the public officer or servant from receiving the amount of the salary attached (5)

49 (1) Save as otherwise provided by this rule, property belonging to a partnership shall not be attached or sold in execution of a decree other than a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such

(2) The Court may, on the application of the holder of a decree against a partner, make an order charging the interest of such partner in the partnership property and profits with payment of the amount due under the decree, and may, by the same or a subsequent order, appoint a receiver of the share of such partner in the profits (whether already declared or accruing) and of any other money which may be coming to him in respect of the partnership, and direct accounts and inquiries and make an order for the sale of such interest or other orders as might have been directed or made if a charge had been made in favour of the decree holder by such partner, or as the circumstances of the case may require

(3) The other partner or partners shall be at liberty at any time to redeem the interest charged or, in the case of a sale being directed, to purchase the same

(4) Every application for an order under sub rule (1) shall be served on the judgment debtor and on his partners or such of them as are within British India

(5) Every application made by any partner of the judgment-debtor under sub rule (3) shall be served on the decree holder and on the judgment debtor, and on such of the other partners as do not join in the application and as are within British India

Partnership property—This section has been introduced in consequence of representations that, for the promotion of commercial enterprise, the rules relating to the attachment of any interest in partnership property should be assimilated to the English practice. It has been thought that at any rate in the commercial centres the time has arrived for introducing the provisions of sect 23 of the Partnership Act 1900 (22 & 23 Vict c 39), but how far they are likely to be useful when applied to the family business forming portion of the joint estate of Hindus is a matter which remains to be seen. The enactment in question has therefore been tentatively adapted in sub clauses (1) to (3), to which sub clauses (4) and (5) embodying the simplified procedure directed by O 46 rr 13 and 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court are merely ancillary.

50. (1) When a decree has been passed against a firm, Execution of decree may be granted—
(a) against any property of the partnership,

(b) against any person who has appeared in his own name under rule 6 or rule 7 of Order XXV or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is or who has been adjudged to be, a partner,

(c) against any person who has been individually served as a partner with the summons and has failed to appear

Provided that nothing in this sub rule shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of section 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872

(2) Where the decree holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub rule (1), clauses (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave, and where the liability is not disputed such Court may grant such leave, or, where such liability is disputed, may order that the liability of such person be tried and determined in any manner in which any issue in a suit may be tried and determined

(3) Where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub rule (2), the order made thereon shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree

(4) Save as against any property of the partnership, a decree against a firm shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect any partner therein unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer

Cross references — As to actions by or against partners in the name of the firm, see O XXX rr 1-3, supra. Action against the person trading under an assumed or trading name, r 10 of same Order. Actions between co partners, execution not to issue without leave, O XXX r 9. As to issue directed under this rule to try question of liability of retiring partners see note (1)

"Where a decree has been passed against a firm"—Where a writ has been issued against a firm and served on a partner according to O XXX r 3 supra judgment must be signed against the firm. It cannot be signed against one partner separately for default of appearance (2). But it has been held in England that where judgment has been recovered against the firm, the plaintiff is not confined to the remedy given by this rule but may still bring an action on the judgment against the individual members of the firm without any special leave of the Court (3). A plaintiff having obtained judgment against a firm cannot by subsequent service of the writ render the person served liable as a partner hereunder. He must apply under this rule (4).

Infant partner—It has been held by the House of Lords (5) (a) that an infant can be a partner in a firm (b) that though a partner he cannot contract debts by trading and is not therefore liable for the debts of the firm, (c) that the adult partner is entitled to insist that all the assets of the partnership shall be applied in payment of the liabilities of the partnership and until this is done the infant partner has no claim on them, (d) that a judgment against a firm containing an infant partner and bankruptcy proceedings based upon such judgment must specifically exclude the infant partner (6). The form of judgment in such a case therefore is in England as follows. Adjudged that the plaintiff recover against the defendant firm other than A B an infant partner, etc (7). On a judgment so worded, execution issues as of course on the property of the firm irrespective of the question of infancy of any member thereof, and semble, even if the sole member of the firm were an infant the right of the plaintiff to issue execution against the goods of the firm would not be affected. But no execution can issue against the private property of the infant partner. It would seem to follow from the above that an infant partner could not be served as a partner though semble the firm might be served by service on him as the person in control of the business. It would seem also to follow that an infant partner can neither appear nor defend as a partner (8).

"Execution may be granted"—See also O XXX rr 6 8 supra as to subsequent proceedings. No execution can issue against any partnership property except on a judgment against the firm. Where a partnership was dissolved as to A and afterwards an action was instituted against the firm for a debt contracted before the dissolution but A was not served with the writ and had no notice of the action till after judgment it was held that his liability must be determined before the judgment could be enforced against him, and a debtor's summons founded on the judgment was dismissed (1) A partner so situated cannot now be made liable unless he has been served with the writ (2) But where there had been a dissolution under an order by consent in the Chancery Division, and a receiver appointed of the partnership property, and subsequently a judgment in the King's Bench Division was recovered for a debt accruing due after dissolution, it was held that a charging order on the property of the firm in the hands of the receiver was valid, and could not be set aside by partners who had not been served with the writ (3) Where the action is between a firm and one or more of its members or between firms having one or more members in common, no execution can issue without an order (4) Where a judgment is recovered by a firm suing in the firm name, and afterwards one of the partners dies the surviving partner may issue execution by leave hereunder (5)

"Has failed to appear"—Where one person is trading as a firm execution cannot in England issue against him under clause (c) of this rule, unless he has been individually served (either personally or by substituted service) or leave has been obtained under the rule (7) As to a case where the writ is served first on the person in charge of the business of the firm and afterwards on a partner see below (8)

"Claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed"—This does not include a partner who has left the firm to the knowledge of the plaintiff before action brought. If he has been served with the writ as provided by O XXX r 3, supra he becomes liable under clause (b) or (c) of this rule. The proviso to that rule is imperative and if he has not been served with the writ no order can be made against him hereunder (9) Where the Master ordered an issue, "Whether the said S M H was or had held himself out to be a partner" and the Judge varied the issue by limiting it to whether the person sought to be

"Shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect"—These and the preceding and following words of the rule limit in England the operation of a judgment against a firm to (A) partnership property within the jurisdiction, (2) (B) the private property of any partner who was within the jurisdiction when the writ was issued and has become liable to execution under (a), (b), or (c) of this rule, (C) the private property within the jurisdiction of any partner who was out of the jurisdiction when the writ was issued but who has become liable to the jurisdiction of the Court 1st by appearing to the writ, or 2ndly by failing to appear after being duly served outside the jurisdiction, or having been served with the writ within the jurisdiction and having failed to appear. The present rule omits reference to jurisdiction in clause (a) and clause (4) has been simplified in the manner appearing

The rule in England as regards joint contractors has been thus stated (3) "An action and a judgment against some of several joint contractors is a bar to subsequent proceedings against the remainder of them on the same contract (4) And this holds good when the joint contractors are partners in a firm (5) sued not in the firm name but as individuals. A judgment against a firm sued in the name of the firm is a judgment against all the partners in the firm (6) And even where partners are sued together by their names and not in the name of the firm judgment against one is no bar to continuance of the action against the others (7) But a judgment entered by consent against one joint contractor if pleaded is a bar to further proceedings against others (8) And it has been held that where one of two joint contractors gave a cheque for the amount of the joint debt and was sued to judgment on the dishonoured cheque the action and judgment were no bar to a subsequent action against the other joint contractor on the original contract (9) Sect 43 of the Contract

Since the passing of that Act a judgment obtained against some only of the joint contractors, and remaining unsatisfied, is no bar to a second suit on the contract against the other joint contractors.(3)

Property in Court's custody.—This rule corresponds with sect. 237 of Act VIII. of 1859, save that in such section the property in deposit was described as property which "shall consist of money, or any security." It is similar to sect. 272 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882, save for the slight verbal alterations indicated in italics. The rule does not apply to a case where the property sought to be attached has, under the decree being executed, been declared the property of

Clause (b) "Passed by another Court."—This does not include a decree for money passed by a Revenue Court (1) The other Court on receiving the order is bound to comply therewith, and is debarred from proceeding with the execution unless the bar is removed in one of the ways specified in the section and a sale notwithstanding the order attaching the decree is invalid (2)

"Shall proceed to execute"—The Court has no power after receipt of notice to sanction an adjustment, (3) nor can it return the notice to the Court which sent it as the amount for which the attachment was issued was not stated, and then proceed to execute its own decree The Court on receiving the notice is bound to comply with it (4)

Sub rule (4)—This refers to decrees other than money decrees, (5) and under the previous Code, where the wording of this clause ran, "In the case of all other decrees, it was held to include decrees for redemption (6) and decrees for sale of immoveable property under sect 88 of the Transfer of Property Act (7) The present rule, however, excludes decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge as well as decrees for the payment of money from the operation of this clause When "the Court which passed the decree" attaches its own decree, it may execute such decree on the application of the attaching creditor (8) In the previous Code this clause concluded with the words, "Every Court receiving such notice shall give effect to the same until it is so cancelled", that is, to abstain from executing the decree The Court receiving the notice cannot substitute in the record of the decree being attached the judgment creditor for the judgment-debtor in the decree being executed (9) part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the office of the Collector of the district in which the land is situate.

Mode of attachment of immoveable property.—The first clause of the present rule corresponds with sect 235 of Act VIII of 1859, the wording being practically the same. The present form was adopted by sect 271 of Act X of 1877, save that the words "taking any benefit from such transfer or charge" have been substituted for "receiving the same from him by purchase, gift, or otherwise". The remaining clause corresponds with portions of sect 239 of Act VIII of 1859. In that section the words were "the written order shall be read out". This was altered by sect 274 of Act X of 1877 to "the order shall be proclaimed," which Act added the words "by beat of drum or other customary mode" and "paying revenue to Government". Certain verbal alterations have been made as shown in italics.

"Where the property is immoveable"—Decrees for money charged on land are immoveable property (1). A decree for redemption cannot be attached under this rule, but under O XXI r 53 (2). A debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property should be attached under this rule and not under O XXI r 16, (3). Later cases have, however, held that such a debt, especially if the mortgagee is not in possession is not immoveable property and need not be attached under this rule, (4) its most omission to attach under this rule is an irregularity (5).

It has been recently held that in the case of a purely usufructuary mortgage where there is no debt payable by the mortgagor the procedure should be by attachment (under this rule) of the interest in immoveable property (6). An attachment is not necessary in execution of a mortgage decree where the decree contains a direction for sale (7). When this point was raised before the Privy Council they would not go into it and held a sale without attachment in execution was good on the ground that the property had been attached under a previous decree arising out of the same mortgage transaction (8). The effect of a mortgage debt in execution of a decree carries with it the security with which attaching the mortgaged property under this rule (1) The equity of redemption of a mortgagor can be attached under this rule, the attachment being by order prohibiting the judgment debtor from dealing with it in any way and all persons from receiving it, such order being proclaimed and notified as therein directed (2) The execution of mortgage decrees are now governed by O XXXIV, but prior to the present Code they were governed by the rules made under the Transfer of Property Act in Bengal and Assam (3) The life interest of a Hindu widow under her husband's will in the income of his immoveable estate is immoveable property and is attachable (4)

"By an order prohibiting."—This should be the procedure where the property sought to be attached is a factory in the possession of a prior mortgagee, and not by putting peons in possession (5) The prohibitory order does not have the effect of dispossessing the judgment debtor (6) For form of prohibitory order, see the First Sched App E No 8

"The property."—Where an attachment was made of the debtor's share without specifying the share, it was held only to cover the share and not the whole property (7)

"Proclaimed."—Omission of the beat of drum was held to be a material irregularity, and the sale was cancelled (8) Objections as to irregularities in the proclamation cannot be taken on appeal to the P C for the first time (9)

It then continued "an order shall be issued for the withdrawal of the attachment; and if the defendant shall desire it and shall deposit in Court a sum sufficient to cover the expense, the order shall be proclaimed or intimated in the same manner as heretofore prescribed for the proclamation or intimation of the attachment; and such steps shall be taken as may be necessary for staying further proceedings in execution of the decree." This was repealed by sect 275 of Act X of 1877, which concluded with the words "an order shall be issued on the application of any person interested in the property for the withdrawal of the attachment." For this has been substituted the last clause in italics by the present Code, which also added the words in italics in clause (b). But where property has been attached, an order dismissing an application for execution but not specifically withdrawing the attachment or declaring the decree incapable of execution, did not, it was held, raise the attachment. If on appeal such order were set aside the decree holder was entitled to the full benefit of his attachment (1). The striking off of execution proceedings from the file of a Court did not, it was held, interfere with the continuance of an attachment (2). A sale in pursuance of an attachment being set aside does not displace the attachment, (3) nor does the death of the judgment debtor, (4) even though he be a Mitakshara coparcener and his interest in the property attached passed to the surviving coparceners (5). An attachment nine years old in execution of a decree twelve years old in the absence of other information must, it was held be assumed to have been removed (6). Where any property has been attached in execution of a decree but by reason of the decree holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease.

"Decree-holders' default."—It was pointed out (1) that the last Code did not contain anything like a complete procedure for proceedings in execution. It did not suggest what procedure should be adopted in cases analogous to those which might occur during the hearing of a suit and which were provided for by Chapter XIII of that Code. Further, it was clear, both from the Code itself and from the provisions of the Limitation Act, that the Legislature contemplated that there might be a succession of applications for execution (2). Where final orders adjudicating upon the right to have execution have been made, the principle of res judicata is applicable (see sect 11) (3). But under the former practice an application for execution might be made but might not be proceeded with. The Code did not prohibit an application for execution where a former application to that effect had been withdrawn without liberty to present a fresh one (4). Nor, as stated, did it provide for cases where the application could not proceed for default of the decree-holder. In such cases a practice arose, with the object of disencumbering the files of the Court, of "striking off" applications. It was frequently pointed out that this practice was not justified by the Code, (5) and that there were (apart from the question of adjournment) only two ways of judicially disposing of any application, that is, by granting or dismissing it in whole or in part (6). The effect of an order "striking off" was discussed in numerous cases. An attachment was not necessarily at an end because the execution case was struck off the file. The effect of such an order depended on the circumstances of the case (7). There was no general rule as to the effect of striking off an execution case from the file (8). Such an order did not necessarily put an end to the attachment, and it was competent for the Court to make such an order and at the same time continue the attachment (9). It was open to the decree holder to revive the execution proceedings and continue it from the point where it had previously stopped (10). Where by a mistake of the Court an application for execution against attached property was dismissed, but there was no order removing the attachment, and the decree-holder obtained a review, and the executing Court was directed to proceed, it was held that the attachment subsisted as against a sale made by the judgment debtor previous to the review (1)

The "striking-off" or shelving of an execution application thus admitted of different interpretations according to the circumstances. It might have the effect of killing the particular application without any adjudication on the merits. So if such an order was passed in consequence of some default of applicant not going to the merits of his right to have satisfaction of his decree (e.g. default in appearance, failure to pay process fees, or to put in copies of papers called for, etc.), in such cases though the order might put an end to the particular application in which it was passed, it did not bar a subsequent application for execution if it were made within the period of limitation (2). Further, as sect. 158 of the Code of 1882 did not apply to execution-proceedings, there was no statutory provision for cases of decree-holder's default (3). If, on the other hand, such an order was passed on the merits of the application e.g. by a finding that the decree had been satisfied or that execution was barred by some previous order which would operate as res judicata then so far as the Court executing the decree was concerned, the application was taken to have been finally disposed of in a manner adverse to applicant's right to have the decree executed, and no further application for execution could be entertained unless in pursuance of a successful appeal (4). In these cases the effect of the order was to render the decree dead and incapable of execution or further execution.

Investigation of claims and objections

58 (1) Where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects, as if he was a party to the suit

Investigation of claims to, and objections to attachment of, attached property.

Provided that no such investigation shall be made where the Court considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed.

(2) Where the property to which the claim or objection applies has been advertised for sale, the Court ordering the sale may postpone it pending the investigation of the claim or objection

60 Where upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that for the reason stated in the claim or objection such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment debtor or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall make an order releasing the property, wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment

Release of property from attachment

61 Where the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment debtor as his own property and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to such mortgage or charge.

63 Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party

against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Applicability—R 58 states that the investigation is to take place as if the claimant or objector was a party to the suit. That is it assumes that the claimant is not a party. Claims of third parties only are dealt with under that rule. This rule gives a statutory right of suit to the unsuccessful party in claim proceedings (1). Questions between the parties to a suit are dealt with under sect 47 (2). The cases just cited establish the principle though as regards its application in the instances dealt with by them reference must now be made to the amendments made in sect 244 of the last Code by sect 47 of this. Where the case falls under sect 47 there is an appeal otherwise not. Where a judgment-debtor alleged that he was in possession of attached property only as Shewan of a duty it was held that the case did not fall within sect 47 (3). A judgment-debtor who is not in fact a party to the claim proceedings does not in the eye of the Law become such by reason solely of his being the judgment debtor (4). These provisions apply only where the property sought to be sold has been attached in execution but not where the decree has ordered its sale (5).

The provisions of the Code are permissive. They do not impose an obligation on persons having claims to prefer to property attached to prefer them during execution and annex in case of failure to do so forfeiture of their right to establish their title to the property by a regular suit (1) These provisions do not deprive a claimant of his remedy by suit but give him a more speedy and summary remedy (2) If he avails himself of it the Court is bound in a proper case where the claim is made at a proper time that is before sale, (3) to make an inquiry, and can be compelled by application in revision to do so (4) His remedy by suit is also optional, and if he does not choose to avail himself of it, a sale will give him a fresh cause of action with a new period of limitation (5)

These provisions were held not to apply to the case where a person served with a prohibitory order applies to have the attachment raised on the ground that the debt attached did not exist (6) It has been held that the application of the Official Assignee to release the property of an insolvent debtor falls within these provisions (7) If the debtor is declared insolvent and a receiver is appointed this does not prevent a person claiming (8) It was held that sect 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars a claim under these provisions to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears due thereon, in all cases and its operation is not confined merely to claims to the tenure or holding but extends to claims based on the ground that the property claimed does not form part of the tenure or holding attached (9) The word "suit" in sect 55 of the Court of Wards Act includes miscellaneous proceedings, and therefore if a claim is preferred by the Manager of the Court of Wards without the sanction of the Court of Wards the order disallowing the claim is not binding upon the Ward of Court (10) As to whether the amendment of sect 28 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act by Art IV of 1906 affects these provisions in relation to claims to tiled huts, see case cited (11)

An objector may raise an objection to an attachment not only on the ground that he is in possession of the property attached, but also on the ground that he has an interest in it, and it has been held that where an executing Court disallows a claim under sect 281 of the last Code (now represented by r 61 of this Order) it has jurisdiction to do so, notwithstanding that it erroneously refrains from going into the question of possession and disallows the objection on some other ground (1) Rules 58 and 60 of this Order speak of claims to attached property and the release of property from attachment, but they do not justify the conclusion that if moveable property of a perishable nature has been attached and a claim has been preferred to it, the claim must prove nugatory if the decree holder can induce the Court to sell the property before the claim has been investigated (2) The true aim of an attachment is to place the property in the custody of the Court so as to make it available for the realization of the decree. If by reason of the dismissal of the suit or the default of the decree holder the Court dissolves the attachment the property ceases to be in its custody. The Court cannot take it back into its custody so as to prejudice a title acquired in the interval (3)

Property.—The rules relate to claims preferred to and objections made to the attachment of “any property” attached. Sect 266 of the last Code (now 60) specifies a debt as one species of property which is liable to attachment, and sect 268 of that Code (now O XXI r 46) prescribes the mode in which a debt is to be attached. Debts and other species of intangible property are therefore not excluded (4) such as an equity of redemption (5)

The word “property” as applied to land does not simply mean land but the share or interest in land attached. It includes undivided shares in land. So where property belongs to two persons jointly, and in execution against one anything more than his right and interest in the property are attached, the other joint holder has a right to come in and claim that the attachment may be removed quoad his share (6)

The section in the last Code was held inapplicable to claims to property directed to be sold by a mortgage decree (7) and provision was made in sect 282 of that Code (now r 62) for the continuance of attachment subject to claim of incumbrancer. Though the execution of mortgage decrees is expressly incorporated in the Code the Select Committee were of opinion that claims and objections arising out of the execution of such decrees should not be the subject of summary procedure under these rules, but should be determined in the ordinary course. This, however, does not imply that the procedure under the later rules as to resistance to possession or dispossession does not apply. A mortgagee who was in possession of the mortgaged property when it was attached in execution of a decree against the mortgagor, was held entitled to claim that the attachment should be withdrawn (1). Where certain property was attached under sect. 13 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 before the petitioner was declared insolvent and a receiver appointed, it was held that under s. 58 the Court was bound to hear and adjudicate upon any claims preferred by persons alleging themselves to be the owners of such property (2).

The Court—As to jurisdiction (3) and Small Cause Court (4) of cases cited.

“Shall proceed to investigate”—Under the Code of 1859 the Court was to investigate with the like powers as if the claimant had been originally made a defendant to the suit, words which were held to mean that the Court was to have the same powers of investigation as if the claimant was a party to a suit which would give it power to summon the claimant and to dispose of the case against him if he should refuse to attend (5). Sect. 278 of the last Code did not provide expressly for the judgment debtor being summoned (6) but directed the Court to investigate with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects as if he were a party to the suit. R. 58 expressly provides that no investigation shall be made where the Court considered that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed. Where the order was that the plaintiff come in too late for inquiry (7) or the property was simply released without inquiry (8) there was held to be no order under the section. Before any claim can be investigated it is necessary to ascertain whether the claim was heard in a suit originating before or after the attachment made by the decree holder (9). Where there are several independent claims each must be heard separately (10). The application ought either to be dismissed or numbered and registered as a suit (11). In an investigation the Court has to determine the question of possession only, and cannot go into the question of title with respect to the property taken in attachment (1) If the possession of the person holding the property is on his own account the fact that the judgment-debtor may have a beneficial interest or some title in it cannot be gone into (2) The words "possession" and "possessed" in the last Code were held not to be used in a restricted sense as relating to mere tangible or physical possession, but to include constructive possession or possession in law of debts and other intangible property (3) The onus is on the applicant to prove his claim, and he must begin (4) His evidence which may be of any kind sufficient for the purpose (5) and must be received (6) should be confined to his own claim and not to establish the right of a third party (7) Where an objection has been made and disallowed it cannot be renewed by the same person in the same attachment (8)

Order of Court.—Rules 60 and 61 specify the cases in which the Court is to allow or disallow a claim. R 59 deal with the evidence to be adduced by the claimant and it was held that to reconcile the sections the words "some interest" were to be taken to imply such an interest as would make the possession of the judgment-debtor possession not on his own account but on account of or in trust for the claimant. The rules relating to claims to attached property provide for a summary investigation into possession. The question of title is required to be gone into only so far as may be necessary to determine whether the person in possession was so as agent of or as trustee for another (9). Sect 280 of the last Code (now r 60) was held to refer to cases in which the possession of a claimant as trustee was of such a character as to be really the possession of the debtor and not to cases in which intricate questions of law might arise as to whether or not valid trusts might result in particular instances the real question to be determined being that of possession (10)

Under r 60 the conditions upon which the property is to be in whole or in part released are . (a) that the property was not when attached in the possession of the judgment debtor, or of some person in trust (1) for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or (b) that being in the possession of the judgment debtor at such time it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust (2) for some other person or party (3) in his own account and partly on account of some other person. It is not necessary (to defeat the claim) to prove that the trust is one capable of enforcement by law (4). The claim is disallowed under r 61 if the property was in the possession of the judgment debtor as his own or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of his tenant.

The Court has to "make an order for releasing the property wholly or to such an extent as it thinks fit from attachment". The order is passed after investigation of the claim of the objector (5). It must be made before the sale has taken place, for upon the sale the application terminates ipso facto (6). When the property of the insolvent judgment debtor, which was attached, had vested in the Official Assignee during the pendency of claim proceedings, it was held that the latter was not a necessary party and that the decree ought only to declare that the property belonged to the judgment debtor and not to declare it liable to attachment (7). Where the claimant paid the amount of the decree and got the property released, the Court was held to have no jurisdiction to make an order for repayment (8). Where the Court was, after such investigation, of opinion that the property attached ought not to be sold, the proper order was one simply releasing the property from attachment, (9) the order being one made with reference merely to the particular claimant who has obtained the order (10). The rule contemplates not only the entire release of the property, but also the retention of the attachment to such extent as the Court thinks fit (1) The person against whom an order is passed is the decree holder (2) It depends upon the facts of each case whether the judgment-debtor is a party against whom an order was made so as to be bound by the special rule of limitation prescribed for suits by such a party (3)

Where, on the other hand, the claimant does not appear in support of his claim (4) or failed to adduce evidence (5) or evidence not worthy of credit, (6) and the Court is satisfied of the existence of the conditions mentioned in sect 281 (now r 61), the proper order to make is that the claim be disallowed. It has been, however, more recently in some cases held that these provisions contemplate an investigation of the merits of the claim, and that an order is not conclusive where the decree has been disallowed for default (7) or withdrawn (8) An order of disallowance enures only to the benefit of the person in whose favour it was passed, that is, the attaching creditor (9) Where the claimant was in actual possession the effect of an order disallowing his claim was held to be that he was in possession without title (10) The effect of an order disallowing the claim is to give the auction purchaser a title as against the claimant unless the claim is established by suit brought within the period of limitation from the date of the order (11) Where intervenors claim a share of attached property, the Court should define the respective shares of the debtor and the intervenor and sell the debtor's definite share only (12) An order in favour of one of several decree holders on an objection was held not to enure for the benefit of other decree holders who were not parties to the proceedings (1) An order for release being only provisional and liable to be set aside by a regular suit, has not the effect of putting an end to an attachment duly made (2)

“May institute a suit.”—A party to an investigation is excluded from any other remedy than that expressly provided for him by rule 63 by a regular suit brought within the period of limitation (3) Where, however, a claim was rejected but the decree holder withdrew his attachment, it was held that the parties were restored to the status quo ante, and the claimant was not required to bring a suit, (4) though a party may proceed to clear his title by suit even though the attachment has ceased to exist (5) The special right of suit conferred is not controlled by the proviso to sect 12 of the Specific Relief Act (6) The right to be established in a suit instituted after an adverse order must be substantially the same right as that for which the party has contended in the execution, (7) and the suit should be determined by ascertaining the rights of the parties at the date of the order (8) Where the same property is attached in execution of different decrees and all the attachments are removed, it is not necessary for each attaching creditor to bring a separate suit A decree obtained in a suit brought by one enures to the benefit of all (9) The right of suit is not a personal right confined to the original claimant, and therefore a suit will lie by the purchaser of the rights of a person who had unsuccessfully filed an objection (10) The attachment constitutes the cause of action, and different purchasers of the attached property may be properly joined as defendants in the same suit (11)

The decree-holder may sue to have his right to attach, and sell the property declared (12) All that he has to prove is that on the date of the attachment the judgment debtor had a subsisting right in the property, and the suit must be tried as if it were a suit for possession by the judgment debtor (13) The claimant may bring a declaratory suit to establish his right, (14) and to obtain any further relief to which he may be entitled, (1) and need not wait until his possession is actually disturbed (2) and as long as a decree is operative, a temporary cessation of the execution proceedings under it does not deprive the execution creditor of his rights to sue to set aside the order (3) There is nothing in these provisions which limits the plaintiff's right to compensation for his loss, or the defendant's responsibility for his wrongful act, and if the existence of the summary procedure leads to delay, and that delay to further loss, the consequences must fall upon the defendant (4) It has been held that a suit by a claimant under sect 283 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) should be decreed if it is found that the claimant was in possession after a purchase for valuable consideration, but that the defendant in such a suit can set up the defence of fraud annulling the transfer (5) In a suit by a judgment creditor to establish his debtor's title a claimant has no right to set up any irregularities there may be in the execution proceedings, a matter with which he is not concerned, (6) or to impeach the decree as collusive, (7) though this last decision has been dissented from on the ground that the section does not introduce an exception to the rule that a defendant is bound and entitled to set up every defence available to him (8) When a person fails to establish a prescriptive title in a suit in which he is plaintiff, it does not follow that the defendant is entitled to recover the subject of such suit in an action brought by him (9)

The suits though brought to establish rights negatived in execution proceedings are not appeals from orders but substantive suits to all intents and purposes, and must be tried like any other suits subject to the ordinary rules of procedure and evidence (10) The Judge is bound to find the facts upon the evidence rendered and taken in the suit and not upon any evidence taken in the summary proceeding, (11) nor is the judgment in the claim case admissible (12) Where a suit is brought by an intervenor the onus is on him to prove his title, and not on the purchaser to prove that of the judgment debtor (13) In a suit brought by the owner against the purchaser, the execution creditor is properly made a party, the object being to restore all parties to the position which they occupied previously to such attachment and sale, (1) and if the claimant further desires relief by partition all the owners should be made parties (2) As to the position of the debtor in a suit by the creditor, see ante.

Whether the suit is to be brought in the Ordinary or Small Cause Court depends upon the nature of the claim and the right sought to be enforced (3) The judgment-debtor is not a necessary party (4) Where an application was decided with costs to be paid by the decree-holders, and the latter were declared in a subsequent suit to be entitled to sell the property, but no relief was asked in regard to the costs, it was held that they could not be refunded by the Court executing the decree (5) The effect of a successful suit at the instance of an attaching creditor is to set aside the order of release and to restore the state of things which it had disturbed (6) An application to revive a previous application for execution, which has been temporarily suspended by an order under these provisions, is, according to the Calcutta, Bombay, and Allahabad High Courts, governed by Art 178 of the Limitation Act (7) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the valuation of the subject matter of the suit is the amount for which the attachment was made (8) The Privy Council have recently determined that a suit under r 63 falls within clause 1, Art 17, Sched II, Court Fees Act, and a Court fee of Rs 10 is payable thereon (9)

"The right which the plaintiff claims to the property in dispute," means the right which is claimed in the proceeding in respect of the property that is, the right to have it sold or the right to have it released from attachment They do not mean the right or title to the property When, therefore, a claimant, being unsuccessful in a claim, has got the property released from attachment by coming to terms with the decree-holder, without notice to the judgment debtors, a suit subsequently brought by him against the judgment-debtors for recovery of possession is not barred (10)

"Subject to the result of such suit."—When property has been released from attachment and subsequently declared liable to attachment by a decree against which an appeal is pending, a sale of such property before the final result of the appeal is not illegal (1)

"The order shall be conclusive."—Where an order has been passed unless a suit is brought, the unsuccessful party cannot assert his right in any capacity, whether as plaintiff or defendant, (2) and he is prevented from pleading adverse possession at the date of the order (3) The conclusiveness exists only as regards the particular property in dispute (4) The order is conclusive subject to the other provisions of the Code, such as those relating to review (5) and revision (6) On the same principle matters finally heard and decided cannot be reopened on a second application, (7) but it has been held that where there is no investigation of a claim which is dismissed for default, a fresh claim may be made (8) The discharge of the order of attachment cannot be properly asked for in such suit The intervenor having established his title by declaratory decree, should then carry the decree to the Court by which the attachment was issued, when such Court, being bound to recognize the adjudication, will govern itself accordingly (9) An order is not appealable (10) An order passed by a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court dismissing a claim preferred by mortgagees of immoveable property which was attached in execution, was held subject to appeal under the Letters Patent (11) case the Court, after being satisfied of the existence of the mortgage, sells only the judgment debtor's right of redemption, so that the purchaser does not acquire any greater rights than those of redeeming the mortgage. In the latter the Court decides nothing as to the existence of the mortgage. The purchaser buys the property with notice of the mortgage, and subject to such risks as the notice might involve (1). A person who purchases a property in execution of his own decree apparently subject to a mortgage lien as declared by the Court under r 62, without, however, acquiescing in the order made in favour of the mortgagee, is entitled to question the mortgage, if done so within a year of the order in the claim case by way of defence in the suit brought against him by the mortgagee to enforce his lien, although he may not have instituted any suit under r 63 to establish the right which he claims in the property in dispute (2).

Sale generally

1 64. Any Court executing a decree may order that any property attached by it and liable to sale, or such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree, shall be sold, and that the proceeds of such sale, or a sufficient portion thereof, shall be paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same.

Power to order property attached to be sold and proceeds to be paid to person entitled.

Order for sale.—This rule corresponds with sect 212 of Act VIII of 1859, but that section provided only for the sale of such attached property as did not consist of money or bank notes. The present wording save the words in italics, was introduced by sect 284 of Act X of 1877. The words in italics are additions made by the present Code. Where the same property is under attachment by two Courts of different grades a sale effected by the Court of lower grade is not a nullity. Sect 63, ante, is a directory section dealing with procedure, and does not take away the jurisdiction to sell conferred on the Court by this rule (3). Sect 89 of the Transfer of Property Act contemplates a certain state of things, but where such state does not exist that section does not exclude other ways of enforcing a decree, and a Court has general jurisdiction to direct a sale, if not under that section, then under this rule (4).

"May"—It is, however, imperative on the Court to act when an application is duly made by a party interested and having the right to apply, but when property has been sold in execution of a decree it cannot be sold again at the instance of another decree holder who attached it prior to the attachment under the decree under which it was sold (5).

"Any property attached"—This does not include a decree for money, which cannot be sold (1)

"Shall be sold."—When a sale takes place, all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground (2) As to payment of proceeds to party entitled, see case cited (3)

Appeal—An appeal lay under sect. 588 (j) of Act X of 1877 from an order refusing the judgment debtor's application that the property be sold in successive shares, the question being one between the parties in respect of the execution of a decree (4) But see now O XLII r 1

65. Save as otherwise prescribed, every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed.

Sales.—A sale in execution is a sale by the Court which has a statutory power conferred on it of transferring the interest of the judgment debtor to the purchaser, and to that end a certain course of procedure is prescribed terminating with the sale certificate (5) As to sales of agricultural produce see rr 74, 75 In order that the sale be good it must have been held under a good decree, (6) and it must have been conducted by a person duly authorized The words "whom the Court may appoint" in the former section were held to apply not only to the words "any other person," but also to the officers of the Court (7) When a Court postponed a sale, but information not reaching the Nazir in time, he sold the property, it was held that the sale was void (8) In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers (9) Where a sale was conducted by two officers of the Court, one a chief clerk and officiating bailiff and the other, his deputy, being the auctioneer and the purchaser made a bid on the representation of the latter in the presence and hearing of the former that he was selling the land at the instance of the mortgagees, though a proclamation was read in English (which the purchaser did not understand) to the effect that only the interest of the judgment debtor was being sold, it was held by the Privy Council that as the interest of the judgment debtor was a mere equity to redeem property mortgaged far beyond its value, the Court could not enforce a bargain so illusory against a purchaser misled by its agents. And it was also held that the chief clerk was right in referring the matter to the Court for direction, and also in not proceeding under sect 306 of the last Code (now represented by r 84 of this Order) (1)

66 (1) Where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court

(2) Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree holder and the judgment debtor and shall state the time and place of sale, and specify as fully and accurately as possible—

(a) the property to be sold,

(b) the revenue assessed upon the estate or part of the estate, where the property to be sold is an interest in an estate or in part of an estate paying revenue to the Government,

(c) any incumbrance to which the property is liable,

(d) the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered, and

(e) every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property

(3) Every application for an order for sale under this rule shall be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner herebefore prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation

(4) For the purpose of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the Court may summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and may examine him in respect to any such matters and require him to produce any document in his possession or power relating thereto

Proclamation—It has been held that the object of issuing a proclamation is to give notice to intending purchasers of what is sold and not to the judgment debtor (2). The Court should be careful to specify in the proclamation the details given in this rule, for an omission causing substantial injury may form ground for setting aside the sale under r. 90, post (1) Under r. 69 the Court may adjourn the sale. It is necessary in such case to mention the date and hour of sale (2) If this is done for a longer period than seven days a fresh proclamation (3) must issue unless the judgment-debtor waives it (4) Where there is a series of short postponements less than seven days, which taken together in the aggregate amount to more than seven days, a fresh proclamation is necessary (5) Another date should be fixed Where a sale did not take place on the day fixed in the original notice, it was held that an indefinite postponement could not be regarded as an adjournment from day to day (6) Proceedings mentioned in this rule have been held to be of an administrative and not judicial character. They are not therefore orders within sect 17 (formerly 211) or appealable But if a sale does take place objection may be taken on any of the grounds mentioned in r. 90 (formerly sect 311), some of which may relate to the contents of the proclamation (7) It has been said that the sales contemplated by the rule and sales in execution of decrees, and the procedure and the rules laid down regarding them are framed on the assumption that the property to be sold has been already attached (1) It has been held therefore that property not attached and not proclaimed cannot be sold, (2) and where plaintiff attached before judgment and the suit was dismissed but decreed in appeal, it was held that a sale without further attachment was void (3) It has, however, also been held that though the absence of attachment is an irregularity, a sale is not to be considered as a nullity merely by reason of the absence of any attachment (4) Publication of a sale proclamation upon the decree holder's property at a distance of some half-mile from the judgment debtor's property is a material irregularity in the publication of the sale (5) The former section was held to have no application to a case in which property was being sold under a mortgage-decree in which a claimant objected that the property had previously been sold to him at a private sale (6) An order of sale after attachment on a money-decree may create a valid charge on the property (7)

"After notice"—The proclamation was in the Mofussil usually prepared without notice to the judgment debtor and behind his back, and he was not therefore likely to receive any intimation of its contents until it was fixed up in the Court house or Collectorate or was published upon the property The faultiness of this practice was held therefore to excuse objection by the judgment debtor (8) The Code has therefore been altered to give effect to a practice followed in Calcutta with great advantage of drawing up the proclamation after notice to the parties, who are thus afforded an opportunity of settling the contents correctly, and in a great measure are restrained from subsequently raising obstructive and dilatory objections If objections are not taken they may be deemed to have been waived (9) The original Bill proceeding on the ground that the object of those proceedings was to give notice to intending purchasers rather rejections of a claim preferred, or an objection under rule 58, opened up the prospect of litigation, the intending purchaser should have notice of the matter

The Select Committee, however, cancelled the proposed clause which provided for information likely to be useful to the public in bidding, and as above stated proposed to require the proclamation to be settled after notice to the parties.

"Time and place of sale."—Property cannot be sold before the expiry of the period mentioned in r 68. The proclamation should fix a day for the sale which is not a holiday, or a day on which the Courts are closed by order of the High Court (1). Both the proclamation of the time and place of sale and the holding of such sale at such time and place are conditions precedent to the sale being a sale under the Code (2). It was held under the last Code that it was intended that a sale of moveable property should ordinarily be held in some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reason must be shown for directing otherwise (3).

"The property to be sold."—The judgment debtor has the right to have the property to be sold described with reasonable accuracy (4). As this is to be expressly stated, where the proclamation set out particulars of the property, but subsequent to such proclamation a portion of the property was released to a third party, it was held that a fresh proclamation must be made (5). If a Court directs the sale of property not warranted by the decree, the person aggrieved may follow the property in a regular suit (6). In a recent case where decree-holders had applied for execution by attachment and sale of a certain encumbered share of a mahal, which was fully described in the Schedule, and the share was attached and sold, but the Subordinate Judge granted a certificate stating that a different and unencumbered share had been purchased, it was held by the Privy Council that there was no power to sell the latter share, since this was not a case of a mere misdescription but of a mistake as to identity (7). The sale of a decree partly executed only enables the purchaser to execute what remains to be carried out (8). In the under-mentioned case (9) it was held that the sale of a decree for possession of land did not carry the mesne profits to the debtor. An application to set aside a sheriff's sale or for compensation on the ground of deficiency in the area of land sold was refused (10).

this objection should be taken in the first Court when seeking to set aside a sale (1) The words "part of an estate" mean an aliquot part of an estate (2)

"Any incumbrance."—In the case of a mortgage the amount of the mortgage-debt unpaid should be stated (3) An absence of the specification of the incumbrance may amount to a material irregularity avoiding the sale (4) If a decree-holder knowing of the existence of an incumbrance does not notify it, the land passes free from it (5) Seemle, a third person purchasing mortgaged property bona fide at a sale in execution of a money decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor obtains a good title free from the mortgage lien unless the sale is made subject to it (6) Where the holder of two decrees attached property in execution of one of them, he was held to have a right to state in the notification of sale that he likewise claimed the same property in satisfaction of his second decree (7) It was held that claims admitted by the parties or established by decree of Court should be entered in the proclamation as charges upon the property, though they came to the knowledge of the Court in an inquiry under this rule only, and have not been made the subject of an order under sect 282 of the former Code It was also held that mortgages noted in the proclamation as claims upon the property sold, should not necessarily be entered in the certificate of sale, or be computed as part of the purchase money unless they had been admitted by the parties or established by decree, or unless they had been declared under that section to be charges on the property, and the Court has seen fit to sell it subject to them, but they should be so entered and computed if they have thus been admitted or established, or if they had been declared under that section and the sale was held subject to them (8)

"Every other thing."—It has been held that the proclamation should specify as fairly and accurately as possible the value of the property, inasmuch as it was a material fact for the purchaser to know in judging of the nature and value of the property (9) It was proposed to amend the rule to the effect that no valuation was to be entered in the proclamation But this proposal has not been adopted. If the property of which the sale is sought is a debt, and the Court receives notice from the alleged debtor that no debt exists, the Court should satisfy itself as to the existence or otherwise of the debt, and if it comes to the conclusion that no debt exists should abstain from proceeding to sale (1). Should the Court have reason to believe that the property the sale of which was asked for was held by occupancy tenure, it is its duty to notify that fact in the proclamation as a warning to prospective bidders (2).

"Every application," etc., sub rule (3).—The Code has thus adopted a practice stated to have obtained in the Madras presidency, (3) under which the decree holder is required to assist the Court by ascertaining and communicating the particulars to be specified in the proclamation of sale.

"For the purpose of ascertaining," sub-rule (4).—An objection raised in the course of an inquiry under this rule cannot be treated as a claim under r 58 (formerly 278) the latter rule having reference to claims to and objections to attachment (4). Where a person came forward in response to a notice issued under this rule, and claimed a mortgage lien over the property, which was allowed and entered in the proclamation of sale, and the property was sold, it was held that the plaintiff (whose proper remedy was indicated) could not sue to have the sale set aside and a re-sale ordered of the property freed from the alleged incumbrance (5). The enquiry under this rule should be of the most summary character (6). An order by an executing Court under this rule, determining the valuation of immoveable properties attached and sought to be sold in execution of a decree is not appealable as a decree (7).

67. (1) Every proclamation shall be made and published as nearly as may be, in the manner prescribed by rule 54, sub-rule (2).

Mode of making proclamation.

(2) Where the Court so directs, such proclamation shall also be published in the local official Gazette, or in a local newspaper, or in both, and the costs of such publication shall be deemed to be costs of the sale.

(3) Where property is divided into lots for the purpose of being sold separately, it shall not be necessary to make a separate proclamation for each lot, unless proper notice of the sale cannot, in the opinion of the Court, otherwise be given.

(3) In Sm Giribala Debia v Mina Kumari, 5 C W N 497 (1900), it was pointed out that there was no express provision requiring the decree holder to notify incumbrances, though under the High Court rules he had to notify the existence of arrears. In Ram Chandra v Jauram, 22 B 686, 691 (1897), it was held that the applicant was bound to disclose his own liens.

"Shall be made"—See notes to last rule and to r 5, and as to fixing in Court House note (1) The words "as nearly as may be" have been inserted because the provision applies generally to sales of both kinds of property, and in the case of moveables the provisions of r 5 relating to immoveables cannot be applied in their entirety. An omission to carry out the provision of this rule is an irregularity, but does not render a sale void (2)

Advertisement—It is right that the Court should permit any advertisement reasonably required which might have the effect of giving notice to all possible purchasers (3) The power of advertisement is now still further extended, and an option is given not to publish in the Gazette, which is not commonly read by the classes most affected. The costs are as under the last Code costs in the sale (4) A want of correspondence between the advertisement and the schedule of the proclamation is an irregularity which might need to be set right by the Court if the sale was otherwise regular (5)

"Lots."—The substance of the decision (6) on the subject of the division of a joint area into lots has been incorporated. It had been previously held, prior to the amendment of the last Code by sect 29 of Act VII of 1888, that where several separate properties are attached there must be a separate proclamation (7)

68. Save in the case of property of the kind described in the proviso to rule 43, no sale hereunder shall, without the consent in writing of the judgment-debtor, take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the case of immoveable property, and of at least fifteen days in the case of moveable property, calculated from the date on which the copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the court-house of the Judge ordering the sale

"Consent"—An application made on the day of sale by the judgment debtor that a part only of the property should be sold, instead of the entirety, is not a consent under this rule (8)

Sale in contravention of rule—There has been a difference of opinion on the question whether contravention of the provisions of the section (230) which this rule replaces, is an illegality vitiating the sale, (9) or as is the case

Provided that, where the sale is made in, or within the precincts of, the court-house, no such adjournment shall be made without the leave of the Court.

(2) Where a sale is adjourned under sub-rule (1) for a longer period than seven days, a fresh proclamation under rule 67 shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it.

(3) Every sale shall be stopped if, before the lot is knocked down, the debt and costs (including the costs of the sale) are tendered to the officer conducting the sale, or proof is given to his satisfaction that the amount of such debt and costs has been paid into the Court which ordered the sale.

"The Court."—That is the Court executing the decree A Judge cannot order a Subordinate Judge to postpone a sale in a case pending before the Court of the latter officer (2)

Adjournment.—This is a matter of discretion Whether it should be granted must be determined upon the particular facts, and precedents (3) are not profitable The Court must consider not only the interests of the judgment-debtor, but also the possibility of prejudice to the decree holder When, however, a sale is adjourned, the provisions of the rule should be followed with exactitude (4) See notes to r 66, ante, "Proclamation" It is the practice to place all properties intended for sale on a list, and to proceed with the sales from day to day, commencing on an appointed day As each property is taken up in its turn, an adjournment of the sale of a particular property which is the consequence of such procedure is not an adjournment within the meaning of this rule (1)

"Any sale"—The rule applies to mortgage sales (2)

"Specified day and hour"—See notes to r 66, "Proclamation" Assuming that a fresh proclamation is necessary, an omission to issue it is only an irregularity, and if it involved no loss to the judgment debtor, it cannot be set aside. Thus where a sale was postponed and a fresh proclamation was issued directing it to be held on a certain date, but owing to the absence of the presiding officer on that date it took place some days later, the Privy Council held that it was not in contravention of sects 289 and 291 of the last Code (now represented by rules 66 and 69 of this Order) and that even if there had been any irregularity in it it could not be set aside in the absence of substantial injury (3). In such case the judgment debtor should object to the confirmation of sale and not seek to impeach it by suit (4)

"Knocked down"—A bid may be withdrawn until the lot is knocked down (5)

Payment—An assignee after decree in a mortgage suit is entitled to deposit and where this was refused and the judgment creditor bought himself, the sale was set aside (6). A payment made to prevent a sale is not a voluntary payment whether made by the debtor or a third party claiming the property (7)

defaulting purchaser under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money

"Purchaser's default"—Sect 251 of Act VIII of 1859, so far as it relates to the subject matter of the present rule, ran "If the proceeds of the sale which is eventually consummated be less than the price bid by such defaulting purchaser the difference shall be leviable from him under the rules for enforcing the payment of money in satisfaction of a decree of Court" The present wording was adopted by sect 293 of Act X of 1877, save as indicated in italics Of the alterations so indicated the only important ones are the addition of the words "or to the Collector or subordinate of the Collector, as the case may be, and "or other person"" which were made by the present Code

The rule applies to re sales in consequence of default in payment of deposit under O XXI r 84, or in payment of purchase money under O XXI r 85 and O XXI r 86, (1) and under O XXI r 77, (2) and whether the property be moveable or immoveable (3) even when the property is re sold forthwith, owing to the judgment creditor repudiating the bid of his agent, (4) also where the purchaser refuses to pay the purchase money owing to the same property being sold the next day in execution of a decree of another party who had a previous lien on the property, (5) but the re sale must be of the same property as first sold and under the same description and any substantial difference in matters required by O XXI r 66, disentitles the decree holder to recover any deficiency of price (6) It does not apply to a case where the purchaser makes default and a re-sale is ordered but does not take place owing to the property being sold in execution of another decree at the instance of another judgment creditor at a lower price (7)

"Any deficiency of price"—Does not include interest on the price (8)

"Shall be certified"—The absence of a certificate will not prevent the decree holder or the judgment debtor from recovering the deficiency from the defaulter (9)

"At the instance of either the decree holder or the judgment debtor"—The judgment debtor is not bound to proceed under this rule and it does not debar him from having the re sale set aside on the ground of irregularity, (10) nor does it debar the judgment creditor from proceeding upon his decree against any other property of the judgment debtor than that originally sold (1) He has not to wait till the deficiency is realized, (2) nor can the amount bid at the first sale be deducted from the decretal claim; (3) but the Calcutta High Court held that the judgment-debtor was entitled to credit for the full amount bid at the first sale (4)

"Defaulting purchaser."—The principal and not the agent bidding at the sale is liable, and recourse should be had against the principal, and on his proving his repudiation, the agent can be proceeded against on breach of contract or for a false representation (5)

Suit.—A suit will lie to set aside an order under this rule (6)

Appeal.—An appeal, it was held, lay from an order rejecting a petition to recover from a defaulter who was the judgment-creditor, (7) and even where the defaulter was not a party to the suit (8) The Allahabad High Court, however, held that no appeal lay, (9) while the Calcutta High Court held that both an appeal and a second appeal lay from an order directing a defaulter to make good the deficiency (10)

72. (1) No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property.

Decree-holder not to bid for or buy property without permission.

(2) Where a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase-money and the amount due on the decree may, subject to the provisions of section 73, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

Where decree-holder purchases, amount of decree may be taken as payment.

(3) Where a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person whose interests are affected by the sale, by order set aside the sale; and the costs of such application and order, and any deficiency of price which may happen on the re-sale and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder.

Bidding by decree holder This rule is similar to sect. 294 of Act X of 1877 save that the last clause has been added by Act XIV of 1882, and the words in italics by the present Code. Of these, the words "subject to the provisions of section 73" have been substituted for "if he so desires," and the words "whose interests are affected by" for "interested in."

"Holder of a decree"—An assignee of a decree under an oral agreement, the consideration of which was not paid till after the sale, is not a decree holder and it is unnecessary for him to obtain permission to bid (1).

"Where a decree holder purchases."—He is bound to exercise the most scrupulous fairness, if he or his agent dissuades others from purchasing, or openly disparages the property (2) it is sufficient ground to set aside the sale (3). The Privy Council have held that that is too sweeping in its terms and leave to bid puts him in the same position as any other purchaser (4). It would be different if the disparaging remarks were made by a purchaser who was not the decree holder (5). If the decree be reversed the sales under it to decree holders fall through but not the sales to bona fide purchasers who were not parties (6). A decree holder purchasing with leave to bid and set off must pay the deposit required by sect. 206 (O XXI r 84) in cash but the sale ought not to be set aside for default where all parties (including the Government as represented by the officer conducting the sale) waive their right to the deposit in cash (7).

"With such permission"—The decree holder is absolutely bound to obtain permission before he can purchase (8). Leave to bid puts the decree holder in the same position as any other purchaser (9).

"Be set off" This was not allowed where the provisions of sect. 295 of the former Code applied (10) the set off being intended to prevent trouble and inconvenience and not to alter the substantial nature of the transaction, (11) and the set off can only be accepted for so much of the judgment debt as the assets applicable to its discharge may suffice to satisfy (12). The purchaser can only be compelled to refund the rateable amount due to the other attaching creditor, either by summary process in execution or by suit, or he may be given the option of electing a re sale (13). The terms of the present rule make the set off subject to the provisions of sect. 73. A mortgagee decree holder, with permission, purchasing the mortgaged property in execution of a decree, and setting off the price, which was insufficient to satisfy his decree, was not bound in subsequent execution proceedings to give credit for the market value of the mortgaged property, but only for the actual purchase price, (1) but where the property sold was the equity of redemption, and after purchase the mortgagee decree holder applied for execution of the balance of his decree against the assignee of the mortgagor, he had to give credit for the price set off, plus the mortgage debt, that being what an independent person would have had to pay if he had purchased (2) It would be otherwise if he had sold the mortgaged property (3) The mortgagee decree holder purchasing does not stand in a fiduciary position towards his mortgagor, (3) and is only obliged to give credit for the amount of his bid (4) In the Mofussil the purchaser may give a receipt for the amount due under his decree, instead of paying cash into Court (5)

"By himself or through another person"—A purchase by the undivided son of a decree holder is presumably with joint funds and is the purchase of the decree holder (6)

"The Court may"—It is discretionary with the Court to set aside a sale, and it will not do so if no substantial injury has resulted (7)

"On the application of the judgment debtor."—This cannot be done by suit as the dispute falls within sect 47, (8) even where the sale was procured by fraud, and purchased by a person who was not a party, a suit will not lie, at all events as against the judgment-creditor, (9) likewise where the sale was brought about secretly and the purchasers were benamedars of the decree holders, (10) nor will a suit for possession lie after the sale has been set aside (11)

"By order set aside the sale"—A purchase by a decree holder, without permission, is not ipso facto void, it is a good sale until set aside, (12) but where he applied for permission and it has been refused and yet he purchased benami, the sale was set aside (13) to a decree holder to bid, but it did against an order confirming or setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale (1). No second appeal lies from an order on appeal under this rule, notwithstanding that sect. 47 bars a separate suit in such a case (2).

73 No officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold.

Bidding by officers.—This rule corresponds with sect. 292 of Act X of 1877, save that the words 'or other person' have been added by the present Code which also substituted 'the property' for 'any property sold at such sale'.

'No officer'—The pleader of a party is not an officer, (3) but where such a pleader acted improperly, a sale to him was set aside (4). The Calcutta High Court have however held it was improper for a pleader acting in execution proceedings to make himself in any way interested in the purchase, (5) and in the North West pleaders are directed by circular orders not to purchase property sold in execution of decrees in which they are concerned and it was inexpedient that they should by purchase become the persons entitled to execute decrees in such suits (6). The words added give the rule a much wider scope. No Judge, legal practitioner, or officer connected with any Court is allowed to deal in actionable claims by sect. 136 of the Transfer of Property Act (7).

"Irregularity"—The omission in the sale proclamation of the amount of the decree is not an irregularity, (1) nor the omission of the service of the notification of sale on the judgment debtor or in his village (2) The fact that the amount really due is overstated will not invalidate a sale in execution, (3) but if the sale proclamation warrants a title the injured party may apply to set the sale aside, (4) it not being a mere irregularity, (5) and the owner can follow the property in the hands of the purchaser (5)

"Any person"—If a person sues to recover possession of what was taken in excess of the interest of a judgment debtor, without seeking to interfere with the sale in execution of the interest of the judgment debtor, he need not sue within the period of limitation prescribed by law for a suit to set aside a sale (6)

"At the hand of any other person"—A decree holder is liable to be sued by the rightful owner for the value of property not belonging to the judgment debtor sold in execution (7) The latter part of this rule codifies the decision in Mohanund Haldar v Akial (8)

the debtor from making payment thereof to any person except the purchaser, or prohibiting the person in whose name the share may be standing from making any transfer of the share to any person except the purchaser, or receiving payment of any dividend or interest thereon, and the manager, secretary or other proper officer of the corporation from permitting any such transfer or making any such payment to any person except the purchaser.

Notice—Sub rule (2) has been slightly remodelled. For form of notice under this section, see Form No 116, Schedule IV, of former Code.

Delivery of debts and shares, sub rule (3)—In the under mentioned case (1) the Court said, "No question has been raised as to whether the order required by sect 301 of the Code was served. The presumption, therefore, is that this order was served, and it may be a question whether, if the order after sale required by sect 301 were served, the service of the prohibitory order, which is the form of attachment before sale required by the Code, is material or is wholly immaterial." See Schedule IV, Forms 117, 118 of last Code. In this as in other parts of the Code the reference to public companies in connection with shares has been omitted, it being presumably considered that the word "corporation" sufficiently covers the case.

80. (1) Where the execution of a document or the endorsement of the party in whose name a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation is standing is required to transfer such negotiable instrument or share, the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf may execute such document or make such endorsement as may be necessary, and such execution or endorsement shall have the same effect as an execution or endorsement by the party

(2) Such execution or endorsement may be in the following form, namely—

A. B. by C. D., Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), in a suit by E. F. against A. B.

(3) Until the transfer of such negotiable instrument or share, the Court may, by order, appoint some person to receive any interest or dividend due thereon and to sign a receipt for the same; and any receipt so signed shall be as valid and effectual for all purposes as if the same had been signed by the party himself.

Transfer of negotiable instruments and shares—This rule corresponds with sect 267 of the Code of 1859 and (with slight alterations) 302 of the last

(2) Such execution or endorsement may be in the following form, namely —

A. B. by C. D, Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), in a suit by E. F. against A. B.

(3) Until the transfer of such negotiable instrument or share, the Court may, by order, appoint some person to receive any interest or dividend due thereon and to sign a receipt for the same; and any receipt so signed shall be as valid and effectual for all purposes as if the same had been signed by the party himself.

Transfer of negotiable instruments and shares.—This rule corresponds with sect 267 of the Code of 1859 and (with slight alterations) 302 of the last.

As to reference to corporation, see notes to last rule. A held shares in a company which were duly seized and sold in execution of a decree against him to B. The Judge, acting under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, executed deeds of transfer to the purchaser, and the company was ordered to register the transfer in their books, but refused to comply with the order. The purchaser was unable to obtain from A the certificates of the shares. Held that, although the company's deed of settlement (under which the Act of Parliament declared that the company should be regulated) gave to the Board of Directors power of approval or disapproval of intending shareholders, they had no option as to registering a shareholder who purchased a share in execution, and that they were bound to grant him, under the circumstances, new share certificates (1).

81. In the case of any moveable property not herein before provided for, the Court may make an order vesting such property in the purchaser or as he may direct, and such property shall vest accordingly.

Sale of immoveable property

82. Sales of immoveable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes.

"Sales of immoveable property"—This rule is similar to sect 304 of Act X of 1877. A decree charging land is an interest in immoveable property (2). Huts are immoveable property (3). A decree declaring a decree holder's lien on property without distinctly declaring his right to sell the same may be executed against that property either by attachment and sale or by attachment and management (4). A debt secured by a mortgage lien upon immoveable property, more especially if the mortgagee is not in possession, is not immoveable property (5). A Munsif cannot sell property lying outside his jurisdiction (6).

"Court of Small Causes"—If such a Court sells immoveable property the purchaser acquires no title (7). The rights and interests under a mortgage of immoveable property is not saleable by a Court of Small Causes (8).

erty has been made, if the judgment-debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by the mortgage or lease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or of any other immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, the Court may, on his application, postpone the sale of the property comprised in the order for sale on such terms and for such period as it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount.

(2) In such case the Court shall grant a certificate to the judgment-debtor authorizing him within a period to be mentioned therein, and notwithstanding anything contained in section 64, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale :

Provided that all monies payable under such mortgage, lease or sale shall be paid, not to the judgment-debtor, but, save in so far as a decree-holder is entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72, into Court :

Provided also that no mortgage, lease or sale under this rule shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court.

(3) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage of, or charge on, such property.

Postponement of sale.—The first clause of this rule corresponds with part of sect 243 of Act VIII of 1859. The rest, save the last proviso in the second clause, and the portions in italics, was added by sect 305 of Act X of 1877. That Act also appended a clause : "When such certificate has been granted and so long as it remains in force the provisions of section 248 shall not apply" This was repealed by Act XIV of 1882, which added the last proviso in the second clause, and also added the words, "and notwithstanding anything contained in sect 276 [sect 64]" to the second clause. The words in italics have been added by the present Code. The Bombay High Court held that the corresponding section to this rule applied to a mortgage decree, declaring that certain properties be sold in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, (1) but the Calcutta High Court held otherwise; (2) and by notification such section was made applicable to proceedings after decree in mortgage suits, but now the third clause of the rule distinctly excludes such proceedings, so far as Bengal and Assam were concerned (3). The rule does not apply to suits for rent in Bengal (4).

(4) Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII, of 1885, s. 148 (a)

"Sale of immoveable property."—This was held to include all sales of immoveable property, the decision being given in reference to a decree on mortgage, (1) but property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge is now excluded by the third clause of the present rule

"The amount of the decree"—That is, the whole amount due on the decree. No mortgage will be sanctioned, or certificate granted, or the mortgage confirmed, unless the decree can be fully paid off (2)

"The Court may postpone the sale"—This is an enabling rule, and qualifies the prohibitions contained in sect 64. On compliance with the conditions of this rule a private alienation, notwithstanding sect 64, becomes absolute, even against all claims enforceable under the attachment (3). Postponement is discretionary with the Court (4). It should exercise its discretion, and if it finds that a fair case has been made out, it should postpone the sale, (5) but the judgment debtor must most distinctly show that the money due can be well raised in some way other than by immediate sale, and that the creditor will not be put to loss, (6) and that the debt will be paid off in a reasonable time, (7) twenty years, (7) two or three years, (8) and even one year are unreasonable, (9) but six months has been considered reasonable (7). Where, however, the property has been put up to auction in execution and bids have been made, the Court cannot postpone the sale merely on the representation of a judgment debtor that he can obtain a higher price by private transfer, there being no reasonable ground to believe that the judgment debt would be realized thereby (10).

"Authorizing him"—The authority is only to the judgment debtor to whom it is granted, and the sale in pursuance thereof does not affect the share of another judgment debtor (11). Where the defendant is the guardian of a minor under the Guardian and Wards Act of 1890, the authority under this rule will not give him power to mortgage unless he also gets the permission of the Court which appointed him guardian (12). The Court cannot itself give a lease or mortgage. It can only grant the debtor time to do so himself (13). The rule is enabling, and qualifies the provision contained in sect 64. On compliance with

"Until it has been confirmed."—When in pursuance of a certificate to sell granted by two Courts the attached property was sold, and the sale confirmed by the superior of the two Courts, confirmation by the other Court was unnecessary (2)

Appeal.—See sect. 17.

84. (1) On every sale of immoveable property the person [s.
Deposit by purchaser declared to be the purchaser shall pay imand re sale on default mediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent. on the amount of his purchase-money to the officer or other person conducting the sale, and, in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be re-sold.

(2) Where the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money under rule 72, the Court may dispense with the requirements of this rule.

"Deposit."—The officer conducting the sale cannot insist upon a deposit being made before acceptance of a bidding, but if it appears that persons without means have been put forward to make sham biddings, and fraudulently frustrate the sale, he would be justified in inquiring into the trustworthiness of the bidder before accepting his bid (3) A decree-holder of the party to whom the lot is knocked down is equally bound to make the prescribed deposit as any other auction-purchaser (4) But where all parties interested waived their right to a deposit, it was held the sale should not be set aside (5) A relaxation of the rule is now made in the case mentioned in the second sub rule If there is any dispute as to whether the deposit was offered or not it should be decided by the Judge before commencing a second sale (6) There has been a conflict of opinion whether, if the deposit is not made as required, the sale is no sale at all, (7) or whether this circumstance is an irregularity only (8) The first opinion is no longer law (9) But it has been recently held that if the balance of purchase-money is not paid, there is no sale under the Code (1) The mere making of the last bid does not conclude the sale for the conclusion of a sale it is necessary for the sale officer to accept the final bid and to make a declaration who is the purchaser and to order him to pay him the deposit under this rule (2)

"Default"—The sale is to be held "forthwith," so a fresh proclamation or statement of the hour of sale is not necessary (3) The sale is not to be adjourned The putting up of the property again, and soliciting fresh bids is a continuation of the original sale a part and parcel of the proceedings which had their origin in the first putting up of the property, and which do not come to an end until the property has been knocked down to a purchaser, and that purchaser has made the statutory deposit (4) An officer conducting a second sale is not bound to commence from the next highest bid below that made by the defaulter He may do so if the next highest bidder is willing to abide by his bid otherwise he should commence the sale de novo (5)

Loss on re sale—Under r 71 a defaulting purchaser is answerable for loss by re sale It has been held that the corresponding section in the last Code applied to re sales here dealt with and that the first purchaser could be compelled to pay the difference between the first and the second sales (6)

"Into Court"—These words have been inserted to render it clear that the purchaser is bound to see that the money reaches the Court in time. The post office is not the agent of the Court (1)

Date of payment.—Sect 307 of the last Code, which the rule replaces, ran, "before the Court closes on the fifteenth day after the sale of the property exclusive of such day, (2) or if the fifteenth day be a Sunday or other holiday, then on the first office day after the fifteenth day" Instead of the words "after" and "exclusive of such day," the present rule uses the word "from," which will have the same effect. The provisions relative to the occurrence of a Sunday have been omitted because the matter is sufficiently covered by sect 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897. In these two respects, therefore, the former section and the present rule are the same. Under the last Code, however, it was held that days (as during the vacation) when the Court was closed but the office was open were not holidays within the meaning of the former section (3). The practice of the Original Side of the High Court is that payment of interest follows as a matter of course, when the purchaser of property at a Registrar's sale is out of time in paying into Court the balance of his purchase money (4).

86. In default of payment within the period mentioned in the last preceding rule, the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold.

Default—This rule corresponds with a portion of sect 254 of Act VIII of 1859 and with sect 308 of Acts X of 1877 and XIV of 1882, save that the words in italics have been substituted for the word "shall" appearing in the earlier Codes. The former section has been applied to proceedings in execution under a mortgage decree in Bengal and Assam (5).

"In default of payment."—Under the rules of the Madras High Court payment into the Government Treasury is sufficient payment, (6) likewise, it is a sufficient compliance with the decree, if the judgment-debtor bring the money into Court within the specified time and diligently take the necessary steps required by departmental rules for the actual payment into the Treasury (7).

"Be forfeited to Government"—This is imposed in order to prevent waste of the Court's time in conducting re sales. The fact that the decree holder and the judgment debtor do not ask for a re sale was held to be no reason why Government should forego the forfeiture, (1) but the wording of the Code was then imperative, "shall be forfeited" The modification introduced by the present Code makes it discretionary with the Court to direct the forfeiture or not, and has been inserted to prevent hardship caused in such cases as the last mentioned (2)

Appeal.—An appeal under the last Code lay from an order under the corresponding section where the defaulting purchaser attached the decree in execution of which the property was sold to him, and a petition for revision was held not to be maintainable (3) According to this decision an appeal lies under sect 47, ante

Notification on re-sale.

"Fresh proclamation"—This rule is sect 309 of the last Code. A fresh notification is not prescribed in the case of every re sale, but only when the re sale is in default of payment of the purchase money within the time allowed for such payment (4) The rule does not apply to a postponed sale (5) or to a case in which the property is put up again and sold forthwith under r 84, ante (6)

01 88. Where the property sold is a share of undivided immoveable property and two or more persons, Bid of co-sharer to have preference of whom one is a co sharer, respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bid shall be deemed to be the bid of the co sharer

Bidding by co sharer—This rule modifies the terms of sect 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, which provided that where "a share of a puttedarce estate paying revenue to government" was sold, "if the lot shall have been knocked down to a stranger, any co sharer other than the judgment debtor, or any other member of the co parcellary, may claim to take the share sold at the sum at which the lot was knocked down. Provided that the claim be made on the day of sale and that the claimant fulfil all the conditions of the sale" The rule was altered to its present form by sect 310 of Act X of 1877, save that this rule omits the words "in execution of a decree" after the words "property sold" and substitutes the words "bid the same sum for" such property or for any lot, the bid shall be deemed to be the bid ' for " advance the same sum at any bidding at such sale, such bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding " as it appeared in the Code of 1877

" Is a share of undivided immoveable property "—This does not include the interest of a mortgagee in such a share, and this rule does not apply to the sale of such interest (1) Sect 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 was held not to apply to land sold in execution of a decree of a Revenue Court (2)

" Co sharer "—An officer conducting a sale of land which was a share of a putteedaree estate had to take notice of a claim made by a person under sect 14 of Act XXIII of 1861 and to receive the purchase money as a fulfilment of the conditions of sale, subject to any question which might be raised by any party interested as to the claimant's title (3) If his right were clear the sale might be confirmed in his favour, if doubtful, the sale might be confirmed in favour of the other bidder, leaving the co sharer to his remedy by suit, (3) he ought not to have been substituted for the actual purchaser His position was that he could advance his claim to pre-emption, which would be adjudicated on later (4) Under that Act a co sharer having preferred his claim to pre-emption, the sale could not be held as void merely by the failure of the person to whom the property was knocked down to make the deposit (5) The right of pre-emption can only be claimed by those who are co sharers or members of the coparcenary at the time the auction sale takes place (6) A title which is still defeasible at the date of the sale is not sufficient to support a claim under this rule (7) A decree holder, who under Mahomedan law would be entitled to pre-emption, is not entitled to that right on sale in execution of his decree (8) Where the judgment debtor's rights in a putteedaree estate were sold and purchased by his son in the name of his father in law, who was not a co sharer and who after the sale waived his rights in favour of the judgment debtor, held that a co sharer who had fulfilled requirements was entitled to pre-emption (9) A suit by a person claiming pre-emption for possession is premature and unmaintainable He should sue to set aside the order confirming the sale in favour of the auction purchaser and to have himself declared entitled to pre-emption and to be substituted for the auction purchaser (10) Where a revenue sale has been caused by the default of a co-sharer and the property is purchased at that sale by him, there may be such relations between him and his co sharer as would justify the Court in treating such sale as for the benefit of both (11)

"Bid the same sum"—Even when the section ran "advance the same sum", it was held that this contemplated a distinct bid by the co sharer in the ordinary manner. It was not sufficient if he asserted his right of pre-emption and offered a sum equal to that bid by the purchaser (1)

Appeal—No appeal lies under O XLIII r 1. It was held that the auction bidder, not being a party, could not appeal from an order confirming the sale in favour of a co sharer, (2) and that a co sharer aggrieved under the former section, not being a person mentioned in sect 311, now O XXI r 90, could not appeal objecting to the sale being confirmed in favour of the auction purchaser and ask its confirmation in his own favour, and an application for revision was also refused (3)

89 (1) Where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court,—

(a) for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per cent of the purchase-money, and

(b) for payment to the decree holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree holder

(2) Where a person applies under rule 90 to set aside the sale of his immovable property, he shall not, unless he withdraws his application, be entitled to make or prosecute an application under this rule

(3) Nothing in this rule shall relieve the judgment debtor from any liability he may be under in respect of costs and interest not covered by the proclamation of sale

Object of rule—This rule affords a special indulgence to the judgment debtor. It gives him yet one more chance of saving his property (4). It also confers a right upon certain persons other than the judgment debtor. See post, note, "Who may apply". A Court has no power to set aside a sale under this rule unless the applicant has strictly complied with its provisions (5). It was the subject of conflict under the last Code whether the former section did, (1) or did not, (2) apply to sales of mortgaged property under the Transfer of Property Act. The section was held to apply to sales of holdings in execution of decrees for arrears of rent, (3) but not to sales under the Public Demands Recovery Act (I B C of 1895) (4). The former section was held to apply even if the execution proceedings be referred to the Collector, who had no power to set aside a sale under the provisions of the Code. It was also held that there was nothing which precluded the Court from setting aside the sale merely because it had been confirmed (5). When money has been deposited under this rule, it is not liable to rateable distribution under sect 73 (6).

Who may apply.—Under the last Code any person might have applied, “whose immovable property has been sold under this Chapter.” A benamdar of a person whose immovable property was sold could apply (7). These words gave rise to a conflict of decision. It could hardly be that these words referred to the judgment debtor alone or the Legislature would have said so. The question then arose to whom else the section did apply. It was not even every judgment-debtor who could apply, but only those whose property had been sold under the Code (8). It was held that a simple mortgagee of a tenure or holding sold for arrears of rent, such sale being with right to purchaser to avoid incumbrances, could apply, (9) but not a second mortgagee not a party to the suit whose interest had not passed under the sale (10). The purchaser of a share of an occupancy holding transferable by custom could apply, (11) as also a judgment debtor who has effected a private sale of his property during the pendency of the attachment-proceedings; (1) or a donee under a gift made while the property was under the attachment, or a durmohararidar where the moharari tenure was sold for arrears of rent, (2) a purchaser subsequent to attachment and prior to sale (3) In short, any one whose interest is bound by a sale might apply though he be no party to the suit or to the decree under which the sale took place (4) An application by a person entitled, together with a person not entitled, was received, and payment made jointly by those persons was held to be a sufficient payment (5) Where under sect 310A of the former Code a reversionary heir applied for and obtained leave to make a deposit, it was held that he made it as a person interested in the payment of money within the meaning of sect. 69 of the Indian Contract Act (6)

It was held that the following could not apply.—An under raiyat, (7) but this has since been dissented from, (8) houladar under tenure holder, (9) a purchaser at a private sale from the judgment debtor after the sale in execution, (10) a purchaser prior to sale in execution of decree against his vendor, (11) nor on the same principle a person claiming a share in immoveable property sold in execution of a decree against his co sharers, (12) nor a person who has contracted to purchase land, such contract not creating in itself any interest in or charge upon the property, (13) an attaching creditor, (14) nor an owner or holder of an interest who has parted with his title since the sale or has acquired such title since the sale (15) Even before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act of 1907, this rule did not apply to a tenure or holding attached in execution of a decree for arrears (16)

"owning such property or holding an interest (1) therein" (the latter term not difficult to apply to cases of interest in the property itself as distinguished from personal claim against others relative thereto) are by themselves clear enough. It must never be forgotten that "such property" is property sold in execution of a decree. It is only the judgment debtor's interest in any property or the interest therein of any other person bound by the decree that can be sold in execution of a decree (2). A question therefore arises whether the rule applies only to persons whose interests are affected by the execution sale—the point is not clear as the word "old" may refer not to what can in law, but to what in fact is sold in the sense of purported to be sold. Perhaps the latter is the case for the Select Committee say "words have been added so as to make it clear that a purchaser acquiring a title before the sale in execution can claim the benefit of the sale. In other respects the Committee could not be expected to adhere to the wording of the section."

The date of sale is the date when the property is actually sold (3).

"Depositing"—If the applicant does not make the deposit within the prescribed period the Court has no jurisdiction to set aside the sale (4). If the judgment debtor has been misled by a mistake of the Court the consequences of that mistake ought not to fall upon him, as where the amount was fixed by an order of the Munsif himself in the presence of and with the assent of the pleaders of both parties (5) but an application has been refused where the Court did not declare the amount to be paid and it did not appear that the officer of the Court from whom the applicant was said to have received certain information in regard to the amount to be deposited was the officer who was charged by the Court with the duty of supplying that information (6). When the petitioner, owing to the fact that the presiding officer left the Court earlier than usual, could not make the deposit that day it was held that the deposit was made validly on the following day (7). Where the owner of immoveable property applies he is under liability to deposit a sum equal to 5 per cent on the purchase money for payment to the purchaser even where the land has been purchased by the decree holder (8). An applicant who had fulfilled the requirements of clauses (a) and (b) of this section of the last Code, was held (1) entitled to have the sale set aside even though something more on account of the poundage was recoverable from him, under the head of costs provided for in the last clause of that section. A deposit under this rule must be unconditional (2). Where the applicant prayed that the money should be kept in deposit until the disposal of an appeal, and the money therefore could only be received on the condition expressed in the application, the deposit was held not to be good under sect 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (3). But where money was duly deposited under the former section, and a petition which might have been refused was made later, it was held a good deposit (4). A mere application without an actual deposit is not sufficient compliance with the law (5). Where there was only an offer to pay, but no actual deposit, and the prayer to set aside the sale was joint with another which could not be entertained under the Proviso, it was held that no second appeal lay (6). A mortgagee making payments to save the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a rent decree has an additional lien on the property for the sums so paid by him (7).

The deposit under this rule must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale. But it is not necessary that the notice under r 92 should be made within that time (8).

"For payment to the purchaser."—It has been said that 5 per cent is given partly as a solatium to the purchaser for the loss of his bargain (9). It makes no difference that the purchaser is also the decree holder (10).

"For payment to the decree holder"—These words mean that the decree holder is the person solely entitled to the money paid into Court (11). Sect 295 (now 73) does not apply to a deposit made by a judgment debtor under this rule (12). It was also, therefore, held that it was sufficient to deposit only the amount of the decree for the satisfaction of which the sale was proclaimed and took place (13). In this rule the term decree holder means only the person for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered, and does not include other persons who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under sect 73 (14).

of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder."

It has been held that the word "received" ought to be construed to mean sums of money either actually received by the decree holder, or which he was in a position to credit to his account, and that this was not the case as regards amounts deposited by other purchasers (1). It has been held also that the payment to the decree holder need not be in cash, and that it is enough if he is satisfied with regard to the whole of the amount due to him (2). The Bombay High Court held that what the former section contemplated was an actual receipt by the decree holder, and that nothing else would satisfy its requirements (3).

"Or prosecute"—The addition of the words "or prosecute" was intended to give effect to the undermentioned ruling (4).

Impleading parties—It was proposed, in order to give effect to two rulings of the Allahabad High Court (5) in applications under the following rule, to enact a clause declaring that an applicant under this rule should be bound to implead the purchaser and decree holder as parties to the application which should in their absence be dismissed. It had been also held in the Calcutta High Court that an auction purchaser is entitled to notice before an order is made under this section (6). The proposed clause has not been enacted.

"Unless he withdraws"—This rule prevents a person who has preferred an application under r. 90 from making or prosecuting an application under this rule, until he has withdrawn the other, but the converse is not provided for (7). This rule and r. 90 permit of applications by persons who could not have applied under sects. 310 and 311 of the last Code.

Appeal—Sect. 588 of the Code of 1882 did not provide for an appeal against an order under sect. 310A corresponding with this rule (8). It was, however, held that if and when an order under that section fell under sect. 214 (c) (now 47) it was appealable, (9) and where it did not fall within that section, as in the case of an auction-purchaser stranger, the order was subject to revision (1) It was held that no appeal lay from an order refusing to restore to the file an application dismissed for default of appearance (2) And it has been recently held that an order on an application to set aside a sale under this rule is not a decree within the meaning of sect 2 (3) The true nature of the order must be examined and the character of the parties affected by it must be ascertained before it can be determined whether the order falls within the scope of sect 47 (4)

(1) Where any immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it.

Provided that no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud.

“May apply”—An application under this rule is limited to the grounds set forth in it, and a Court cannot set aside a sale under this rule upon grounds which have not been pleaded by the applicant (5) The former section, according to a Full Bench of the Madras High Court, applied to sales of mortgaged property in execution of mortgage decrees (6) It was held that there was no provision in Act X of 1859 entitling a party to have a sale set aside on the ground of non attachment and non proof of publication of sale proclamation (7) Apparently, the application should be made to the Court executing the decree It was held that where execution of the decree had been transferred to the Collector, application had to be made to him, (1) but that decision had reference to the Rules of the N.W.P. and was not followed in Bombay (2) A beneficial owner is not a necessary party to a proceeding for setting aside an execution sale. It is competent to the Court to set aside the sale finally and conclusively as against the beneficial owner, although his benandar only and not he is made a party to the proceeding (3) The decree holder is a necessary party to an application under this rule, (4) as also the auction purchaser (5) and judgment debtor (6) The issue which arises when a petition is referred under this rule is a judicial proceeding to be heard by the Court.

Where, however, irregularities affecting the sale have by the fraud of the judgment-creditor or other parties to the sale been kept concealed from the judgment-debtor, he is entitled, whether the sale has been confirmed or not, to apply, the time for making the application being computed from the date when the fraud first became known to him. be set aside, while in the cases to which the rule does apply the sale is merely voidable at the instance of the party affected thereby, and, therefore, can be set aside. A plea, therefore, to the jurisdiction of the executing Court is not admissible on an application under this rule (1). The rule is thus confined to irregularities in the particular incidents of execution following a valid decree, which are mentioned in it. Where the whole suit is attacked another suit is maintainable, notwithstanding unsuccessful applications under O IX r 13 (formerly sect 108) and this rule, and omission to appeal against orders on such applications, for the existence of a real suit is assumed (2). A Court, however, may, to use the language of sect 115 (formerly 622), act illegally, or with material irregularity, in the exercise of a jurisdiction which it does possess. The present rule refers in express terms to irregularity only. It has, however, been said (3) that though the term "illegality" does not include "irregularity," the latter word as used in this section is wide enough to include illegality. The question is not one of importance unless the illegality is held to be of such a character as to affect the validity of a sale in a manner making it absolutely void. This has been held to be the result in the case of certain illegalities (4). The view taken in some of held that as an attachment is an essential preliminary to sale a sale of property without a previous attachment is void, cf Raja Thakur Barmha v Jiban Ram, P C, 19 C L J 101 (1913) (only the attached property can be sold) [contra Kishory Mohun Roy v Mahomed Mujaffir Hossain, 18 C 188 (1890), Tincouri Debja v Shib Chandra Chowdhury, 21 C 639 (1894), Sheodhyani v Bhola Nath, 21 A 311 (1899)], Velayutha Muppan v Subramanian, 24 M L J 70 (1912), also where no notice was given to legal representative Rameswari Dassee v Doorga Dass Chatterjee, 6 C 103 (1880), where property was sold before the advertised time, Chedami Lal v Amir Beg, 7 A 676 (1885), and where sale took place before expiry of thirty days, Bakshi Nanit Kishore v Malik Chand, 7 A 289 (1880). Ganga Prasad v Jag Lal Rai, 11 A 333 (1889) [contra Venkata v Sava, 14 M 227 (1890)], Pissaduk Rasul v Ahmad Hussain, 20 I A 176 (1893)], Sithuvayyan v Mathuram, 12 M 325 (1888) [sale contrary to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act]. The Privy Council have, however, pointed out that a sale is a sale and not a nullity, whether there be an irregularity or a direct contravention of express provisions. Gobind Lal Rai v Ram Janam Mehar, 21 C 70 (1893), Keki Singh v Lal Singh, 21 C 355, 341 (1904), Ratha Charan Das v Sharfuddin Hossain, 17 C W N 1135 (1913).

A distinction is drawn between illegality and irregularity, at p 337, see remarks in Narayana Kothan v Kallanasundaram, 19 M 219, at p 207 (1890). The distinction has not always been kept to. A sale has been set aside on the ground of irregularity, where it was held to be null and void. Maisha Singh v Jhow Lal, 8 A H C R 354 (1874), Nomdh Singh v Shun Koor, 1 A H C R 135 (1872). Ratha Charan Das v Sharfuddin Hossain, 17 C W N 1135 (1913).

these cases that the act or omission was an illegality vitiating the sale was dissented from in others. In certain cases there was probably nothing more than an irregularity. It is clear that where a party professes to apply under this rule, then by such application he admits that the case must be treated as one of material irregularity to be redressed pursuant to its provisions only upon proof of injury (1). Ordinarily at least such irregularity will make the sale voidable only. Assuming, however, that there may be an illegality, which ipso facto renders the sale void, then it must be held either that the rule covers such a case, in which event injury must be established, or the case is one without the rule. In the latter case it has been held that the Court has apart from the former section, an inherent right to set aside all illegal proceedings provided that the interests of third parties are not affected (2) or it might have refused to confirm a sale on grounds other than those on which a party may apply to set it aside under this rule (3). The case being ex hypothesi outside the section it has been held that no proof of injury is necessary (4). The tendency, however, of modern decisions is to check judgments holding sales to be nullities on account of what are really mere irregularities in procedure (5). And unless it can be established that the sale is for want of jurisdiction or other cause absolutely void, the case will, when there is an irregularity of the kind described, fall within and be subject to the provisions of the rule.

As the former section was confined to cases of mere irregularity of the nature described, it did not apply where the sale was sought to be set aside on another ground such as fraud (6). Where, however, fraud in the execution proceedings was alleged and attempted to be substantiated and the question arose between parties (7) an application lay under sect 47 (formerly 244) and

The judgment in Harbans Lal v Kunlan Lal, 11 A 140 (1898), misses the point. The earlier decisions referred to did not hold that a sale could be set aside under a rule without proof of loss, but that illegality of the character referred to was outside the section and therefore not affected by its

no separate suit would lie (1) And an application was held maintainable under that section after a sale had been confirmed (2) A purchase by the decree holder benami at a price less than that at which he was permitted to bid constitutes fraud (3) If the decree itself which is the real basis of the title was fraudulently and collusively obtained, the sale at which a purchase was made never became absolute (4) See, however, now as to fraud the next paragraph evidence,(1) and that that evidence must be direct (2) and that a Court could not without evidence, and upon a mere supposition, find that an irregularity did cause an injury by causing an inadequate price to be bid at the sale. The amount or nature of the evidence required in any case depended upon its own circumstances (3). Difficulty was felt as to what was meant by "direct" evidence. Sometimes it was considered that this meant that persons should be called to testify that had it not been for a particular set of circumstances they would have done so and so, would have given a greater price, that they were willing to bid but were deterred and misled, and so forth. In other cases it was considered sufficient that there should be evidence of circumstances which would warrant the necessary, or at least the reasonable, inference that the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of (4). The Select Committee stated that the language of the rule has been altered in order to meet the doubts raised as to the evidence upon which the Court can act, and they refer to the Privy Council decision Tasadduk Rasul Khan v Ahmad Husain. Apparently it is intended to affirm that ruling, but the difficulty hitherto has been as to its construction. Proof, of course, will be required, and this proof may, it is submitted, on a true construction of the Privy Council decisions consist of "direct" evidence in the narrow sense stated, or of evidence of facts which warrant an inference that the irregularity was the cause of the inadequate price. It has been held that where the property is sold at an inadequate price owing to irregularities in the conduct and publication of the sale there is substantial injury within the meaning of this rule (5).

Appeal—An order dismissing an application under this rule on the ground of the non appearance of the applicant is appealable (6). If a judgment debtor has made an application under this rule, he can (if he withdraws it) apply under sect 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (7).

Application by purchaser to set aside sale on ground of judgment-debtor having no saleable interest. may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Therefore a purchaser cannot apply to set aside a sale on the ground of deficiency in area in the land sold,(8) or of misrepresentation or concealment in the sale notification inducing purchase at a price more than the property is really worth (9). interest the sale should not be set aside (1) The second paragraph of sect 313 of the last Code, which this rule replaces, has been transposed to the next rule.

"No saleable interest"—The words "no saleable interest" have been said to refer to cases where a purchaser buys a property which turns out to have no existence at all or to be of no saleable value whatever (2) It may be questioned whether the substitution here of the word "value" for interest is correct. The words mean "nothing to sell," and are not intended to confine the cases in which the application may be made to those in which the judgment-debtor though having an interest such interest is by prohibition of law or otherwise unsaleable (3) After a vesting order the debtor has no interest (4) The rule does not apply where the judgment debtor has no saleable interest in a portion only of the property, (5) nor is the fact that the property is subject to a mortgage sufficient to support an application, (6) or the fact that one of two judgment debtors has no interest if the other debtor owns the entire interest (7) Although default has been made in the payment of revenue, ownership of the property continues in the defaulter until a revenue sale takes place. A purchaser, therefore, of an estate in execution of a decree, after default has been made in paying revenue for it, cannot, in the event of a subsequent revenue sale, seek to set aside the sale under which he had made the purchase on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (8) See also notes to r 93, post. Under the Code of 1859 a sale under a second attachment was valid and would prevail over a sale subsequently held under a prior attachment and passed all the interest of the judgment debtor (9) Now however, when property is sold in execution it cannot be sold again, and when a judicial sale takes place all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground (10) which a sale has taken place has itself been set aside is not sufficient (1) Nor where a stranger to the proceedings purchases property bona fide, can the sale to him be set aside on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held (2) Nor is there a distinction between sales in execution of money and mortgage decrees (3) Where there is fraud on the part of the plaintiff, the validity of the sale is not affected, if the purchaser is not implicated in the fraud, (4) alter where the purchaser is so implicated (5) The reason for this rule is that a purchaser is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the order for execution or of the judgment on which it issues. If he were, there would be little inducement to buy (6) There is, however, a distinction between decree holders who purchase under their own decree which is afterwards reversed, and bona fide purchasers at a sale in execution of a valid decree to which they were no parties. As regards the latter the rule is as just stated but a judgment creditor who is also a purchaser, purchases subject to the result of the litigation.

The preceding law may be summarized as follows —A sale of land being a proceeding in execution, a question which arose as to the setting aside of such a sale was a question relating to execution, which, if it arose between the persons mentioned in sect 211 (now sect 17), had to be determined by order of the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit (4) As to the procedure to be followed in such cases in execution, that depended upon the grounds which were put forward to impeach the sale If the sale was impugned on the ground of irregularity (5) then the decree holder, judgment debtor or other person whose property was affected by the sale applied under sect 311 (now r 90) If the sale was sought to be set aside for any other cause than irregularity, such as fraud (6) or want of jurisdiction (7) in the executing Court (8) or non liability of property to sale, (1) or other ground, then an application lay under sect 244 (now 47). If objection came from the purchaser on the ground of want of saleable interest in the judgment debtor, then he applied under sect 313 (now r 91). Though the auction purchaser could not apply under sect 311 (now sect 90), if the sale was confirmed under the following section the order of confirmation bound both the parties and the purchaser (2). The result of this was that these persons could not, alleging irregularity, sue to set aside an order of confirmation whether such order was passed without (3) or after an application under sect 311. An auction purchaser might, however, alleging that there was no irregularity, have sued to set aside an order setting aside and refusing to confirm a sale (4). While, therefore, a suit would lie to set aside a sale on the ground of existence of irregularity, a suit would lie to confirm a sale on the ground that there was no irregularity. Suits also lay to impeach the validity of sales on a ground other than that of mere irregularity, provided that the question did not arise between parties within the meaning of sect 244 (now 47). Subject to the remarks made in this and the allied sections, the law appears to be the same now. In cases where sales are sought to be impeached on grounds other than those of mere irregularity, proceedings under sect 47 must be taken. As regards irregularities, if no application has been made under r 90, then this rule applies. If an application has been made to set aside a sale and refused then, subject to an appeal against such order, the same result would seem a fortiori to follow. If, on the other hand the sale is set aside, then the auction purchaser may appeal, but subject to such appeal the order would appear to be final. The same rule applies to orders made on applications under r 91. As regards orders under sect 47 they are decrees, (5) and subject to appeal. A separate suit can only lie in such cases as are outside the scope of sect 47.

Appeal Revision.—An appeal lies against an order on an application under this rule, O XLIII r 1 (g), setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale (6). No appeal lies from an order refusing an application to restore to the file an application which has been dismissed for default (7). No second appeal lies (8).

If, as he should be, the auction-purchaser is made a party to the proceedings he can appeal if the sale is set aside (1) Where a sale is sought to be set aside on some ground other than those mentioned in these rules, and the matter is dealt with under sect 47 (as in the case of fraud (2)), the order under that section is a decree and appealable as such, and a second appeal lies (3) An objection cannot be allowed for the first time in appeal (4) Where a Court wrongfully sets aside or refuses to set aside a sale its order may, if the circumstances fall within the terms of sect 115, be the subject of revision (5)

93. Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under rule 92, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of his purchase-money, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid. [s. first this clause]

"Where a sale."—The corresponding section in the last Code was "when a sale of immoveable property is set aside under sects 312 or 313, or when it is found that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest, etc., and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it" (6) The auction purchaser under the last Code might have applied under sect 313 (now r 91), and the Court might have set aside the sale under the same section (see now r 92), adjudicating upon the question raised, viz., the absence of all saleable interest The section was enabling and not prohibitive of an independent action (7) Such an application might not, however, be made, and it might yet become known and found (8) either by the Court of execution (9) or in another suit (10) that the property did not belong to the judgment debtor In this case also the purchaser was upon the fact being found entitled to recover back his purchase money It was held that the words in sect 313 of the last Code "when it is found," etc., must be taken in connection with a finding in a separate suit to mean "when it is found in some proceeding by which the judgment creditor is bound" For to compel the judgment creditor to refund merely because in some proceeding between other parties a Court had decided that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest would be contrary to principles of justice (1) The finding must have been in some proceedings to which a judgment creditor was a party or at any rate of which he had notice (2) It is to be observed that the present rule omits "where it is found," etc., as also the last paragraph of the former section Nothing has been said as to the reason for the first omission, but as regards the second the Committee stated that they added words at the commencement of the rule, "in substitution of the last paragraph of the section which thus becomes unnecessary" Presumably this observation refers to the italicized words "an order for repayment" Such an order being due for money may be enforced in execution under the rules providing for the execution of decrees and orders for money

As regards absence of saleable interest in private sales there is under sect 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor In the case of execution sales there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court The purchaser buys the property with all risks and defects in the judgment debtor's title In the absence of fraud his only remedy is to apply to set aside the sale and to recover back his purchase money when the judgment debtor had no saleable interest at all He cannot obtain a refund in proportion to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no interest (3) The right of the purchaser is absolute even though he himself caused the property to be put up for sale, provided that he was not guilty of fraud or misrepresentation or did not guarantee the validity of the sale (4) See notes to r 91, ante

"The purchaser shall be entitled"—When a sale is set aside the purchaser's right to recover the purchase money is not limited to an application under this rule to the Court executing the decree, but he may bring a suit for the purpose (5) He may sue to cancel the sale, (6) to establish his claim to the land where possession has not been obtained (1) and to recover the purchase money (2) A person was not a party precluded from suing because an order under sect 313 of the last Code was refused where, subsequent to such refusal it appeared that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (3) If the judgment debtor has any saleable interest in the property, the Court has no jurisdiction to order a refund, and an order made can be set aside on revision (4) The former section was held to empower the auction purchaser to require repayment of the purchase money but did not impose upon the decree holder the duty of tendering the money as soon as the sale was set aside He was bound to pay the purchase money only if called upon to do so but not otherwise, and until he was so compelled to refund the purchase money he had no right to call upon the judgment debtor to pay his debt a second time (5) In a recent case under sect 315 of the last Code it was held that an auction purchaser seeking to recover the purchase money on the ground that he has been deprived of the property owing to the failure of the debtor's title had no remedy outside the provisions of the Code and the remedy given is not a suit for money had and received under Art 62 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act of 1908 but is a suit within Art 120 of that Act (6)

"Interest"—Thus the Court may refuse interest (7) as when a person claims more than he is found entitled to (8) or if it is proved that the purchaser has contributed to the loss he has sustained (9) He should not however be charged with the expenses of the sale (10) Where a sale has been set aside the purchaser has been allowed the money laid out by him for the benefit of the property accounting for the rent and profits (11)

Stamp Registration—Under sect 35 of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899) a sale certificate cannot be registered unless it has been duly stamped The sale certificate should not be granted until the auction purchaser has furnished the requisite stamp paper for its engrossment Attention is directed to the circumstance, which is often overlooked, that the stamp duty is payable, not by the deposit of the sum required to purchase stamps, but by the stamps themselves (6) Under the provisions contained in the second paragraph of sect 89 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), a copy of the certificate is to be sent by the Court to the Registering Officer Although sects 17, 32 58, 61 and 89 of that Act except sale certificates from the ordinary procedure in Registration it was said in the Notes accompanying the first draft of the Bill that, "They leave it doubtful whether the action of the Court does or does not complete the registration of the certificate The procedure laid down in the case of sale certificates would seem sufficiently to meet the requirements contemplated by registration" It was accordingly proposed in the first draft to declare by an addition to sect 89 of the Registration Act on the lines of sect 81 of that enactment, that the "filing of such copy or copies shall have the same force and effect as registration" But this proposal has not been adopted (7) The stamp is required for the sale certificate itself The Court does not require an application for a certificate in writing and if in writing it need not be stamped (8)

question of law and fact depending on the questions what could be sold and what was in fact sold. To ascertain this the decree and the whole execution proceedings must be looked at. The question what legally passed by a sale cannot depend altogether upon the form of the sale certificate (1) See the notes to sect. 63, ante, where this matter is more fully considered, (2) as also the question whether any title to the thing sold is warranted. Sect. 316 of the last Code dealt with the date of the vesting of the title, a matter which is now governed by sect. 65, to which refer. This provision replaces that in the old Code, that the title should vest from the date of the certificate

95. Where the immovable property sold is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf or of some person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment of such property and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by putting such purchaser, or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf in possession of the property, and, if need be, by removing any person who refuses to vacate the same.

Delivery of property in occupancy of judgment-debtor.—This rule corresponds with sect 263 of Act VIII of 1859. The words “and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect 316,” and “on application by the purchaser,” were added by sect 318 of Act X of 1877. The present Code altered “sect 316” to “rule 94” and made the additions noted in italics, the words “the application of the purchaser” being substituted for “application by the purchaser”. As to trespass on land of which actual possession has been given to the purchaser under this rule, see case cited (3)

custom, (1) but he cannot oppose on the ground that the sale of a permanent tenure was confirmed without previous payment of the landlord's fee under sect 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (2)

"Order delivery."—A purchaser of an undivided share of a Hindu estate acquires only a right to sue for partition and for delivery of what may be allotted as that share. Such proceedings cannot be taken under this rule, and the dismissal of such an application under this rule will not bar a purchaser's suit for partition (3). For form of order, see the First Sched App E No 24

Putting the purchaser in possession.—A purchaser can obtain has possession although in the first instance he obtained possession under r 96, (4) and a plaintiff obtaining symbolical possession can maintain a fresh suit for real possession, (5) so can the assignee of the purchaser whose possession has been resisted by the judgment debtor, (6) as also a purchaser whether legal delivery has been given or not, (7) but he must have endeavoured to get possession under this rule first (8). By a later decision it was held a suit was maintainable even if he had not applied for possession under this rule, the remedies by suit and under this rule being concurrent (9). Possession being given fifteen years after the sale does not entitle the judgment-debtor to recover possession by suit unless he shows twelve years' possession before he was dispossessed (10)

Limitation.—An application for possession must be within three years of the grant of the sale certificate under Art 178 of Act XV of 1877 (Limitation Act), (11) even where the assignee of the purchaser applies, (12) the date being reckoned from when the certificate has been granted, that is, when it has been issued to him (13). The Madras High Court, however, held that in respect of a suit for possession the date from which time begins to run is that of the sale, and the Article applicable being 138 (14). This rule now expressly provides that in respect of an application for possession the three years run from the date of the certificate. A purchaser may sue for possession within twelve years of symbolical possession being given him (15). Symbolical possession as against the grantors of a perpetual lease will not be effective against the lessee, so as to save limitation on a suit for possession (1) The Allahabad Court have however, held that a purchaser cannot bring a suit for possession, even if his application for possession under this rule is barred, as the matter comes under sect 47 (2) In another case the same Court has held that the fact that an application under this rule has been rejected as being made beyond time is no bar to a suit by the auction purchaser for the property purchased (3) And there are other decisions holding that sect 47 is inapplicable (4)

Appeal—An appeal was held to lie from an order rejecting the application of the purchaser, who was the decree holder, the order being appealable as one under sect 211 (now 17) for possession (5) But the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held otherwise, sect 244 of the last Code not being applicable, (6) but where the application for possession was resisted by the legal representative of the judgment debtor on the allegation that portions of the property belonged to him and not to the judgment debtor, the Calcutta High Court held the application to be one within that section and therefore appealable (7)

96 Where the property sold is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under rule 94, the Court shall, on the application of the purchaser, order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment debtor has been transferred to the purchaser

Delivery of possession—This rule corresponds with sect 261 of Act VIII of 1859, with the exception of the words "and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under sect 316" which were added by sect 319 of Act X of 1877, and the words in italics by the present Code which also altered 'sect 316' into "rule 94" This rule does not prevent the purchaser obtaining possession if he can, without the intervention of the Court (8)

under Act VIII of 1859 to put a purchaser into possession until he had his certificate of sale (1)

“Order delivery”—The Courts in this country do not give possession by removing the possession of one who is in possession under an apparent bona fide title. If the debtor can assert his title in possession by suit only the purchaser can have no higher claim (2). Formal possession under O XXI r 36 given by a Court in execution operates as between the parties in point of law and fact, as a complete transfer of actual possession from one party to another, (3) and where land which had been given by a father to his son a minor was subsequently attached and sold in execution of a decree against the father, formal possession under this rule to the purchaser completely dispossessed the father, whether he held on his own account or that of his son, (4) but such possession will not take effect as actual possession as against persons who are not parties to the suit (5) nor against a purchaser, in execution of the rights of the judgment debtor, who had previously obtained actual possession (6). The delivery of possession to the purchaser under this rule does not cause dispossession of a person not the judgment debtor, found in possession by receipt of rent from tenants so as to entitle the latter to complain under O XXI r 99 (7). Symbolical possession as against the grantors of a perpetual lease without reservation to the grantors and with no rights reserved and only a nominal rent, will not be effective against the lessee to save limitation against a plea of adverse possession (8). The rightful owner dispossessing the other is not a trespasser, and may rely for the support of his possession on the title vested in him (9). An order under this rule can only be made by the presiding officer of the Court and is a judicial Act (10).

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application under this rule viz three years under Art 178 Sched I of the Limitation Act, is reckoned from the date when the sale becomes absolute. If formal possession be infructuous a suit against the judgment debtor for possession is good within twelve years of the sale under Art 138 of Sched I of the Limitation Act (11). It has been held that Art 138 of the Limitation Act only applies to suits in which the auction purchaser is the plaintiff and the judgment debtor, or a person claiming through him, the defendant (12). Where a purchaser is resisted in obtaining possession by a person claiming under a mortgage from the judgment debtor and sues for possession the suit is governed by the same article even though he alleges the mortgage to be collusive and fraudulent (1) and sues to set it aside (2) It has been held that if the purchaser be dispossessed by a third party subsequent to formal possession he has twelve years from dispossession to bring a suit, (3) while, if the judgment debtor be in possession and formal possession be given under this rule instead of under r 95, a suit for possession against him lies within twelve years of the date of formal possession (4) as formal possession under either r 95 or this rule forms a fresh starting point for limitation as against the judgment debtor, (5) whether actual possession be obtained or not (6) But a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a mere formal possession of immoveable property by a purchaser at a Court sale cannot prevent limitation running in favour of the judgment-debtor where the latter remains in actual possession, for symbolical possession is neither real possession nor equivalent to it under this Code except where the Code expressly or by implication so provides (7)

also, at the instance of the applicant, order the judgment debtor, or any person acting at his instigation, to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days

Obstruction of decree holder or purchaser—These and the following rules have been remodelled. These two rules applied under the last Code to applications made by the decree holder (1) only, but now to applications both by decree holder and purchaser, thus embodying the provisions of sect 334 of the last Code. The preceding Code did not make it obligatory on a decree holder who was obstructed to pursue his remedies under these provisions. And it was accordingly held that the failure on the part of plaintiff to avail himself of this summary remedy did not bar a suit (2). Moreover, it was held that there was nothing to prevent the decree holder or purchaser who had been obstructed from making a fresh application for delivery (3). The omission to have recourse to the provisions of the former Code did not, it was held, preclude a person from instituting a suit to recover possession or making a fresh application for delivery. An order under the former section passed against a person who had at the instigation of the judgment debtor obstructed a decree holder has been held not to bar a suit (4). A decree for partition is a decree for possession and the rule is not rendered inapplicable by the fact that the person obstructing claims to be a mulgum tenant (5). Every obstruction must be caused either by the judgment debtor or claimants at his instigation, by persons who have no real interest in the property, or by third parties claimants. The present rules deal with the first two cases and the next with the third (6). The effect of the remodeling of the rules is as follows. Sects 328–330 of the last Code applied to decree holders only, and sect 334 to obstruction of purchasers. The provisions of these sections are incorporated in rr 97 and 98 which apply in favour both of the decree holder and purchaser and against the judgment debtor. R 99 applies in favour of the same persons but against persons other than the judgment debtor. This rule which incorporates the portion of sect 335 which dealt with the purchaser, modifies sect 331. The provisions as to trying the claim as a suit with the resultant appeal are omitted. But all parties except the judgment debtor have a right of suit under r 103. Lastly, rr 100, 101 and 103 which incorporate sects 332 and 333 deal with the dispossession of third parties. The former section dealt with dispossession at the instance of the decree holder and the latter with dispossession by the purchaser. Both are now dealt with together. The Judge should fix a day, make an inquiry on taking evidence and if he directs that the property should be delivered in whole or in part should order that process

sion be given in one or other of the ways mentioned in the Code (1) It has been held that this rule should be read with r 95 (2) These and the following sections in the former Code have been held not to apply to proceedings under the Mairatdar's Act (3)

"Is resisted"—There is of course no indication as to the nature of the resistance or obstruction, but there must be some overt act of opposition to the Court's officers on the part of some one who is actually present (4)

"Possession"—This term in this and the next rule has been held to include constructive and symbolical as well as actual physical possession Possession of immoveable property is not the less real or actual because it is enjoyed through tenants, servants, or members of one's family (5) The same was held as regards sect 335 of the last Code, (6) the provisions of which are incorporated in rr 97, 98 and 100

Limitation—The resistance or obstruction referred to is that mentioned as forming the subject of the complaint, and limitation is not necessarily to be computed from the date of first obstruction (7) For the limitation is one which governs a cause of action arising out of a particular resistance or obstruction (8) Further, the period mentioned is important only as the limit prescribed within which the judgment creditors may by virtue of this rule bring what is in effect an action of ejectment against a judgment debtor in execution within the period prescribed from the last application of the kind even though not instituted within thirty days after a wrongful obstruction (9) An application must be brought within thirty days of the obstruction but where according to the former procedure under sect 331, the application was converted into a suit, the rights of the parties had to be decided as if an ordinary suit for possession had been instituted by the decree holder against the defendant (10) Where litigation under that section was pending the proceedings in execution were suspended (11) When the litigation was unsuccessful, the period during which they had been pending could not be excluded in computing the period of limitation for execution of the decree (12) An order rejecting an application as being barred

"Detained in the civil prison"—It was thought that the previous expression, "commit the judgment debtor or such other person to jail," was misleading as raising questions of diet money as in the case of civil imprisonment for debt. The language has, therefore, been altered to render it clear that the provision relates to conviction of an offence in contempt of justice. The words "without prejudice to any proceedings," etc. in the former sect 330, have been omitted, though presumably the law remains the same in this respect.

99. Where the Court is satisfied that the resistance or Resistance or obstruction by bona fide claimant obstruction was occasioned by any person (other than the judgment-debtor) claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment debtor, the Court shall make an order dismissing the application

Object of rule—The object of the corresponding and similar provisions in the last Code was, so far as possible, to prevent the originating of a succession of suits. It was desired that a right should be determined finally, in continuation of an original proceeding and not by fresh proceedings (2). This section, as the last, was limited to application by the decree holder, (3) but now includes orders made on the application of a purchaser against a person other than the judgment debtor (4). A person in whose favour an order under sect 330 had been made could not claim the benefit of the former section (5). As to the amendments, vide post judgment debtor requiring the decree against them to be reopened could be adjudicated upon. The issues which properly arose in an inquiry were whether the person obstructing was in possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment debtor (1). The word "possession" was not limited to actual physical possession, but included also constructive, such as by a tenant (2). The issue which arose was one between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant, that is, a person other than the judgment-debtor.

Under the Code of 1877 the claim had to be investigated as if a suit had been instituted under sect. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The powers of the Court were thus strictly limited to an inquiry into the question of possession (3).

The Code was amended by sect. 52 of Act XII of 1879, the provisions of which were re-enacted in the Code of 1882, and the power of investigation was enlarged. The investigation was not limited to the fact of possession. Any question of title arising between the contending parties in connection with their right of possession might be finally determined in such investigation as in an ordinary action of ejectment. The order, whether for executing or for staying execution, had the force of a decree determining the title and the right of possession. The plaintiff was not forced to a fresh suit or had a right to bring a fresh suit if the decree was against him (4). Where possession was shown to have been with the plaintiff the defendants were not, without showing title in themselves, at liberty to impeach the plaintiff's title or to set up a jus tertii. The onus of proving a better title than the plaintiff's rested with them, and they might prove their title as a defence (5). A Court executing a decree was thus given a special jurisdiction which enabled it to try a claim of which the value of the subject matter fell below the pecuniary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction (6).

It will be observed that considerable amendments have been made in the present rule. Under the first paragraph of the former sect. 331 the claim was to have been "numbered and registered as a suit between the decree holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant." Paragraph 2 under which the Court had power in investigation of "the like powers," as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree holder against the claimant, is omitted, as also the third and fourth paragraphs under which the Court passed an order executing or staying execution which had the force of a decree, and was subject to the same conditions as to appeal. The words "with the like powers" were

102. Nothing in rules 99 and 101 shall apply to resistance or obstruction in execution of a decree for the possession of immovable property by a person to whom the judgment debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed or to the dispossession of any such person.

Rules not applicable to transferee lite pendente

103. Any party not being a judgment debtor against whom an order is made under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Orders conclusive subject to regular suit

Object and scope of rules—Rule 103 is the second paragraph of sect 335 of the last Code. The disposition of the rest of the section is as follows. Obstruction of the purchaser is dealt with by rr 97 and 99 and dispossession of a claimant other than the judgment debtor by r 100, ante. A power is thus given where an attempt has been made to deliver possession (3) and there is obstruction or resistance, (4) to give after inquiry (5) a summary decision which shall protect the public peace, prevent obstruction and terminate the execution proceedings by determining what should be immediately done subject as regards claimants other than the judgment debtor, to the result of a regular suit (6). The rules are designed for the protection and assistance of decree holders purchasers (7) and third parties dispossessed (8) rr 97 and 98 dealing with resistance by the judgment debtor (as to which, see r 97 ante) r 99 with resistance by third parties, and rr 100 and 101 with third parties dispossessed. A person it has been held is not bound to proceed under the former sect 335. He might if he chose at once bring a regular suit within the ordinary period of limitation. But if he did choose to apply for a summary decision and it was against him he had to sue within one year from the time of the order (9). It was also held there was nothing to prevent a decree-holder or purchaser who has been obstructed or resisted from making a fresh application for delivery without making any complaint under sects 328-330, 334 (1) That case was, however, subsequently distinguished on the ground that it was one in which the purchaser was resisted not by a third party but by the judgment debtor (2) The application must be made within thirty days of the resistance or obstruction (3) The Court was held not bound under sect 335 to pass any particular order, but only such order as may be proper in the circumstances of the case (4) A purchaser at a Court sale of the interest of one member of an undivided Hindu family ought not to be put in exclusive possession of the whole undivided land by virtue of a decree against one co-parcener only, (5) but only in joint possession with the others (6) It has been held that symbolical possession does not amount to dispossession within the meaning of the former section (7)

"Conclusive"—The rule contemplates an order against one party or the other, and if an application is withdrawn, an order allowing the withdrawal is not an order under this rule (10) The order is one which becomes final and conclusive unless the party against whom it is passed institutes a suit within a year and obtains an adjudication in his favour Where the Court declined to

Death, Marriage and Insolvency of Parties.

1. The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the

Abatement—It has been pointed out (1) that the practice in respect of abatement under the Code is different from that which prevailed in the English Courts. A suit, though perfect in its institution became defective by the death, marriage, or transmission of interest or liability of some of the parties. In such case the suit was said to have abated or become defective, and as a general rule no proceeding could be taken in it until an order to revive the suit or carry on the proceedings had been made. When the abatement was total—that is caused by the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of a single plaintiff or the marriage of a single female plaintiff—the case was completely suspended, and could not be proceeded with until it had been revived or the defect cured. Where the abatement was partial merely as when it was caused by the death of the defendant, it prevented those proceedings only by which the interest of the deceased might be affected, for the death of a defendant made an abatement quoad himself alone. Thus abatement though it suspended the proceedings in a case, did not put an end to them. But it had not the effect of being a bar to a further suit upon the same cause of action. One of the essentials of res judicata being that the matter must have been determined, and when a suit abated before judgment nothing had been determined in such suit. Under however, r 9 of this Order (formerly sect 371) when a suit abates no fresh suit can be brought upon the same cause of action unless and until the order of abatement is set aside. The provisions of this Order are substantially those of the last Code. Rules 6 and 12 have been added and sub rule (2) has been added to r 10 (formerly sect 372). The last paragraph of sect 582 of the last Code has been made r 11. The provisions of this Order apply to appeals and the words “plaintiff,” “defendant” and “suit” include an appellant a respondent, and appeal respectively (2). They did not, however, under the last Code apply to proceedings in execution between the judgment-creditor and judgment debtor, (3) nor to proceedings in a Mamlatdar’s Court (4). As regards execution proceedings, see now r 12, post.

(3) Hira Chand v Kastur Chand, 18 B 224 (1834)

(4) Ganpatram Jebhai v Ranchod Haribhai, 17 B 645 (1893)

Applicability—This rule is the same as sect 99 of Act VII of 1859 and that the words right to sue was substituted for cause of action by sect 60 of Act VII of 1879. See also Rules of Supreme Court 1883 O 17 r 1. The rule is the same as under the last Code. The illustrations have, however been omitted. Illustrations (a) and (b) to sect 361 of the last Code have been omitted as founded upon an antiquated decision (Anderson v Martindale 1 E 49) which is not very intelligible to practitioners in this country. Illustration (d) of the section was correct only under the Diyabhogi system and the word minor was not of the same sense of the example. The Select Committee caput also the other illustrations, considering them too obvious to serve any useful purpose. This rule applies to proceedings on appeal (1) to cases where and in an order of Court reference has been made to arbitration, (2) even after an award has been made but before decree, (3) and under the Dekhan Agricultural Relief Act to proceedings in respect of a conciliation agreement (4).

'Right to sue'—Under the Code of 1859 Cause of action in the corresponding section was held to mean the right to bring in action (a). Right to sue means the right to seek relief by means of legal proceedings (b). It is a vested right (7). The cause of action in the original and revived suits must be the same (5).

"Survives"—All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any action or special proceeding in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators save certain causes of action mentioned below, (9) and promises bind the representatives of the promisor in case of the death of such promisor before performance unless the contrary intention appear from the contract (10). A right for malicious prosecution does not survive on the death of the plaintiff (11) but after a decree for damages for defamation it does survive on appeal after the death of the appellant to whose estate injury has occurred for which a claim has been perfected by a judgment the nature of the relief claimed on appeal stands on a different footing and it does not follow that the right to appeal against a decree partakes of the nature of the original decree (12). So also on a second appeal (13). The position in such cases has been enunciated as follows—

The only cases in which apart from questions of breach of contract express or implied remedy for a wrongful act can be pursued against the estate of a deceased person who has done the act appear to us to be those in which (1) party or the proceeds or value of property, belonging to another, have been appropriated by the deceased person and added to his estate or moneys. In such cases, whatever the original form of the action, it is in substance brought to recover property, or its proceeds or value, and by amendment could be made such in form as well as in substance. In such cases the action, though arising out of a wrongful act, does not die with the person. The property or the proceeds or value which, in the lifetime of the wrong doer, would have been recovered from him, can be traced after his death to his assets, and recaptured by the rightful owner there. But it is not every wrongful act by which a wrong doer indirectly benefits that falls under this head if the benefit does not consist in the acquisition of property or its proceeds in value. Where there is nothing among the assets of the deceased that in law or in equity belongs to the plaintiff, and the damages which have been done to him are unliquidated and uncertain the executors of a wrong doer cannot be sued merely because it was worth the wrong doer's while to commit the act which is complained of and an indirect benefit may have been reaped thereby (1). The right to sue will survive to an executor on an action on breach of contract or a tort if on the face of the proceedings it is shown an injury has accrued to the personal estate (2). It will survive when a Hindu widow sues to recover her husband's estate, (3) to the sons of a Hindu mother who sued to restrain encroachment on the share allotted to her on partition and agreed to sell her interest to the defendants at the value to be found on arbitration, and then died after the award but before the decree, (4) and for the purposes of appeal to the mother of a Mitakshara son who obtained a decree setting aside his father's alienations, (5) to the representatives of a minor who, on attaining majority, sued to have his rights declared respecting property which by a consent decree and conveyance to which he was no party, his grandmother, father, and uncle conveyed to the defendants and who died pending suit (6). It also survived against the other defendants when a defendant's interest ceased before he died, without his representatives being added (7). Where an agent sues on behalf of an undisclosed principal dies pending the suit, the suit should after the death of the agent be continued, if it can be continued at all, by the agent's representatives and not by the principal (8).

Not survive—Causes of action in respect of defamation assault as defined by the Indian Penal Code, and other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and cases where after the death of the party the relief sought could not be enjoyed or the granting of it would be nugatory e.g. (a) where a passenger was injured but not fatally in a railway collision and died without bringing any action, and (b) divorce, do not survive, (1) by a reversioner to set aside alienation by a Hindu widow (2)

2 Where there are more plaintiffs or defendants than one, and any of them dies, and where the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the Court shall cause an entry to that effect to be made on the record, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Applicability—This rule is the equivalent of sect 100 of Act VIII of 1859, save for certain formal amendments made by Act X of 1877, and the words “right to sue” substituted for “cause of action” by Act XII of 1879. Except for three verbal alterations it is the same as that of the last Code. It applies to proceedings on appeal (3). Thus if one of the appellants dies and the application to revive is dismissed as being time barred, the appeal should be ordered to abate so far as the deceased is concerned, and may proceed at the instance of the remaining appellants, (4) it cannot have the effect of causing the whole appeal to abate (5). Again, on the death of one of the respondents the proper course is to proceed under r 4, and either to declare that the appeal has abated as against him, and proceed against the other respondents, or to direct the legal representatives of the deceased respondent to be placed on the record (6). It has been held that a suit does not abate under this rule until the representative of the deceased plaintiff has failed to apply within the time allowed by law (7).

“Right to sue”—See notes to last rule. The rule is not limited in its application to cases where the right to sue or appeal survives against the surviving defendants or respondents not as the legal representatives of the deceased but by reason of a right vested in them antecedent to the suit (8).

“To the surviving plaintiff alone”—On the death of one of two joint owners, suing for damages in respect of trespass, the cause of action survives to the other alone, (9) also where the interest of a defendant ceases in the subject matter of the suit before his death (10).

3. (1) Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit.

(2) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court may award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Applicability of clause (1).—This rule amalgamates sects 363 and 365 of the last Code and a portion of sect 366. Sect 363 dealt with the case of several plaintiffs, and sect 365 with that of a sole plaintiff. These are now dealt with together in the first clause of the rule. The second clause is the first paragraph of sect 366 of the last Code. The second paragraph has been omitted, as also the Explanation to that section. As to the definition of "legal representative," see now sect 2, clause (11). The section corresponding with sect. 363 of the last Code, as originally enacted by Act VIII of 1859, sect 101, required the legal representative to make the application to revive, but by Act VII of 1888, this provision and the latter portion of the former section from the words "the Court may cause" as it formerly stood, were substituted. The words "right to sue" were substituted for "cause of action" by Act XII of 1879. The rule applies to proceedings on appeal, (1) and on revision, (2) but not under the last Code to proceedings in execution of a decree, (3) or to the case of a plaintiff dying after decree, (4) as to execution proceedings, see now r. 12, post. Where there is only an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, but no suit pending in Court, and the applicant dies before the leave is granted, the right to sue as a pauper, being a personal right, cannot survive in the legal representatives of the deceased applicant (5).

Sect 365 in the last Code corresponded with sect 102 of Act VIII of 1859, but underwent much modification. Under sect 102 it was optional with the Court to make an order on the application of the legal representative, and it was not until Act VII. of 1888 that the mandatory form came into force. The words "where the cause of action survives" were inserted by Act X of 1877, the words "cause of action" being changed to "right to sue" by Act XII of 1879.

“Legal representative”—The legal representative need not, since the passing of Act VII of 1889, if not under sect 50 (of the last Code), take out administration to continue a suit, but must do so before decree (6) An executor under Act V of 1881 is the legal representative of the deceased before probate has been obtained, but one of several executors cannot carry on a suit without proving the will (7) The rule presupposes the applicant is the legal representative If the representative character is denied, or where two or more claim it, the procedure under r 5 should be followed, (8) but where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent the deceased or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right (9) The words “Legal representative” must, where there are more legal representatives than one, be read in the plural, thus where the appellant died and only one of his three representatives was brought on the record the appeal abated, (10) but in Bombay it has been held that an application by one of the heirs of the appellant is sufficient, and the respondent is entitled to have the names of the others brought on the record to have them bound by the decree (11) All the legal representatives must be brought upon the record, (12) as far as is possible, (13) if any refuse to be joined as appellants they should be made respondents, (14) or any who cannot or are unwilling to be joined as applicants should be added as defendants (15) and in such a case the application should not be construed as no application by the legal representative so as to cause an appeal to abate (16) The sons of a deceased plaintiff, members of a joint Mitakshara family, may apply to revive without obtaining administration or a certificate under Act VII of 1889 (1) In a suit by a Hindu widow to recover property belonging to her deceased husband, the heirs of the husband are the legal representatives, (2) and not the widow's personal heirs (3) But in the case of a Hindu wife governed by the Vyavakara Mayukha, who obtained a decree for maintenance against her husband, her daughters as heirs of her "stri" improper are her legal representatives (4) Again, on a plaintiff who obtained a decree against his father for partition dying pending appeal, his mother is his legal representative entitled to maintain appeal (5) Where an appellant gave the property in suit by deed of gift, the donee was allowed to carry on appeal as heir but not as donee, (6) but this was before there was any section corresponding to sect 372 of the last Code, or r 1 of this, and the deed he set up was post dated to the deed from the appellant under which the respondents claimed An executor is the legal representative for the purposes of an appeal of a plaintiff who sued for possession of tarwad property, and to set aside an adoption made by the deceased karnatan, and, obtaining a decree for possession only, appealed and died (7) An administrator, however, appointed under sect 10 of Reg VIII of 1827, without leave being granted him to sue, is not the legal representative, nor is he entitled to continue an appeal, (8) nor can the representative of a deceased pauper continue an application for leave to sue as a pauper, such right being only a personal one (9) Again, where the judgment debtor in a suit for malicious and wrongful conduct sold a share of his property liable to be attached in execution and died, the purchaser could not carry on the appeal as his representative as the purchase deed did not make him liable for the deceased's personal debts (10) Further, a claim based on personal trust cannot survive to a representative (11)

"The Court, on an application"—This application is not necessarily confined to all the legal representatives, but one or more may apply and ask that those unwilling to join be added as defendants (12) This is only imperative where the person is admitted to be the legal representative or where no dispute is raised, (13) but the Court is bound to grant the application, even where an appeal has been heard and decided without the appellant's pleader or the Court being aware of the appellant's death and the representative applies to have his name placed on the record and the appeal reheard, the decree being a nullity (14) See now as to this, r 8, post

"Proceed with the suit"—Objection to the applicant being added as a legal representative should be raised at the earliest opportunity, and failure to object precludes the opposing party from raising it at a later stage (1) So where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent, or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right (2)

Applicability of clause (2)—The section in the last Code (366) corresponded with the latter part of sect 102 of Act VIII of 1859, with certain slight alterations made by Acts X of 1877, and XII of 1879, the explanation being added by the former Act and the words "within the time limited by law" and "shall on the application of the defendant" by the latter Act. The second paragraph of sect 366 has been omitted. The Explanation appended to this section in the last Code has been also omitted having regard to the definition of "legal representative" in sect 2 ante. This rule applies to proceedings on appeal (3) but it does not apply to a suit in which a decree has been made (4) nor under the last Code to proceedings in execution of decree, (5) as to this see now r 12, post

"Within the time limited"—That is, six months (6). If no application is made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and the suit is ordered to abate it may yet be revived under r 9 (7)

"No application"—Where two defendants appealed against a decree and one died, and no application was made to revive and the decree was reversed held the decree remained good as against the estate of the deceased defendant (8). If an application is made within time and is dismissed, the suit cannot be ordered to abate (9). If an application be made by one of the heirs of the deceased appellant the respondent is still entitled to have the other heirs put on the record (10). Where an application for revival has been made an order rejecting an application that a suit might be declared to abate and that the application for revival is invalid is not an order under this rule (11). The words "any person" under the former section did not confine the application to an application by all the legal representatives, but for sufficient reasons any one or more might apply (12)

"Shall abate"—The section in the last Code ran, "The Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate." It was proposed to be amended so as to give effect to the principle that abatement results from the operation of law and does not depend upon the making of an order. It was therefore suggested that the Court should merely decide that the suit had abated. The Select Committee, however, struck out the provision that the Court might make an order declaring the abatement, as in its opinion it was unnecessary and was likely to give rise to difficulty. If no application is made by the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff and the suit is ordered to abate, it may yet be revived under r 9 and the order for revival may be made immediately after the order for abatement (1).

"On the application of the defendant,"—Defendant here includes plaintiff respondent and defendant respondent, (2) but a respondent in a special appeal cannot require the legal representative of the deceased appellant to be substituted and the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal, (3) though if one of the heirs of the deceased appellant has applied to revive, the respondent is entitled to have the names of the other heirs put on the record so as to have them bound by the decree (4). The application must be within six months of the death of the plaintiff (5).

Appeals—The Allahabad High Court held that no appeal lies from an order passed under the first paragraph of the former sect. 366 directing a suit to abate (6) such an order not being a decree, (7) but both the Bombay and Madras High Courts have held such an order to be a decree (8). No appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for a declaration that a suit had abated by reason of the death of the plaintiff and the invalidity of an application for revival by the representatives of the deceased plaintiff (9). Where the special appellant dies and no representative applies to be substituted the respondent cannot require the appeal to proceed. He should file a cross appeal (10).

"Proceed with the suit"—Objection to the applicant being added as a legal representative should be raised at the earliest opportunity, and failure to object precludes the opposing party from raising it at a later stage (1) So where a decree has been made in favour of the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Appellate Court should not go into the question of the representative's right to represent, or dismiss the suit on finding that he or she had no right (2)

Applicability of clause (2)—The section in the last Code (366) corresponded with the latter part of sect 102 of Act VIII of 1859, with certain slight alterations made by Acts X of 1877, and being added by the former Act and the words "and "shall on the application of the defendant" by the latter Act The second paragraph of sect 366 has been omitted The Explanation appended to this section in the last Code has been also omitted, having regard to the definition of "legal representative" in sect 2 ante This rule applies to proceedings on appeal, (3) but it does not apply to a suit in which a decree has been made, (4) nor under the last Code to proceedings in execution of decree, (5) as to this see now r 12, post

(2) Any person so made a party may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant.

(3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

Applicability.—This rule as originally enacted as sect 104 of Act VIII of 1859, was considerably modified and added to Act X of 1877, besides making certain verbal alterations, confined the scope to cases of the death of the defendant taking place before decree, and added a paragraph commencing “Provided that the person so made defendant” Act XII of 1879 added the next clause in the last Code from “When the plaintiff fails” to “the suit shall abate,” and substituted the words “right to sue” for “cause of action” Act XIV of 1882 added the further words from “unless he satisfies” to “within such period,” and the last paragraph was added by Act VII of 1888. New amendments are italicized. See post.

The section is applicable to a suit for dissolution of partnership where two of the defendants died, and the plaintiff applied to revive (1). It also applies to proceedings on appeal (2). Hence on appeal by the plaintiff against a decree of dismissal the defendant died, on the death being notified to the Court it could not proceed to make a decree against the deceased estate without revival (3). It further applies to second appeals (4). It, however, only applies to the case of a defendant dying before decree, and not to an application of the representatives of the defendant, who died after an ex parte decree, to be made parties for the purpose of setting aside the decree (5).

The section under the last Code did not apply to execution proceedings, (6) as to this see now r 12, post, nor to investigations in forma pauperis under sect 107 (7) of the last Code corresponding with O XXXIII r 5 of this Code. Under the proviso to sect 232 of the last Code (O XXI r 16), the transferee of a decree could not obtain execution without notice to the judgment debtor and where the judgment debtor was dead no such notice could be sent until his representatives were brought on record. There was nothing, it was held in that section to prohibit the transferee from applying under the former section corresponding with this rule (8).

turned out that the defendant had died before the presentation of the plaint, the Court had no jurisdiction to substitute the representatives of the deceased as defendants and allow the suit to proceed as against them (1)

"Right to sue does not survive"—In a suit for redemption against two defendants, the second being the sub mortgagee of the first, on the death of the first, held on a second appeal that no cause of action survived to the plaintiff against the second defendant and the suit had abated although the suit had been allowed to proceed against the second defendant (2)

"Legal representative of the deceased defendant"—In an appeal by contributories against an order dismissing with costs an application against certain officers of a company under sect 214 of the Indian Companies Act 1882, on the death of one of the respondents his legal representatives cannot be brought on the record in his place in view of Explanation 2 to such section (4) A Hindu defendant died, leaving a will of which no probate was taken and his property came into the possession of his divided brothers who were brought on the record as representatives and a decree for the plaintiff made by consent The mother of the deceased who apart from the will was the legal representative sued to set aside decree having previously obtained a declaration that she was entitled to the property as against the brothers held she was not entitled to maintain the suit as the persons in possession were the proper representatives and the defendant could prove the will to show that she was not the representative (5) See also the notes to r 1 under "Legal representative"

"To be made a party"—Though the Court is bound to place on the record the person named by the plaintiff yet it was held that (acting under sect 32 of the last Code) it could also add the name of any person who had a good prima facie claim to be considered the legal representative of the deceased (6) This section as amended by Act VII of 1888 allowed the legal representative of the defendant to apply, and now the Court may proceed "on an application by either side, so the question of the applicability of that or the corresponding section has now little practical value, vide post In a recent case under the last Code it was pointed out that sect 368 (now represented by this rule) did not lay on the Court the duty of choosing the representative but that it was for the plaintiff to choose against whom he proposed to proceed, and that if some one else with an adverse claim to the nominee wished to be made the representative he should be added as a party (7)

"And shall proceed"—A person whom the plaintiff alleges is the legal representative of a deceased defendant being brought on the record, the decree will bind the estate of the defendant in the absence of fraud on the part of the plaintiff (1) Where the sole defendant died before decree, a decree passed against him on the supposition he was alive could not, it was held, be executed (2) So an appeal dismissed in ignorance of the death of the respondent who had lost in the first Court must be heard de novo after revival (3)

"The suit shall abate"—This applies to proceedings on appeal (4) So when two of the four appellants appeal through a guardian and the respondent dies and the appeal abates, no application for revival being made, the minors cannot apply to revive through another guardian (5) Where one of four respondents died and no application to revive was made within six months, the appeal being one for the possession of land to which the four respondents claimed to be jointly entitled and in which the right to appeal did not survive against the surviving respondents alone, abated, (6) but where the liabilities of the respondents are joint and several, the death of respondents without revival cannot exonerate the others from liability, and the appeal abates only so far as the deceased respondent is concerned (7) and where no application is made to revive, an appeal abates only against the respondents who have died (8) So on second appeal where two respondents died and no application was made to revive, the appeal did not abate (9) An appeal does not abate by reason of the failure of an appellant to bring on record the representatives of a deceased respondent if the appeal can proceed in the absence of such representative to a final and complete adjudication (10) On the contrary, where the decree could not be reversed without the representatives of the deceased being placed on the record, the appeal was held to abate (11) Again, in a mortgage suit where the second defendant was merely a surety personally, and on his death no application was made to revive held the plaintiff was not precluded from continuing the suit against the mortgagor and that the suit did not abate (12) An order for abatement was held to be absolute (13) The former Code provided that the suit should abate unless the plaintiff satisfied the sufficient cause for the delay under this section and that the case came under sect 32 of the last Code (1) Some Courts were wont to take a strict view of what was "sufficient cause," excluding a plea of ignorance of the law It was found by experience that a number of suits and appeals had been held to abate somewhat unfairly through the ignorance of suitors and appellants as to the fact of the decease of a party and as to the procedure necessary in such a case It was proposed, therefore, to amend this rule so as to enable the Court in its discretion to allow the plaintiff in a suit to apply to add the name of the legal representative of a deceased defendant at any time before the passing of the decree But this has not been done, is possibly it was considered that sect 5 of the Limitation Act as applied by r 9, met the case

Legal representative of a deceased defendant may apply—Before the amendment made by sect 32 of Act VII of 1888 it was held that the Court could not act save on the application of the plaintiff or appellant,(2) and the representative of a sole defendant could not apply to be made defendant,(3) unless the application came within sect 372 (now r 10) (4) The legal representative can apply under this rule (see sect 146) If there be two claimants the Court should decide between them and not put both on the record (5) Where a party defended a suit on alternative defences his legal representative may rely on either (6)

Limitation—An application to have the legal representative of a defendant plaintiff respondent or defendant respondent placed on the record must be made within six months from the death of the deceased (7) In a recent case it has been held that sect 5 of the Limitation Act does not apply to an application under this rule, and that where such an application is made after time the suit or appeal must be declared to have abated, and the remedy for the plaintiff or appellant is to proceed under r 9 of this Order (8)

Appeals—An order of abatement under the penultimate clause of the last Code was held to be an order and not a decree and appealable under sect 588 of that Code (9) See now O XLIII r 1

"Such question shall be determined."—Under the last Code it was held that the adverse claimants to represent a deceased party must not be brought on the record, but the Court should follow one or other of the procedures laid down in the section (6) And that if the heirship was not established the Court cannot dismiss the suit but should stay it (7) The Court must now determine the question, vide ante, "Applicability" It is irregular to make two adverse claimants co plaintiffs, but the defect may be cured by the consent of the parties (8) Two rival claimants should not be placed on the record, and after the hearing, their claims decided in the final decree (9) The Court has not to decide who is the heir of the deceased plaintiff, but who shall be admitted to be such legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit (10) The appointing of a legal representative for such purpose does not determine any issue properly raised, such for instance as, in a partition suit, the vital issue whether the deceased plaintiff was joint or separate from the rest of the family (11)

"The Court"—This must be the Court trying the suit A District Judge has no power to act under the section when the cause is before a Subordinate Judge although the latter may not be in Court on the day of the application (12)

6. Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing rules, whether the cause of action survives or not, there shall be no abatement by reason of the death of either party between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, but judgment may in such case be pronounced notwithstanding the death and shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place.

Death of party after hearing—This is new. It was considered that the legal effect of proceedings taken in ignorance of the death of a party was uncertain, and it has therefore been enacted that the mere circumstance of a death among the parties does not invalidate judicial action. The English practice has been followed as to the validity of a judgment where a party has died between the conclusion of the hearing and the delivery of the decision (1). The death of a plaintiff before hearing does not justify a dismissal of the suit for default of appearance under O 9, r 8 (2).

7. (1) The marriage of a female plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate, but the suit may notwithstanding be proceeded with to judgment, and, where the decree is against a female defendant, it may be executed against her alone.

(2) Where the husband is by law liable for the debts of his wife, the decree may, with the permission of the Court, be executed against the husband also, and, in case of judgment for the wife, execution of the decree may, with such permission, be issued upon the application of the husband, where the husband is by law entitled to the subject-matter of the decree.

Husband and wife—This section corresponded with sect. 10 of Act VIII of 1859 save for slight amendments made by Act X of 1877. It is the same now as in the last Code but for one verbal amendment. It applies to proceedings on appeal (3). Where a person died pending suit and his wife was brought on the record and judgment given against her which was affirmed on appeal and between the original and final judgment she married again the decree it was held could not be executed against the second husband (4).

(2) Where the assignee or receiver neglects or refuses to continue the suit and to give such security within the time so ordered, the defendant may apply for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the plaintiff's insolvency, and the Court may make an order dismissing the suit and awarding to the defendant the costs which he has incurred in defending the same to be proved as a debt against the plaintiff's estate

Insolvency—This rule corresponds with sect 106 of Act VIII of 1859 as modified by Act X of 1877, which (inter alia) extended the section to receivers appointed under sect 351 of the last Code, and substituted the last portion of the section as it now stands commencing from the words 'apply for the dismissal' The words "shall not cause the suit to abate" have been substituted for "shall not bar the suit," and an option is given as to taking security The rule applies to proceedings on appeal (1) It does not declare that the assignee shall be made a party to the suit as the Act does in the case of persons representing a deceased party The practice in India was to add or substitute the assignee's name, and he might be called upon to deposit the costs of an appeal, (2) but now the Official Assignee should give security before the order is made making him a party (3) The form of the order should be one giving the Official Assignee a time within which to elect and give security for costs If that is not done within the time specified the defendant may apply for dismissal (4) The defendant cannot plead abatement without giving the Official Assignee an opportunity of prosecuting the suit (5) This rule does not apply to a case where there has only been an application to declare the plaintiff an insolvent, and a vesting order has been made, but the proceedings are subsequently annulled and the plaintiff is not declared an insolvent (6) It only applies to the case of an insolvent plaintiff not to that of an insolvent defendant The Assignee has no power to continue the defence of a suit pending at the time the vesting order was made or to get himself made a party to a suit with a view of moving for a new trial or for any other purpose whatsoever He may apply to stay the suit under sect 13 of the Indian Insolvent Act (7)

(2) The plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or the assignee or the receiver in the case of an insolvent plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal; and if it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.

(3) The provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation [s. Act, 1877,(1) shall apply to applications under sub rule (2).

Effect of abatement or dismissal.—This rule corresponds with sect 371 of Act X of 1877, save that the word “or” between “deceased” and “bankrupt” (subsequently “insolvent”) was inserted by Act XII of 1879. The present amendments are verbal only. Sect 372A has, however, been introduced into the rule as sub rule (3).

This rule applies to proceedings on appeal (2). Before the amendment of sects 368 and 370 of the last Code it was thought the corresponding section referred only to orders passed under the last paragraph of sect 368 and the second paragraph of sect 370 of that Code (3). This opinion, however, which was obiter, was no longer correct after the amendment, for sect 370 of the last Code as amended had no provision for abatement and under sect 368 as amended the abatement was under the penultimate clause, while the first clause of sect 366 also provided for abatement and to such orders of abatement this section was applicable (4). The former section was not applicable to an application by a plaintiff when the defendant is dead, and his representatives ought to have been brought in, (5) nor to a case where a plaintiff who after obtaining an order for substitution of the representative of the deceased defendant and issue of summons, took no steps, and the suit was dismissed (6).

Practice—A Court may make an order for abatement under r 3 (formerly sect 366), and then revive the suit under this rule, (7) and the order for abatement may be coupled with an order under this rule (8). When applications for abatement and for revival were set down for hearing together, the proper order to pass was held to be to declare the suit to have abated and then at once to pass an order under this section on sufficient cause being shown (9). The cause of action in the original and revived suits must be the same, no fresh cause of action can be imported into the revived suit (10).

sole appellant (1) No appeal, however, lay from an order allowing a defendant's objections, neither was such an order a decree (2) See now O XLIII r 1 (i) An appeal lies under the Letters Patent from an order dismissing on its merits an application by the assignee of the plaintiff to be added or substituted (3) An appeal was also held to lie from an order dismissing any application under the former section to be brought upon the record as representative of a deceased party in a case in which a decree under sect 86 of Act IV of 1882 had been passed, such order being one under sect 244 of the last Code, and therefore a decree within the meaning of sect 2 of that Code (4) And wherever a matter can be said to fall within sect 47, ante, the order as a decree will be appealable An application by a respondent, whose interest was at one time represented by a receiver, to replace upon the record of the appeal as a party respondent the name of such receiver, which had been struck off owing to a misrepresentation of fact, may be treated as an application for review of the order striking off the name of the receiver (5)

11. In the application of this Order to appeals, so far as Application of Order to appeals may be, the word "plaintiff" shall be held to include an appellant, the word "defendant" a respondent, and the word "suit" an appeal

Appeals—This, with some alterations, is the second portion of sect 582 of the last Code, the first portion of which is the second clause of sect 107, ante to the notes of which section reference should be made Where in a personal action for an injunction a decree was given for the defendant with costs and the plaintiff appealed, but during the pendency of the appeal the defendant respondent died, it was held that the right to prosecute the appeal against his legal representative did not survive (6)

12 (1) Nothing in rules 3, 4, and 5 shall apply to proceedings Application of Order in execution of a decree or order to proceedings

Miscellaneous proceedings—As has been already observed in the notes to the preceding rules the opinion was generally entertained under the last Code that the Chapter which this Order replaces did not apply to the execution of decrees The original bill, therefore, proposed to except all execution proceedings from the operation of this Chapter On revision, however, it was considered that only the actions expressly mentioned should not apply to such proceedings, and that otherwise the provisions of the Order should be made equally applicable to suits and to proceedings other than suits (7)

ORDER XXIII.

Withdrawal and Adjustment of Suits.

1. (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

Withdrawal of suit or abandonment of part of claim

(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim

(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub-rule (2), he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim

(4) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others.

Withdrawal of suit.—Sub rule (1) is new, save for the first line, which follows the wording used since sect 373 of Act X of 1877. Prior to that it was “at any time before final judgment,” such being the terms of sect 97 of Act VIII of 1859. Sub rule (2) originated in sect 97 of Act VIII of 1859. Sect 373 of Act X of 1877 added the words, “that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect,” “or to abandon part of his claim,” “or for the part so abandoned.” These last words were altered to “or in respect of the part so abandoned” by Act XII of 1879. The present Code has substituted “allowing the plaintiff to institute” for “permitting him to bring,” and made the other alterations noted in italics. It is omitted after the words “on such terms” the words “as to costs” that the defence was such that the suit must fail (1) It has been held that while it is impossible to lay down any exhaustive definition of "sufficient grounds" within the meaning of this rule, it may be generally said that the Court should not allow withdrawal of suit after the parties are ready for trial if it would obviously prejudice the defendant (2)

"With liberty to institute a fresh suit"—This does not prevent the Court, when such fresh suit is brought, from entering into the question of res judicata, (3) but a suit is not barred by the principle of res judicata because in the former suit after evidence had been recorded but before judgment liberty to bring a fresh suit had been granted (4) Courts in India have not the power to make a decree of non suit So where in a suit for enforcement of a hypothecation against immoveable property it was dismissed, in the form in which it was brought, on the ground that the plaintiff having purchased a part, could not sue for the whole of his claim against the rest of the property with permission to bring a fresh suit it was held that such permission ought not to have been granted (5) In a decree wholly dismissing a suit for possession on the ground that the plaintiff had only made out his claim to one third of the property claimed, the liberty given to bring a fresh suit for possession of the one third was a nullity and the claim was res judicata in a suit brought in pursuance of the liberty (6) If the permission through inadvertence be not recorded the omission may be rectified on review (7) The procedure provided in this Order is not the only manner in which a plaintiff can come to Court a second time for adjudication upon the merits of his rights (8) Imitation applies to the second suit as if it was the first (9)

"May grant"—The order should not be for the dismissal of the suit but in terms of this rule (10) The proper order is one which limits the time in which the payment should be made and which goes on to direct that on failure to pay within that time the original suit is dismissed with costs (11) Apart from this rule the Courts in this country have no power to dismiss a suit and give a plaintiff leave to bring a fresh suit on the same matter (12) It has been held that the dismissal of a suit in the form it was brought does not amount to permission to sue again (13) but this has been disented from (14) If the defendant has appeared this order cannot be made ex parte (15) but must be made on notice to him (1) The effect of the order is to leave matters as if no suit had been instituted, and O II r 2 will not debar the plaintiff from seeking relief he did not include in his first suit (2) Where the order was made so as to enable the plaintiff in the first suit to include a portion of his claim omitted in the original suit and such fresh suit was brought, it was held that the additional portion was not barred by sect 7 of Act VIII of 1859 (3) Where an Appellate Court, instead of deciding upon an appeal, refers the appellant to a fresh suit, the order whether right or wrong if accepted by the parties, is binding upon them (4) A Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act, in the exercise of his revisional powers, cannot do so no such application having been made to the Lower Court (5)

"On such terms"—The only case in which a Court may enforce a condition, eg that the payment of costs be a condition precedent to withdrawal, upon a plaintiff who seeks to withdraw is where the plaintiff asks not only to withdraw but also liberty to bring a fresh suit (7) The order that the plaintiff should pay the defendant's costs is almost if not quite, a matter of course, and an Appellate Court will not interfere with such an order (8) The plaintiff had to pay the costs incurred by the defendant where he caused the defendant's arrest before judgment and then applied for withdrawal under this rule (9) If the liberty be to bring a fresh suit on payment of costs a subsequent suit is not void ab initio if the costs are not paid before its institution and subsequent payment cures the irregularity (10) But if the order be that the costs be paid within a specified time and that is not done the withdrawal must be taken to be without permission, (11) though the Court has power to extend the time for payment when it is absolutely impossible for the party to pay such costs before the day fixed (12) In a recent case where permission to withdraw a suit on payment of costs with liberty to institute another had been granted, but the subsequent suit was brought before the costs had been paid it was held that it was barred because the former suit was still pending, but that on a later payment of the costs the withdrawal became complete (13)

with the sanction of the Court upon a misapprehension of material facts,(1) or where a compromise in which an infant was concerned was made without the sanction of the Court,(2) or on the ground that the compromise was obtained upon a misrepresentation of the facts, the compromise would be set aside,(3) and a decree embodying unlawful terms of a compromise, e g, the sale, as being against public policy, of an office attached to a temple involving services of a personal nature and entitling the holder to receive emoluments, is inoperative and will not be enforced,(4) so a decree made on a compromise entered into behind the back of a defendant and to which she is not a party is a nullity as against her (5) For grounds on which a compromise may be set aside, see case cited (6) In England it was held that the question whether a compromise was invalid ought to have been made the subject of a new action, but having been tried without objection as a motion the objection could not be raised on appeal (7) In India it may be set aside either by suit or by way of review, but preferably by review (8) It cannot be set aside on a motion on the ground of fraud,(9) nor can the question as to whether the compromise is valid be gone into on an appeal from the consent decree (10) The effect of setting aside a compromise is to remit both parties to their original rights (11) When a consent decree by A against B and C is set aside by a decree in a suit by B against A so far as it affected their rights, such decree does not reserve the consent decree so as to entitle A to have his suit restored and reheard on its merits (12) If the compromise does not give the plaintiff any of the reliefs claimed in the suit but deals with the matters not the subject matter of the suit, no decree can be made (13) And a Court is not bound to enforce a compromise which goes beyond the suit It may refuse to do so but it cannot modify it (14) If the compromise goes beyond the scope of the suit the decree should be passed for so much as relates to relief which the Court could give in the suit (15) So where the compromise was an agreement to refer the matter in suit to arbitration, and the award made thereon dealt with additional matter, the award could only be recorded as far as it related to the suit (16) But by consent of the parties and the leave of the Court a suit may be amended so as to cover an increased claim, and there is nothing in the law which prevents the parties to a suit enlarging by consent or compromise the original claim and settling or allowing a decree for a greater amount of money or land than that originally asked for (1) Where a compromise goes beyond the subject matter of the suit, and a decree is made on the basis of the compromise, although the decree in respect of the surplusage cannot be executed (2) the defendant is bound by its terms if he benefited therefrom The Madras High Court have, however, held that a decree passed in terms of a compromise entered into between parties and comprising therein reliefs not covered by the suit, is yet enforceable in execution, provided that there is nothing unlawful about the terms though the decree itself as drafted might have been objected to on an appeal therefrom (3) The decree passed on a compromise cannot be regarded as ultra vires simply because it goes beyond the subject matter of the suit and contains other conditions If such other considerations are the considerations for the compromise they must be incorporated in the decree, if they are independent they may be regarded as surplusage (4) But where the suit was for money, and the defendant agreed to his property being charged as a term of the compromise, it was held a decree could be made embodying the charge (5) If the compromise affected matters outside the suit, and it was agreed that if one party failed to carry that portion out the other could sue in respect thereof the section does not prevent the same being enforced by suit (6) The language of the section is wide and general and does not preclude parties from settling their disputes on such lawful terms as they might agree to without being restricted to such relief as one only of the parties had chosen to claim in the plaint In a suit for money where the plaint asked for a simple money decree an agreement that the amount decreed should be a charge on certain properties was held to be both lawful and to relate to the suit (7) When by unregistered documents a compromise going beyond the scope of the suit was affected but only such portion as related to the suit recorded and decreed that portion required no registration and the finding thereon was res judicata and if the decree had referred to or narrated the other terms of compromise it would have been judicial evidence of that portion of the compromise (8) But an agreement outside the scope of the suit although incorporated in the decree does not operate as res judicata (9) When a consent decree was passed in terms of compromise with a reservation that only the property claimed in the suit could be obtained in execution a subsequent suit in respect of other property dealt with in the compromise based upon both title and the compromise was not barred by this rule or by O II

r 2 (1) The object of judicial sanction to a compromise entered into by the parties to a suit where one of them is an infant is to safeguard the interests of the minor before the Court. An objection that a minor son in a Mitakshara family was not made a party to a suit in which his father as karta or manager of the family was a party, and that such minor was in consequence deprived of the protection which he would have enjoyed by reason of a judicial sanction of the compromise, is not by itself sufficient to make the compromise inoperative against him. Unless it is shown that the minor has been prejudiced, he cannot successfully impugn the decree. (2) The difference between a consent decree declaring the agreement of the parties and the agreement of parties themselves, when the one or the other is sought to be afterwards enforced, goes no further than this, that in the former case it would not be open to a party to question the accuracy of the decree, as expressing what at the time was the contract which had been made. (3)

Appeal—An appeal lies against an order on a dispute as to whether a compromise had been arrived at, the alleged compromise being impeached as not being lawful. (4) Where the decree recorded a compromise going beyond the scope of the suit an appeal lies, and on appeal the decree should be modified so as to include only such portion of the compromise as relates to relief which the Court could have given in the suit. (5) See now O XXIII r 1 (m).

4. Nothing in this Order shall apply to any proceedings in execution of a decree or order. Proceedings in execution of decrees not affected.

ORDER XXIV.

Payment into Court.

1. The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or [s] damages may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.

Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim.

2. Notice of the deposit shall be given through the Court [s] by the defendant to the plaintiff, and the amount of the deposit shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid to the plaintiff on his application.

Notice of deposit.

3. No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum [s] deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited is in full of the claim or falls short thereof.

Interest on deposit not allowed to plaintiff after notice.

4. (1) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satis- [s] faction in part only of his claim, he may prosecute his suit for the balance, and, if the Court decides that the deposit by the defendant was a full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff shall pay the costs of the suit incurred after the deposit and the costs incurred previous thereto, so far as they were caused by excess in the plaintiff's claim.

Procedure where plaintiff accepts deposit as satisfaction in part.

(2) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in full of his claim, he shall present to the Court a statement to that effect, and such statement shall be filed and the Court shall pronounce judgment accordingly; and, in directing by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, the Court shall consider which of the parties is most to blame for the litigation.

r 2 (1) The object of judicial sanction to a compromise entered into by the parties to a suit where one of them is an infant is to safeguard the interests of the minor before the Court. An objection that a minor son in a Mitakshara family was not made a party to a suit in which his father as karta or manager of the family was a party, and that such minor was in consequence deprived of the protection which he would have enjoyed by reason of a judicial sanction of the compromise is not by itself sufficient to make the compromise inoperative against him. Unless it is shown that the minor has been prejudiced, he cannot successfully impugn the decree (2) The difference between a consent decree declaring the agreement of the parties and the agreement of parties themselves, when the one or the other is sought to be afterwards enforced, goes no further than this, that in the former case it would not be open to a party to question the accuracy of the decree, as expressing what at the time was the contract which had been made (3)

Appeal—An appeal lies against an order on a dispute as to whether a compromise had been arrived at, the alleged compromise being impeached as not being lawful (4) Where the decree recorded a compromise going beyond the scope of the suit an appeal lies, and on appeal the decree should be modified so as to include only such portion of the compromise as relates to relief which the Court could have given in the suit (5) See now O XLIII r 1 (m)

A.1 4. Nothing in this Order shall apply to any proceedings in execution of decrees not affected.

Payment into Court.

1. The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or [s] damages may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.
Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim.
2. Notice of the deposit shall be given through the Court [s] by the defendant to the plaintiff, and the amount of the deposit shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid to the plaintiff on his application.
Notice of deposit.
3. No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum [s] deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited is in full of the claim or falls short thereof.
Interest on deposit not allowed to plaintiff after notice.
4. (1) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in part only of his claim, he may prosecute his suit for the balance, and, if the Court decides that the deposit by the defendant was a full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff shall pay the costs of the suit incurred after the deposit and the costs incurred previous thereto, so far as they were caused by excess in the plaintiff's claim.
Procedure where plaintiff accepts deposit as satisfaction in part.
(2) Where the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in full of his claim, he shall present to the Court a statement to that effect, and such statement shall be filed and the Court shall pronounce judgment accordingly, and, in directing by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, the Court shall consider which of the parties is most to blame for the litigation.
Procedure where he accepts it as satisfaction in full.

ORDER XXV.

Security for Costs.

01 1. (1) Where, at any stage of a suit, it appears to the
When security for costs may be required from plaintiff. Court that a sole plaintiff is, or (when there are more plaintiffs than one) that all the plaintiffs are, residing out of British India, and that such plaintiff does not, or that no one of such plaintiffs does, possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property in suit, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any defendant, order the plaintiff or plaintiffs, within a time fixed by it, to give security for the payment of all costs incurred and likely to be incurred by any defendant.

21 (2) Whoever leaves British India under such circumstances
Residence out of British India. as to afford reasonable probability that he will not be forthcoming whenever he may be called upon to pay costs shall be deemed to be residing out of British India within the meaning of sub rule (1)

01 (3) On the application of any defendant in a suit for the payment of money, in which the plaintiff is a woman, the Court may at any stage of the suit make a like order if it is satisfied that such plaintiff does not possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India.

1, 2 Effect of failure to furnish security. 2 (1) In the event of such security not being furnished within the time fixed, the Court shall make an order dismissing the suit unless the plaintiff or plaintiffs are permitted to withdraw therefrom

(2) Where a suit is dismissed under this rule, the plaintiff may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from furnishing the security within the time allowed the Court shall set aside the dismissal upon such terms as to security, costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

(3) The dismissal shall not be set aside unless notice of such application has been served on the defendant

"Residing," r. 1, sub rule (1).—As to the meaning of this word, see notes to sect. 2, ante. The meaning of the term depends upon the intention of the Legislature in framing the particular provision in which the word is used. The term here means residence under such circumstances as will afford a reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be forthcoming when the suit is decided. Each case must therefore depend on its particular circumstances (1). A person who leaves British India under the circumstances mentioned in r. 1, sub rule (2), is deemed to be residing out of British India.

"British India."—As to the meaning of this term, see notes to sect. 1, ante. As the residence must be out of British India a plaintiff who resides in another Province or Presidency of British territory cannot be called on to give security (2). An inhabitant of foreign territory such as Hull Tippera, must give security even though the defendant is also a resident in foreign territory (3). The British cantonment of Secunderabad was held to be out of, (4) and the cantonment of Wadhwan within (5) British India.

"May."—The exercise of the power conferred on the Court is not imperative but discretionary to be exercised according to the circumstances of each case, (6) and the Court will not order a plaintiff to give security unless grounds are shown tending to show that the defence is true, (7) or that the suit is not a bona fide one, (8) and it appears that the exercise of the power is necessary for the reasonable protection of the defendant (9).

"Leaves British India," r. 1, sub rule (2).—When a plaintiff leaves British India before the case is decided the defendant should apply to the Court under sub rule (1) to take security for costs (10) and then unless there is a reasonable probability that he will be forthcoming whenever he may be called on to pay costs, or, that he has sufficient immoveable property in British India to meet them he must give security. If no security is furnished judgment will be passed against the plaintiff by default. But when a case has gone to judgment without such application the Appellate Court cannot pass any order as to the costs in the first Court (11). As to security in the case of appeals, see O XLI r. 10, post.

It was queried whether he could do so if he were plaintiff in the subsequent suit (2). a commission on the chance of deriving benefit from it, the Court should ordinarily not prevent his doing so, though it should take care to see that the party does not use the late issue of process as an excuse for delaying the final hearing of the case, (1) and a commission has been allowed where the cause was on the peremptory board of the day, where the issuing of it was not calculated to prejudice the defendant or subject him to loss or inconvenience (2) As to expenses and costs of issuing commission, see r 15, post

6. Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto

Court to examine witness pursuant to commission

Examination of witness—The parties should appear before the Commissioner in person, or by agent or pleader (r 18) It is the duty of the party obtaining a commission for the examination of witnesses to take all such steps as are necessary to secure their attendance before the Commissioner (3) As to the latter's powers in this and other respects, see r 17 post If one party obtains a commission and the other joins in it the latter is entitled to examine his own witnesses, but he may cross examine his opponent's witnesses without joining (4) In Calcutta the examination and cross examination is by counsel and not by attorney the examination of witnesses under a commission being of the same nature as an examination in open Court (5) The examination may either be ex vivo or by interrogatories (6) commission, though the time within which a commission must be executed may be enlarged on application from time to time. The evidence must be taken within the time allowed. Where a Commissioner took evidence after the last return day had expired it was held that the depositions were inadmissible (1). The return should show on the face of it that the Commissioner had administered the oath to himself and the interpreter, if any (2). Documents attached to the return of a commission and identified with the documents referred to in the evidence may be read at the hearing of the suit in which the commission issued, unless they have been objected to on being tendered in evidence before the Commissioner. Objection to the inadmissibility of such documents should be taken before the Commissioner (3).

8. Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless—

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorizes the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same.

Reading of commission.—The last rule provides that the commission shall form part of the record. On this ground it has been considered that before it is tendered in evidence by the party at whose instance the commission is used the other party is entitled to refer to it without putting it in evidence (1). This is the practice of the Courts in the Mofussil (5). But according to the practice prevailing on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, the party obtaining the commission tenders it in evidence. If he does not the opposite party may do so. Until evidence taken on commission is tendered and has been admitted as evidence taken on commission is tendered and has been admitted as evidence taken in the suit, neither party has the right to make use of it (1) Scmble, that the mere fact that a deposition was not read and signed in the usual course would not by itself prevent the reception of the evidence (2) Where a commission was returned after the witness had been in part, but before he had been fully, cross examined it was held to be inadmissible (3) Unless there is consent the Court may refuse to hear evidence taken by commission, unless the circumstances mentioned in clause (a) are shown to exist at the time of trial (4) But the Court may dispense with proof under clause (b) And where it appears from the deposition itself that the person was examined outside the jurisdiction, that is sufficient (5) Clause (a) supplies with reference to r 4 an omission in the former Code

Commissions for local investigations

9. In any suit in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market-value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits or damages or annual net profits, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court:

Provided that, where the Local Government has made rules as to the persons to whom such commission shall be issued, the Court shall be bound by such rules

“Requisite or proper”—The Judge should not delegate to a Commissioner functions which he can and should discharge himself He cannot depute a Commissioner to inquire into that which can with equal convenience be proved in Court (6) He cannot direct him to take evidence which the Court can take, or decide points which the Court can and should decide, such as the trial of the most important issues of fact in a case, (7) deputing, in effect, the decision of the case to the Ameen, (8) as where an Ameen was deputed in a case of disputed boundary, the issue turning chiefly on possession before the date of suit (9)

It is of the utmost importance that witnesses should be examined in open Court, and by the Court itself. Ameens or other Commissioners must not be made the real Judges of important questions of law and fact, which it is the duty of the Court itself to determine. Local investigations ought to be restricted to points which really require some local inspection for their elucidation. Witnesses therefore cannot be examined out of Court, except with reference to points for the determination of which local inspection is required (1). An Ameen should be appointed to hold a local investigation only when it is necessary to inspect the land, to make maps, to obtain information with regard to physical features, to identify land in maps with parcels which are the subject of suit, to identify maps with one another with the aid of objects to be found on the land. For these and similar purposes an Ameen may examine witnesses when the evidence which they have to give is of such a nature that it ought to be taken by him on the spot. Where, however, any fact can be proved by evidence taken otherwise than on the spot it should be taken in Court (2). In short, the local investigation referred to in this rule presupposes the existence on the record of independent evidence which requires to be elucidated, and that rule does not authorize a Court to delegate to a Commissioner the trial of any material issue which it is bound to try (3). The last Code after the words "net profits," ran "and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person." These words, it was held, showed that when a Judge could conveniently conduct a local investigation in person he should do so. The information so derived by him was a matter which, of course, he could take into his consideration in deciding the case (4). But it was considered desirable that he should put the result on record so that the parties might see what he considered established (5). Though a Judge might view a spot he could not, in a case where the issue was whether two persons were man and wife, go himself to the village where the parties lived in order that he might make inquiries amongst their neighbours. He should in such case, summon witnesses and examine them in Court (6). These words have now been omitted. And it has been recently held that the omission of these words indicates that a Judge should only make a local investigation where it is necessary for the purpose of understanding the evidence, and should not do so for the purpose of gathering information to be used for his judgment, for if additional information is required his proper course is to appoint a Commissioner whose report can be used in evidence and who can be examined as a witness (7).

"May issue"—The Judge has a discretion which must be judicially exercised to grant or refuse a local investigation. A local investigation is not imperative in every case and a Judge is not bound to issue a commission of his own motion (1) Though the propriety of the order may, under sect 105, be questioned in regular appeal, it cannot be made the subject of direct or special appeal (2) When a Judge has ordered a fresh local investigation, his successor should not interfere with the order, but carry it out before disposing of the case, (3) nor where one inquiry has been carried on, should a second issue for the same purpose without setting aside the first (4) If the Court considers it necessary to order an inquiry, such an inquiry cannot be left to be made after decree (5)

"Such person"—Subject to the Proviso, any person whom the Court thinks fit may be appointed A Munsif may be appointed Commissioner (6) The section itself, however, does not now require that an officer of Government should be appointed (7) But a Judge should not order a Subordinate Judge, whose judgment is before him on appeal, to go and inspect the locality and make a report A Judge from whose decision an appeal is pending, is the most unsuitable person to make such investigation (8)

"To make such investigation"—A Commissioner is bound not to go beyond the points referred to him for inquiry (9) Where a Commissioner was only appointed to draw a map and no power was given to him to take evidence, statements of persons recorded by him were held not to be evidence, and ought not to have been looked at by the Judge (10) Notice should be given to the parties of the time when the local investigation will be held (11)

(.) Where the Court is for any reason dissatisfied with the proceedings of the Commissioner, it may direct such further inquiry to be made as it shall think fit

Procedure—A day should be fixed for the return of the report, and then for hearing objections to it (1) The report and evidence are filed, and become part of the record (vide post, "Shall be evidence") The evidence without the report is not evidence in the suit It may be, however, that oral testimony may not be necessary, as where a Commissioner is simply deputed to make a measurement, and it is not necessary that the report must have depositions attached to it to make it legal evidence (2) though, if there be depositions, these cannot go in without the report The latter cannot be rejected because the Ameen's remuneration has not been paid (3) The Court considers the report and evidence taken, subject, of course, to any objections that may be taken to them by either party along with the other evidence on the record, (4) and may examine the Commissioner and take further evidence, as to which see post While the report may be looked to to explain a map, (5) the Court should not question the correctness of a map attached to a report which is not impugned by either party (6)

“Shall be evidence”—The report and evidence if the investigation is completed, (7) is evidence upon whatever materials it is based though, of course it will have more or less weight according as the basis of it is more or less reasonable and valid (8) and although the Court may have exercised its discretion unwisely and wrongly in ordering an inquiry or in giving the Commissioner too extensive powers (9) but not if the proceeding is without jurisdiction (10) The Court is not bound by the report, but may inquire further into the matter if there is any necessity for so doing. The report is for the assistance of the Court and is part only of the evidence, and other evidence may be received to explain it or show that it was wrong (11) The Court is at liberty to adopt a portion of the report and reject the rest (12) The report is sufficient evidence to support a decree if it is believed by the Court and considered sufficient without further

Examination of Commissioner.—The Commissioner may be examined in person. This provision, it has been said, was probably considered necessary because an Ameen is something like an arbitrator, and it may have been thought that he could not be examined as to his proceedings (3). In a recent case it was said that the object of this provision was to protect the Commissioner (who is a quasi judicial officer) on grounds of public policy from vexatious examination by either party, and it was held that a Court cannot arbitrarily withhold permission to examine a Commissioner for accounts asked by a party (4). Charges against the Commissioner ought to be fully inquired into (5). This and the last rule do not contemplate the tender of further evidence after the report, except the examination of the Commissioner himself, but they do not forbid it. They are consistent with either course, and the point must be decided on general principles according to the facts of each case (6). Sub rule (3) as to further inquiry is new.

Appellate Court.—The report must be taken into consideration by the Appellate Court, even though it may be of opinion that local investigation should not have been made (7). If the Court finds the report deficient in any point it can send for the Commissioner and examine him (8). An Appellate Court ought not to interfere with the result of a local inquiry except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds, which must be expressed in its judgment (9). On the other hand, the report should not be made the basis of a judgment to the total disregard of the other evidence on the record (10).

Commissions to examine accounts

11. In any suit in which an examination or adjustment of accounts is necessary, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such examination or adjustment.

Accounts—These and the next rule correspond with sects 180 and 181 of the Code of 1859, which in their essentials are the same as the present law (1) A Court may issue a commission under r 11 without the consent of parties, (2) but where the reference had been made by consent, it was, under the circumstances of the case last cited, regarded as made on an agreement that the Commissioner should decide the questions of fact referred to him reserving questions of law to be disposed of by the Court (3) As to the proceedings on the commission, vide post Presidency High Courts on their Original Side have a procedure and officers of their own in and for the taking of accounts, and it has in consequence been held that the provisions of the Code relating to the adding of parties should be adapted cy pres to the requirements of the Court in its ordinary civil jurisdiction (4) A reference to the Registrar of the High Court has, however, been treated as having been made under the former section (5) The rule does not require that the Commissioner should be sworn or affirmed (6) A direction to a Commissioner to take accounts under these rules is not a preliminary decree (i)

"Necessary"—It was held where the plaintiff filed his books in Court and they were not impugned, that a commission should not have issued, but the plaintiff should have made up the account himself (8) Where there is objection and the items of objection are few in number, they may be disposed of in open Court. them it is necessary to enter upon complicated inquiries the proper course to pursue is to appoint a Commissioner. This course may properly be pursued in the first instance if the account required is not of such a nature as to render it probable that there will be no difficulty in dealing with the disputed items in Court (1)

Examination—The Court furnishes the Commissioner with such proceedings and instructions as are necessary (r 12). The Commissioner may examine the parties and any witnesses (2) which may be produced, and call for and examine documents relevant to the inquiry (r 16).

Proceedings—This includes both the evidence taken (3) and the Commissioner's report or opinion (4). A distinction is drawn in the second paragraph between the proceedings which may or may not be accompanied by a report of the Commissioner's opinion and the report. The section is now more clearly worded.

"Shall be evidence"—The Commissioner's proceedings are an inquiry for the information of the Court not a trial. His position is different from that of a Judge trying a cause. The proceedings which include his report when he is required to report, are under this section to be treated as merely evidence in the cause. If therefore he finds a fact his finding is only evidence of that fact but not a decision upon it. The report cannot be regarded as a judgment of a Court for standing by itself it is inoperative. It requires affirmance by an order of a Court to make it operative (5). It is only evidence if the Court is not dissatisfied with it. The section does not restrict the grounds of dissatisfaction (6). The Court must be satisfied with the proceedings before it adopts them. The Court will no doubt in all cases give due weight to the opinion of the Commissioner and the duty cast upon it of satisfying itself as to the proceedings is in practice modified to this extent that it is usual to confine the examination to those parts of them to which exception has been taken by the parties but the duty to that extent at all events remains and can only be discharged by such an examination as is sufficient for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the investigation has been conducted by the Commissioner fairly and in accordance with law (7).

Powers and duty of Appeal Court—The fact that the judgment of the Court of first instance is an affirmance of the report of a Commissioner, does not affect the powers of a Court of Appeal though when the case comes before the latter the situation is of course somewhat different. What has

It is only evidence if the Court is not dissatisfied with it. The section does not restrict the grounds of dissatisfaction (6). The Court must be satisfied with the proceedings before it adopts them. The Court will no doubt in all cases give due weight to the opinion of the Commissioner, and the duty cast upon it of satisfying itself as to the proceedings is in practice modified to this extent that it is usual to confine the examination to those parts of them to which exception has been taken by the parties, but the duty to that extent at all events remains, and can only be discharged by such an examination as is sufficient for the purpose of satisfying the Court that the investigation has been conducted by the Commissioner fairly and in accordance with law (7).

Powers and duty of Appeal Court.—The fact that the judgment of the Court of first instance is an affirmance of the report of a Commissioner, does not affect the powers of a Court of Appeal, though when the case comes before the latter the situation is, of course somewhat different. What has then to be dealt with is the decree of the Court below, and when this gives effect to the findings of the Commissioner, there is the added weight of the Judge's decision. But the duty of the Appellate Court is commensurate with that of the Court of first instance, and if it is dissatisfied with the proceedings in whole or in part, it is incumbent on it to do that which the Lower Court ought to have done, namely, to set them aside either wholly or partially, and send the matter back for such further inquiry as may be necessary (1). It is open to the Court of Appeal to deal with the report on matters of fact, and its powers are not limited any more than are those of the first Court to questions of principle when examining such report (2). In the first of the cases last cited, Maclean C.J. was of opinion that if there had been a fair investigation of the matter by the Registrar or Commissioner, and his finding had been confirmed, the Appeal Court ought not to interfere except on the strong ground of manifest error or manifest abuse (3).

Decree—In suits for partition of immoveable property not paying revenue to Government, the Court, if it has the information before it necessary to enable it to make a decree not only declaring the rights of the parties but actually fixing the particular areas, or rooms, or parts of the houses, as the case may be, of which possession is to be given to the parties respectively in partition, may make such a decree without employing the procedure of these rules, and the decree so made would be enforceable in execution, and possession of the respective areas, rooms, etc., could be given to the parties in execution of the decree (1) But where, as most generally happens, a Court has not the information necessary to the making of such a decree, it must make a preliminary or interlocutory decree of a declaratory nature, and then adopt the procedure of these rules by appointing a Commissioner, or Commissioners, whose duty will be, not to give possession, for at that period there would be no decree capable of execution by possession but who should allot such shares to the parties, award the sums to be paid in case sums are to be paid, and then prepare and sign a report appointing the shares and distinguishing such shares by metes and bounds, if ordered so to do (2) The Commissioner, or Commissioners, must then submit that report to the Court, and the Court, after giving the parties an opportunity of objecting (3) to the report, might under the last Code quash the report and proceedings of the Commissioner or Commissioners, and issue a new commission, or (where the Commissioners agreed) pass a decree in accordance with the report. The decree in accordance with such report would be a decree allotting the specific shares, areas, rooms, etc., distinguishing them where possible, by metes and bounds or other adequate description, and decreeing to the respective parties possession of those portions of the property allotted to them. In the latter case that would be the final decree. It is true that the interlocutory decree would be appealable, (4) but for all that it is not the final decree or the decree which is capable of execution, except possibly for such costs as it might award to be paid. It is merely of the character of an interlocutory and declaratory decree (5). It is only after a decree has been made by the Court expressing its approval of the partition scheme that there is any decree capable of execution as a partition decree (6). In a case which falls under the second of the above mentioned categories, the appointment of a Commissioner, whether he be the Amin of the Court or some one else, is not the issuing of a process in execution of a decree, nor are any proceedings of such Commissioner the carrying out of any process in execution. The time has not yet arrived for execution of the decree (7). Proceedings under this rule for the purpose of effecting partition are proceedings in the suit itself and not proceedings in execution of a decree (8).

The amendments in clause (2) and the addition of clause (3) replace the following words in the former section "either quash the same and issue a new commission or (where the Commissioners agree in their report) pass a decree in accordance therewith" The provisions are the same with this difference, that the Court has not now to pass a decree where the Commissioners agree, but has in every case power to confirm, vary, or set aside (1) The action of an Amin appointed under this rule in a partition suit to demarcate the shares assigned to the respective parties to the suit is not the executing of a process for enforcing the judgment within the meaning of article 164 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877 (2) An order passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the preliminary decree appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and therefore is not appealable under sect 47 It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided, and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree (3) Where in suits for partition, possession is sought of a definite share of a property consisting of a number of houses, the principle in such cases is, that if a property can be partitioned without destroying the intrinsic value of the whole property or of the shares, such partition ought to be made, but where partition cannot be made without destroying the intrinsic value of the property, then a money compensation should be given (4) The decree must be stamped (5)

Appeal.—An application for the appointment of a Commissioner was held not to be a matter coming within the scope of sect 244 (now 47), and therefore no appeal lay from an order made on such application (6)

General provisions

15. Before issuing any commission under this Order, the Court may order such sum (if any) as it thinks reasonable for the expenses of the commission to be, within a time to be fixed, paid into Court by the party at whose instance or for whose benefit the commission is issued.

Costs—Costs of a commission to take evidence was generally made costs in the cause, (7) and this has been done where a commission issued to examine a purdanashin at her own request (8) A Commissioner has no lien on a return of partition for his fees, and cannot refuse to give it up till they are paid (9)

While it is competent to a Court to require that a sum should be deposited, the omission to exercise this power does not debar a Commissioner from recovering his remuneration from the party at whose instance he was engaged (1) It has been held by the Madras High Court (2) that the Code does not authorize the dismissal of a suit on refusal or failure of a party to deposit the amount ordered under this section When after the issue of a commission it is found that the work is in excess of the amount paid in for the costs of the commission, and that the party at whose instance the commission was issued is not willing to pay, the only way in which the additional costs can be realized is by making the amount costs of the suit, and entering the same in the decree An order for depositing additional costs when not entered in the decree cannot be enforced (3)

16. Any Commissioner appointed under this Order may, unless otherwise directed by the order of appointment,—

- (a) examine the parties themselves and any witness whom they or any of them may produce, and any other person whom the Commissioner thinks proper to call upon to give evidence in the matter referred to him,
- (b) call for and examine documents and other things relevant to the subject of inquiry;
- (c) at any reasonable time enter upon or into any land or building mentioned in the order

Powers—A Commissioner has wide powers and discretion to inquire as he may into the matters referred to him for investigation (4) He is entitled to take evidence in the matter referred to him (5) Where instructions are given in the presence of both parties, and no objection is made by either then and there, they have no ground of complaint after the Commissioner has carried out his instructions, if the Court acts upon his report (6) He cannot, however go beyond the terms of the order appointing him (7)

(2) A Commissioner may apply to any Court (not being a High Court) within the local limits of whose jurisdiction a witness resides for the issue of any process which he may find it necessary to issue to or against such witness, and such Court may, in its discretion, issue such process as it considers reasonable and proper

Powers of Commissioner—A Commissioner was under the last Code vested with the powers of a Civil Court to summon witnesses and enforce their attendance under the provisions of the Code. But a private Commissioner, without the machinery of a Court, might find practical difficulty in enforcing the order. In a case in which a private Commissioner experienced difficulty in enforcing the attendance of witnesses before him, the Calcutta High Court directed the return of the commission and sent it under sect 386 (now r 4) to the Civil Court, within whose jurisdiction the witnesses resided (1). It has, therefore, been enacted that, as is already the practice in many places, a private commissioner may cause his processes to be executed through the Court having local jurisdiction where the witnesses reside. It has been held in Bombay, on the Original Side, that an attachment will issue to compel a party to obey an order made by a Commissioner upon the certificate of the Commissioner that such order has been made and disobeyed without in the first instance, making such order a rule of Court (2).

A party, refusing to appear before an Ameen at the time he holds his local investigation, is not at liberty afterwards to take any objection to his report (3). In the case of Eshan Chunder v Soorjo Lall, (4) it was held that where a plaintiff fails to appear before a Commissioner, and the defendant appears, the plaintiff is liable to have his suit dismissed with costs. 3. In suits by or against the Secretary of State for India
Plaints in suits by or against Government of the plaintiff or defendant, it shall be sufficient to insert the words "The Secretary of State for India in Council"

4. The Government pleader in any Court, or such other Agent for Government to receive process person as the Local Government may for any Court appoint in this behalf, shall be the agent of the Government for the purpose of receiving processes against the Secretary of State for India in Council issued by such Court.

5. The Court, in fixing the day for the Secretary of State Fixing of day for appearance on behalf of Government for India in Council to answer to the plaint, shall allow a reasonable time for the necessary communication with the Government through the proper channel, and for the issue of instructions to the Government pleader to appear and answer on behalf of the said Secretary of State for India in Council or the Government, and may extend the time at its discretion.

6. The Court may also, in any case in which the Government pleader is not accompanied by any person on the part of the Secretary of State for India in Council, who may be able to answer any material questions relating to the suit, direct the attendance of such a person.

Attendance of person able to answer questions relating to suit against Government.

7. (1) Where the defendant is a public officer and, on receiving the summons, considers it proper to make a reference to the Government before answering the plaint, he may apply to the Court to grant such extension of the time fixed in the summons as may be necessary to enable him to make such reference and to receive orders thereon through the proper channel.

Extension of time to enable public officer to make reference to Government.

(2) Upon such application the Court shall extend the time for so long as appears to it to be necessary

8. (1) Where the Government undertakes the defence of a suit against a public officer, the Government pleader, upon being furnished with authority to appear and answer the plaint, shall apply to the Court, and upon such application the Court shall cause a note of his authority to be entered in the register of civil suits

Procedure in suits against public officer

(2) Where no application under sub-rule (1) is made by the Government pleader on or before the day fixed in the notice for the defendant to appear and answer, the case shall proceed as in a suit between private parties

Provided that the defendant shall not be liable to arrest, nor his property to attachment, otherwise than in execution of a decree.

Government undertaking defence — This does not change the nature of the suit, which will continue as before. The suit is against the officer, and against him the decree, if any, must be passed (1)

ORDER XXVIII.

Suits by or against Military Men.

- 35] 1. (1) Where any officer or soldier actually serving the Government in a military capacity is a party to a suit, and cannot obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person, he may authorize any person to sue or defend in his stead.
- Officers or soldiers who cannot obtain leave may authorize any person to sue or defend for them.

(2) The authority shall be in writing and shall be signed by the officer or soldier in the presence of (a) his commanding officer, or the next subordinate officer, if the party is himself the commanding officer, or (b) where the officer or soldier is serving in military staff employment, the head or other superior officer of the office in which he is employed. Such commanding or other officer shall countersign the authority, which shall be filed in Court.

(3) When so filed the countersignature shall be sufficient proof that the authority was duly executed, and that the officer or soldier by whom it was granted could not obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person.

Explanation—In this Order the expression “commanding officer” means the officer in actual command for the time being of any regiment, corps, detachment or dépôt to which the officer or soldier belongs.

- 6] 2 Any person authorized by an officer or a soldier to prosecute or defend a suit in his stead may prosecute or defend it in person in the same manner as the officer or soldier could do if present, or he may appoint a pleader to prosecute or defend the suit on behalf of such officer or soldier.
- Person so authorized may act personally or appoint pleader

3. Processes served upon any person authorized by an officer or a soldier under rule 1 or upon any pleader appointed as aforesaid by such person shall be as effectual as if they had been served on the party in person.

Service on person so authorized, or on his pleader, to be good service.

Military men—Generally, as regards suits against soldiers, see Army Act, 1881, and case cited (1). If a person sues for a soldier without authority the suit must be dismissed, (2) and an objection to the plaintiff's right to bring the suit, though not taken in the Court of first instance, was allowed on second appeal (3). The provisions of sect. 168 of the last Code have been embodied in O V rr 28-29, which deal with service on military men.

Suits by or against Corporations.

1. In suits by or against a corporation, any pleading may be signed and verified on behalf of the corporation by the secretary or by any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case.

Subscription and verification of pleading

2. Subject to any statutory provision regulating service of process, where the suit is against a corporation, the summons may be served—

(b) by leaving it or sending it by post addressed to the corporation at the registered office, or if there is no registered office then at the place where the corporation carries on business.

Power to require personal attendance of officer of corporation.

"Corporation."—The corporation contemplated by the former Code was, it was held, a corporation as known in English law, that is, a corporation created with the express consent of the Sovereign, or of such antiquity that the consent of the Sovereign may be presumed (1) Thus, the Akhara Pancharti, an association formed by the followers of Guru Nanak, who flourished in the fifteenth century, and having no royal sanction, though it be a corporation under the Civil law, was held not to be a corporation under English law (2) A company which has been duly registered under the Indian Companies Act of 1882 is a

Most companies are registered, and a registered company is a corporation. Companies authorized to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or trustee must, it was said, be very few, if, indeed, any exist and it has been thought that they do not appear to call for special treatment.

Suits by or against corporations—These rules do not deal with the question who may sue or be sued and in what manner but merely deal with two incidents of procedure in such suits, viz the subscription and verification of the plaint and service on a defendant corporation. The general rule however, is that a corporation (and a registered company is such) must sue and be sued in its corporate name (5) and cannot sue (6) or be sued (7) through an agent. members of the company or association must be disclosed, and they must be made parties as in the case of a firm, (1) and a suit cannot be brought by or against a secretary or other person representing such association, though advantage may be taken of the provisions of O I r 8, ante. As to suits by or against firms see O XXX.

Subscription and verification of plaint — The Code enables a principal officer of a corporation to verify a plaint, and it is therefore not necessary that permission for that purpose should be obtained, but it should be shown in cases to which r 1 applies, that the person purporting to verify a plaint is a principal officer and is able to depose to the facts of the case. If the plaint contains a statement to that effect, verification in the usual form would probably be sufficient (2). But the Code does not require that the officer should verify from actual personal knowledge. He may do so upon information and belief (3). An acting manager of a bank is a principal officer of the bank corporation and may sign a plaint for it (4).

Written statements and petition in insolvency — The provisions of the former section (now r 1) have by virtue of the provisions of sect 115 (now O VI r 14 15) and sect 316 of the last Code respectively been held to be applicable to written statements (5) and petitions in insolvency under the Code (6). Sect 316 has now been removed from the Code insolvency being dealt with by a separate Act (III of 1907). In conformity with the provisions of the Indian Companies Act service is allowed by post on corporations having a registered office.

ORDER XXX.

Suits by or against Firms and Persons carrying on business in names other than their own

1 (1) Any two or more persons claiming or being liable as ^{Suing of partners in} partners and carrying on business in British ^{name of firm} India may sue or be sued in the name of the firm (if any) of which such persons were partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and any party to a suit may in such case apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, partners in such firm, to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct

(2) Where persons sue or are sued as partners in the name of their firm under sub rule (1), it shall, in the case of any pleading or other document required by or under this Code to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff or the defendant, suffice if such pleading or other document is signed, verified or certified by any one of such persons

2 (1) Where a suit is instituted by partners in the name of ^{Disclosure of partners} their firm, the plaintiffs or their pleader shall, ^{names} on demand in writing by or on behalf of any defendant, forthwith declare in writing the names and places of residence of all the persons constituting the firm on whose behalf the suit is instituted

(2) Where the plaintiffs or their pleader fail to comply with any demand made under sub rule (1), all proceedings in the suit may, upon an application for that purpose, be stayed upon such terms as the Court may direct

(3) Where the names of the partners are declared in the manner referred to in sub rule (1), the suit shall proceed in the same manner, and the same consequences in all respects shall follow, as if they had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint

Provided that all the proceedings shall nevertheless continue in the name of the firm

3 Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, the summons shall be served either—

Service

- (a) upon any one or more of the partners, or
(b) at the principal place at which the partnership business is carried on within British India upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the partnership business there, as the Court may direct, and such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India :

Provided that, in the case of a partnership which has been dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the summons shall be served upon every person within British India whom it is sought to make liable.

Suits by or against firms.—"Firm" is simply a compendious expression for the several persons who are members of it, and the general law knows nothing of the firm as a body or artificial person distinct from the members composing it. The Judicature enabled partners to sue or be sued in the names of their firms, but this rule did not introduce anything that amounts to the recognition of the firm as an artificial person as distinct from its members (1). This Order dealing with this subject is entirely new. It is, with the exception of r 4, taken from O 48A of the English Rules. The following notes are also taken from such portions of the notes in the Annual Practice on those rules as are of applicability in this country.

The following are the cross references with respect to this note —

Disclosure of partner's name, r 2, service of writ on partners is dealt with in this rule and r 5. Appearance, r 6. No appearance except by partner, r 7.

ment against a firm see O XXI r 50. Actions between co partners, r 9, infra

Actions between partners—Prior to r 10 of the English rules, corresponding with r 9, post, it was not quite clear that actions between a firm and one of its members, or between two firms with a common member, were maintainable in the firm's name, (2) but this doubt is now removed by that rule which applies the rules to such actions, provided the firm or firms carry on business within the jurisdiction, and with the further proviso that "no execution shall be issued in such suits except by leave of the Court."

"Any two or more persons"—If one of the partners is an infant, the minority of one partner cannot be utilized by the other, or others, as a means of deferring payment of the firm's debts (3). But the judgment should be either against the adult partner by name, or against the firm 'other than A B an infant.' And in such a case bankruptcy proceedings will, in England, lie against the firm other than the infant partner (1). A foreign corporation is different from a firm, and may be sued as an individual (2).

"As partners."—The liability of partners for debts is joint (3). As a general rule as to by or against an ordinary partnership would have been defective for want of parties, unless all the partners were before the Court, (4) but now the firm may be sued without first ascertaining who all the partners are (5). Where a partner dies before action, and the action is brought against the firm alone, in the firm's name, the deceased partner is not a party to the action at all so far as his private estate is concerned. If in an action against a firm in the firm name a partner dies between service of the writ and judgment, the estate of the deceased partner is not bound. Unless his personal representative is a defendant, judgment is against the surviving partners, and can only be enforced against them and the partnership assets (6). See here as to right of suit on death of partner, r 1. The estate of a deceased partner is not liable for goods ordered before, but not delivered till after, his death (7).

"Carrying on business in British India."—If the firm carry on business within the jurisdiction within the meaning of the cases cited below, they may sue or be sued in the firm name. It happens that in all the cases cited in this and the note on "Foreign firms," the points raised turned upon the question whether the defendants were rightly sued. But the principle laid down in those cases applies equally to a plaintiff firm as to a defendant firm, the right to "sue or be sued" being given by the same sentence of this rule. It is, therefore, the practice of the Central Office in England to refuse to issue a writ wherein a foreign firm is either plaintiff or defendant, unless the individual names of the partners are given. The words 'carrying on business' do not include an agency, even though the name of the firm be painted on the door of the office of the agency (8). Seem, "carrying on business" means the possession within the jurisdiction of a place of business held in the name of the firm where business is carried on on behalf of the firm by a partner or by a person or persons in the pay of the firm (9). If the firm has no place of business in this country held in the name of the firm they do not carry on business within the jurisdiction even though the partners come to this country regularly in order to purchase goods to be sent to the firm

The effect of the addition to the English rule of the words "carrying on business within the jurisdiction," is to establish, out of all the cases cited in the note on "Foreign Firms," the decision of Chitty, J, (3) that where a firm carried on business in England and a partner was a resident in England, service at the principal place of business upon the person in control of the business, was good service on the firm, including any foreign partner resident abroad (4) Moreover, the rule as now framed appears to go even one step further, seeing that under its terms a foreign firm consisting of two or more persons (5) can be sued as a firm, provided it carries on business within the jurisdiction, whether a partner resides in this country or not For though Wright, J, held otherwise, (6) the C A refused to indorse his ruling on this point (S C). And in the case cited (7) it was held that partners usually resident abroad and having a London office in the firm name were rightly sued as a firm If the foreign firm does carry on business within the jurisdiction the partners are persons sued as partners in the name of their firm under r. 1, and service on the person in control of the business is good service on the firm, including all the partners out of the jurisdiction so far as, but no further than (see O XXI r 50), any property of the partnership within the jurisdiction is concerned It makes no difference whether the partners abroad are foreign subjects or British subjects It is not allegiance to the Crown which is in question, but whether the firm and its partners are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court If they carry on business within the jurisdiction in the firm name, then the rule, which must be read with O XXI r 50, applies (8) If the firm does not carry on business within the jurisdiction it cannot be sued in the firm name, (9) though a counterclaim may be pleaded against a foreign firm suing in an English Court (10)

"May sue or be sued"—A firm consisting of "two or more persons" may sue or be sued even though one of them is under a disability (11) A person trading by himself as a firm or in an assumed or trading name, must sue in his own name, though he may be sued in his trading name (12) If one of several partners dies before action brought, and the plaintiff seeks, in suing the firm, to make the deceased partner's private estate liable, he must add as a defendant the personal representative of such deceased partner, (1) and see r 1. The right to sue partners in the name of the firm is not limited to the case of partners in the firm at the date of the writ. And the liability of partners who have left the firm prior to or since the action commenced is a question of fact which may be raised under O XXI r 50 (2). A judgment against the firm has the same effect as a judgment against all the partners had formerly (3). If final judgment has been obtained against a firm upon a writ issued against the firm, execution cannot issue against a member of the firm without leave of the Court, unless such member comes within the provisions of O XXI r 50 (a), (b), (c), ante. Under the English rules, if a firm has recovered judgment, and one member afterwards dies, the survivor may issue execution (4). A firm cannot appear as a firm, but if a partner, together with the firm, are made co defendants, he may put in separate defences, one for himself, and one for the firm (5).

“At the time of the accruing of the cause of action”—These words enable the co partners in a firm dissolved before action to sue or be sued as a firm provided the co partnership existed at the time the cause of action accrued. And by the operation of r 10, infra, it enables an individual trading in a name other than his own name at the time the cause of action accrued to be sued in his trading name, although he has ceased to so trade at the time the action was brought.

Foreign firms—The ruling in the following cases applies to a plaintiff foreign firm suing as well as to a defendant foreign firm being sued. See preceding note, “Carrying on business,” etc. A purely foreign firm all the partners in which reside abroad cannot be served as a firm. The partners should be sued and served individually (6). The same rule applies to a colonial firm (7). A foreign firm having a resident partner in England who transacts business for the firm but not having an office occupied in the firm’s name cannot be sued as a firm, and a writ so issued and served upon such resident partner, together with the service thereof was set aside (8). A single individual residing abroad and being a foreign subject and carrying on business in this country in the name of a firm, must be sued individually in his own name (9). "For a statement of the names"—In order to disclose the names of partners hereunder is not an order for discovery within O 31, r 21 of the English rules, corresponding with O XI r 21 of this Code (7) Where an affidavit has been filed stating the names of the partners in the plaintiff firm there is no power to direct a cross examination on such affidavit, or the trial of an issue as to who were the partners in the firm at the time of the accruing of the cause of action (8)

Rule 2 Disclosure of partners' names—By sub rule (1) r 1 supra in an action by or against a firm, any party to the action may apply by summons to a Judge for the names and addresses of the persons who were partners at the time the cause of action accrued (9)

"Shall be served."—The rule of service prescribed by this rule applies solely to firms within the jurisdiction. If a partner is served service must be personal and may be effected anywhere subject to the rules as to service out of the jurisdiction and to the directions with regard to foreign firms (1). If the person is left of age, married, or deceased, service must be effected at the principal place of business within the jurisdiction and must include service of the notice prescribed by r. 5, infra (2). If no such notice is served the person is deemed to be served as a partner (3). Where a firm is duly served and no appearance is entered and judgment in default is signed, subsequent service of the writ on a partner not personally served is wrong and will entitle such partner to apply to set aside the judgment. The plaintiff's proper course in such a case in order to bind the personal goods of a partner not originally served is to apply under O. XXI r. 50, for an order giving leave to issue execution against the person liable to be made liable as a partner.

"At the principal place at which"—Seem this means a place where the business of the firm is carried on in the firm's name by a partner or some person who is in the pay of the firm and not merely an agent (4).

"Control of management"—Service on the agent of a firm was held to be no service on the firm (5). Service on a receiver and manager appointed by the Court was held to be bad on the ground that the words of this rule mean that the person having the control or management of the partnership business must be the servant of the partners, whereas a receiver is the servant of the Court. So held on the same words in r. 260 of the English Bankruptcy Rules, 1886 (6). Where there was no one in control substituted service was ordered (7).

"Deemed good service upon the firm."—Service on the firm by serving the person in control hereunder, is not service upon each member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been served as a partner," etc. within O. XXI r. 50 (8) though if partners appear individually under r. 6, they will each be personally liable (9).

"Whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India"—These words must be read in conjunction with the words bearing on the same point in O. XXI r. 50. Seem they mean under the wording of the English rule that the service shall be good service on the firm

5 Where a summons is issued to a firm and is served in accordance with the manner provided by rule 1 every person upon whom it is served shall be informed by notice in writing given at the time of such service, whether he is served as a partner or as a person having the control or management of the partnership business or in both characters, and, in default of such notice, the person served shall be deemed to be served as a partner.

"Shall be informed."—If service is effected on the person in control of the business and no notice is served as here provided the service is not effective and cannot be made so. If service is effected on a partner he may be served with the writ with or without a notice for if served without he is deemed to be served as a partner. (See next note.) But if the person in control is served without a notice that cannot be treated as service on a partner unless the deponent to the affidavit of service if he subsequently discovers that the person served was a partner can swear that he served A B a partner in the defendant firm. The notice when served must be served with the writ in accordance with the rule. The usual practice is for the person effecting service to take a written notice with him headed in the name of the action and bearing to the following effect:—Take notice that the writ served herewith is served on you as the person having the management or control of the partnership business of (A B & Co.). Where a partner is served such notice is not delivered with the copy writ. But where the person in control of the business is served on behalf of the firm it is delivered to him with the copy writ. The notice need not and indeed, under the circumstances cannot be addressed to any one by name. Where any difficulty is anticipated in identifying the person served either as a partner or as the person in control of the business the best course is, in any case, to serve with the writ the following notice:—Take notice that the writ served herewith is served on you as a partner in the defendant firm of (A B & Co.), and also as the person in control of the business. This practice is authorized by the words of the rule 'or in both characters' (1). As to entering judgment after such service see below (2). As to effect of not serving such notice and the necessity of proving service of the notice see next note. The object of the notice is to remove the possibility of dispute as to the character in which a person has been served. The Legislature did not intend to raise merely a rebuttable presumption but to lay down the legal effect of the service (3).

"Deemed to be served as a partner.—As pointed out supra, these words obviate the necessity of serving any notice on a person who is served as a partner, but they render such notice and proof of service thereof absolutely necessary wherever the firm is served by service on the person in control of the business. If, in such a case the notice is not served with the writ or if the person served is served as a partner by notice such person will be able to protect himself from liability as a partner by entering appearance under protest the 'owners of the cargo' may in an action in rem, sue as such even where the 'owners' consist of a person trading as a firm (1). A person sued by his trading name may be ordered to disclose his real name and private address (rr 13). In a firm of "L & Co," apparently consisting only of L trading as L & Co there was a concealed partner. An action was brought by "L & Co," against G who counterclaimed for jewellery supplied to L for personal use. Held that counterclaim was bad against the firm (2).

Service—The writ may be served as provided by r 3 supra qv but not in England if the defendant is resident out of the jurisdiction (3). Where a single individual trading as a firm could not be served and there was no responsible person in charge of the business it was held that substituted service could be ordered (4).

Appearance—Must appear in his own name (5). Appearance under protest of person served denying that he is the person sued (6). As to effect of non appearance, see O XXI r 50.

ORDER XXXI.

Suits by or against Trustees, Executors and Administrators.

1. In all suits concerning property vested in a trustee, [s] executor or administrator, where the contention is between the persons beneficially interested in such property and a third person, the trustee, executor or administrator shall represent the persons so interested, and it shall not ordinarily be necessary to make them parties to the suit. But the Court may, if it thinks fit, order them or any of them to be made parties

Representation of beneficiaries in suits concerning property vested in trustees, etc.

Representation of beneficiaries—The rule which corresponds with English O 16, r 8, applies only when the contention is between the person beneficially interested and a third person. Persons acting as trustees in succession under a will were held to adequately represent all persons beneficially interested in the estate in all suits relating to it (1) Trustees sufficiently represent an unascertained and unascertainable class (2) or persons (3) The rule governs all suits concerning property without distinction (4) The rule has no application when the contention is between beneficiaries and trustees, or between the beneficiaries themselves, though where the section applies it is not ordinarily necessary to make the beneficiaries parties. The Court may, if it think fit, do so. The last clause is taken from 15 & 16 Vict c 86, s 42, r 9, and beneficiaries are made parties in England when the trustee is either wholly uninterested, or has an interest adverse to their interest (5) The discretion of the Court is not limited in this respect (6) A cestui que trust may sue on the refusal or inability of trustees to sue (7) Where a suit was brought by an executor and the names of the beneficiaries who took possession of the estate during the pendency of the suit were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held, that no new plaintiffs were substituted within the meaning of sect 22 of the Limitation Act, and that the substitution of names of the plaintiffs did not make a new suit (1)

2. Where there are several trustees, executors or administrators, they shall all be made parties to a suit against one or more of them:

Joinder of trustees, executors and administrators. Provided that the executors who have not proved their testator's will, and trustees, executors and administrators outside British India, need not be made parties.

Suits against executors or administrators—This rule, which, it will be observed, has (as well as r 3) been extended to the case of trustees, deals only with suits against, and not with suits by, legal representatives or trustees. It embodies the general rule that in actions for administration all executors who have proved, or administrators, must be parties to the suit (2). But if an executor has not proved he should not be made a party, (3) unless he has interfered with the assets (4) or has acted as executor, when he may be (5). An executor outside British India, or a renouncing executor, or an absconding executor, is not a necessary party (6). The former section had, instead of the words "outside British India," the words "beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court." And it was held that if a defendant insisted that an executor was a necessary party, it was for him to show that he, the executor, lived within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought (7). A judgment for general administration cannot be made without a general administrator, (8) an administrator ad litem, (9) or an executor de son tort, is not sufficient (10). A suit, however, may, under circumstances, be sufficiently well constituted for the purposes of a motion as for a receiver where one only of several executors is defendant, though it may be necessary to add the other executors as defendants before the suit comes on for hearing (11).

3. Unless the Court directs otherwise, the husband of a married trustee, administratrix or executrix shall not as such be a party to a suit by or against her.

ORDER XXXII.

Suits by or against Minors and Persons of Unsound Mind.

1. Every suit by a minor shall be instituted in his name (s. f. pa
Minor to sue by next friend. by a person who in such suit shall be called the next friend of the minor.

"Minor"—The Code is applicable generally to all descriptions of parties, whether plaintiff or defendant, and its provisions apply as well to minors as to others. Thus a minor can be directed to file a written statement, and his suit is liable to be dismissed if he fails to do so, and an affidavit of documents may be required of a minor defendant. Doubtless, it is not intended that an infant party to a suit should personally obey such orders. It is evident from the provisions of the Codes that it is intended that his next friend or guardian should obey the orders of the Court on his behalf. Hence, in construing the Code, an exception cannot be read as to infants into its provisions generally, but rather a proviso that orders given to an infant may be obeyed for such infant by his next friend or guardian nor can this be done in construing sect 380 (now O XXV r 1) (1) The Indian Majority Act of 1875 enacts that every person, save as therein otherwise provided, shall attain his majority at the completion of his eighteenth year. This Act governs Hindus and Mahomedans, and all other British subjects European or otherwise, domiciled in British India. Where a guardian has been appointed before the age of eighteen, disability extends to twenty one (2) The minority of an English subject not domiciled in India is twenty one years (3)

"Next friend"—As regards suits on behalf of minors, Acts XL of 1858, and XX of 1864, relating to guardians, have been repealed by Act VIII of 1890, and the present law is to be found in the rules of the Code which embody the amendments of this Act (4) The effect of this rule and r 4 is that if there be a guardian he alone can institute the suit unless the Court gives leave to some other person to sue. Sect. 110 of the 1st Code required notice to be given to the guardian. This has been omitted. When there is no guardian, any person who fulfils the qualifications of a next friend may sue. In r 1 the word "adult" has been removed. It is unnecessary, as majority is one of the required qualifications under r 1. The protection of the minor's interests is left to persons who may be willing to come forward at the risk of costs, and subject to that risk any person may do so (1). In either case the person suing for the minor is called his next friend. A minor cannot sue alone. He can only sue or be sued by a next friend or guardian ad litem, and a decree can only be given for or against him if thus duly represented. The reason why no proceeding can be taken by an infant without the assistance of a next friend is on account of an infant's (2) supposed want of discretion, and his inability to bind himself and make himself liable for costs (3). So far as the minor is concerned, the object of his appointment is to secure the minor's interests, and as regards the defendant, in order that there may be some one before the Court to whom the defendant can look for his cost if successful. The rule was intended for the protection and benefit of defendants as in England it has been held that when a defendant waives this benefit and protection the suit may proceed without a next friend (4). Any sane, adult person not a defendant, and having no interest adverse to the minor, may be a next friend (5). No person can be made a next friend without his consent (6). Although the consent of a minor to the institution of a suit by a next friend is immaterial and a suit may be instituted on his behalf whether he consents or not, the suit is in fact brought in his name and is treated as a suit brought by him (7). The minor is the real plaintiff (8). The next friend is not a party to the suit but a person whose duty it is to prosecute the suit for the minor, and he cannot therefore appeal in his own name (9). The right of a minor to sue by a next friend is a matter of principle, and a rule independent of statutory enactment, and therefore a minor may sue for possession in a Mamlatdar's Court by his next friend although the Mamlatdar's Act (Bom., Act III of 1876) makes no provisions for such a suit (1) The plaint should describe the minor plaintiff as "A B a minor by his next friend C D," and a minor defendant as "C D, minor of whom E F is guardian ad litem" (2) The representative capacity comes to an end with the death of the minor, and the next friend or guardian ad litem cannot execute a decree after the minor's decease. The latter's legal representatives should move in the matter (3) Where a suit is brought in violation of these provisions, the plaint should be returned in order that the error may be rectified (4) When a suit is brought by an alleged minor through his next friend, and when it is found that the plaintiff is not a minor, the suit should not (though the Allahabad High Court dissents) be dismissed, as the defendant can be indemnified by costs. The defendant should apply to have the plaint taken off the file or amended, and if this is not done the next friend's name may be treated as mere surplusage (5) Where, on the other hand, the defendant contends that the plaintiff is a minor, (6) and that the suit cannot be carried on without a next friend, if the plaintiff fails to prove his majority, the Court should not dismiss the suit, but should appoint a next friend (7) Where a minor sued herself without a next friend, but no objection was taken by the defendants until the case came before the Court of first appeal, at which time the plaintiff had attained majority, it was held that the irregularity was waived (8)

(2) Notwithstanding the guardian may be discharged. Sadho Lal v. Murlidhar 23 A 672 (1907)

(3) Rohilkand Bank v. Row 7 A 490 (1885)

(4) As to the cases under the repealed Acts see O Kinealy's C P C, notes to s 400. The sections of the last Code amended by Act VIII of 1890 (see ss. 53 A, B, C, D, E) were ss 440 443 446 461, 464. The last paragraph of s 440 of the last Code was added by s 53A, Act VIII of 1890

Costs—The words in sect. 440 of the last Code, "and may be ordered to pay any costs in the suit as if he were the plaintiff," have been omitted. If the suit fails, the next friend will be ordered to pay the defendant the costs, an order addressed to the minor in person to pay those costs being illegal (9) But as between the next friend and the minor, the former is prima facie entitled to costs (10) The Court may, (11) and usually does direct that the next friend should, though the suit be unsuccessful, have his costs out of the estate. It frequently is right to make a next friend or guardian liable for costs, but there are also cases in which it is not proper to hold him personally liable (12) As a rule he is entitled to attorney and client costs, except where the fund is reversionary, and then he may claim the difference when the fund comes into

If the next friend is personally

Plaint filed by next friend.—This rule refers to a case where the plaintiff on the face of it appears to have been filed by a person who was a minor. It does not contemplate any inquiry into the question of minority where the suit is brought by a person professing himself to be adult, and where the defendant objects to the suit on the ground that he is not an adult, but a minor, and where upon these conflicting allegations an issue is raised for trial. In a case like this the order of the Court, if it finds that the defendant's allegation is correct, is not passed under this rule. Such a case is not expressly provided for in the Code, but the practice is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend (1) The Court as a rule only strikes a plaint off the file where it appears on its face that it was filed by a person who was a minor, or where it is proved that it was filed with the knowledge that the plaintiff was a minor, and with the intention of deceiving the Court and evading the payment of costs in case the plaintiff fails in the claim. Where the fact of minority is a bona fide question of evidence and the defendant's allegation is found correct, then the usual course is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented (2) No objection can be taken as to the minority of a plaintiff after remand by the High Court unless the point was urged in the Appellate Court (3) While the person presenting the plaint is liable for costs where a plaint is filed by a minor without a next friend, neither this nor the last rule gives a Court authority to make a minor's estate liable for costs (4)

3. (1) Where the defendant is a minor, the Court, on being satisfied of the fact of his minority, shall appoint a proper person to be guardian for the suit for such minor

Guardian for the suit to be appointed by Court for minor defendant

(2) An order for the appointment of a guardian for the suit may be obtained upon application in the name and on behalf of the minor or by the plaintiff

(3) Such application shall be supported by an affidavit verifying the fact that the proposed guardian has no interest in the matters in controversy in the suit adverse to that of the minor and that he is a fit person to be so appointed

(4) No order shall be made on any application under this rule except upon notice to the minor and to any guardian of the minor appointed or declared by an authority competent in that behalf or, where there is no such guardian upon notice to the father or other natural guardian of the minor, or, where there is no father or other natural guardian, to the person in whose care the minor is, and after hearing any objections which may be urged on behalf of any person served with notice under this sub rule

Guardian ad litem.—The Code of 1859 contained no provisions as to appointment by the Court of guardians ad litem for minor defendants. According to the then practice it was sufficient if a person was made a party as guardian

(1) Beni Ram v Ram Lal 13 C. 181, 141 (1886). See also Sham Krishna v Ram Das, 20 A. 162, 165 (1897), Rattan Bai v Chhabildas, 13 B. 7, 11 (1889). In the first case it was held that the order, though purporting to be passed under the former section, must be taken to have been one and permitted to act as such on the minor's behalf (1) These provisions have been taken from the Original Side rules (2) The same reasons which require the representation of an infant plaintiff (3) apply to the case of an infant defendant A minor may appear by attorney or pleader, but he can only plead or conduct the defence by his guardian (4) As to the age of majority, see notes for 1, ante A guardian ad litem is not within the scope of sect 3 of the Majority Act (5) The rule assumes that there is a suit which may, and indeed must be instituted before a guardian is appointed, and limitation counts from the date of the plaint and not from the appointment of the guardian (6)

Upon the institution of a suit against an infant the question of service of summons is one of some difficulty There are no special provisions as to the service of summons upon infants, and therefore the same rules appear to apply as in the case of adults (7) Summons should be issued and served on the minor defendant Where there has been neither personal nor substituted service on the minor defendant or on the certificated guardian, and an ex parte decree has been passed, it will be set aside under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) (8) Where, however, it was not definitely shown that any attempt was made to serve the summons upon the infants personally, or upon their mother before serving it upon the only adult male member and karta of the family, but it was not shown that the alleged irregularity had caused any prejudice, it was held to be cured by sect 578 (now sect 99) (9)

Subsequent to the issue of summons, the Court must proceed under this rule to satisfy itself of the fact of minority (10) Where no guardian ad litem is appointed (mere notice of a proposal to appoint a person being insufficient) and an ex parte decree is passed, it will be set aside (11) And where it is so satisfied, the Court should proceed to the appointment of a guardian It is the duty of the Court to see that a minor's interests are properly represented (12) The provisions of the rule are mandatory, and should be strictly followed (13)

As to who may be appointed, see r 4. Sub rule (2) of that rule gives precedence (8) to guardians of the person or property unless special reasons exist against their appointment. So while there is nothing to prevent a guardian suing her ward in such a case the minor must be represented by some other person whose interest is not adverse to him (9). Where a guardian filed a written statement which was prejudicial to the interests of the minor, the Court observed that in a suit in which it is not necessary for a minor defendant to take an active part, no guardian is ever justified in taking any step prejudicial to his ward. If he can do nothing positively for the minor's benefit he ought simply to leave the matter to the Court (10). A father cannot act as guardian ad litem of his son when there is a clear conflict of interest between them. Thus where a father, professing to act as the head of a Mitakshara family, executed a mortgage of the family joint-property, it was not open to him to impugn its validity, but it would be the duty of the guardian ad litem of the infant son to urge as a defence that the mortgage was beyond the scope of the father's authority, and it was therefore held that the father could not be the guardian ad litem (1) Where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant is not a minor, and minority is pleaded as a defence to an action, inasmuch as an alleged minor cannot be treated as if he was of full age during the investigations of any material averment in a suit a guardian should be appointed for the defendant and a preliminary issue should be framed and tried as to whether the defendant is or is not a minor (2) Though by sect 440 of the last Code the next friend of a plaintiff might be made liable for costs there was no similar express provision with respect to a guardian But according to the English practice, which has been followed by the Bombay High Court, he has been made to pay costs where he has been guilty of gross misconduct in the case, (3) as where a guardian put executors to proof of a will which he wished to upset for his own private purposes, and which the evidence showed was to his knowledge duly executed (4) The Madras High Court, in a case (5) which does not appear to have been considered in the one last cited, has held that the Code does not authorize a Court to decree costs against the guardian of a defendant except in the case referred to in sect 458 (now r 11) which deals only with costs when a guardian is removed

(10) Court of Wards v. Raj Coomar, 17 W R 142 (1871), the usual practice in such cases is to state that the defendant is a minor, and that he leaves his interests to the protection of the Court.

“Shall appoint”—The provisions are imperative, and where they are not substantially complied with the minor is not properly represented and any decree which may be passed against him is a nullity (6) Thus where a decree had been passed against a minor who was described in the suit as of age it was held that it was a nullity so far as he was concerned (7) The Court must not only appoint a guardian but satisfy itself that the proposed guardian is a fit and proper person to represent the minor, to put in a proper defence and generally to act in the interests of the minor The duty of the Court is not a mere matter of form (8)

Clause (4)—This is based on sect 443 of the last Code The Legislature has considered it necessary to ensure that notice should reach one interested in the minor's welfare and this rule aims at securing this result It was held that the appointment, apparently by an oversight as guardian ad litem to a minor defendant, of a person other than the certificated guardian amounted to no more than an irregularity not vitiating the decree or sale thereunder See next rule clause (2) (9)

Petition for guardian ad litem.—See ante where the procedure will be found dealt with. A person cannot be appointed guardian ad litem against his will, and this is now enacted by r 1, (1) but where a guardian ad litem has once been appointed, his appointment endures for the whole of the lis in the course of which it has been made, unless and until it is revoked by the Court, (2) and therefore for purposes of appeal (3). A Court has jurisdiction to try a suit against a minor notwithstanding the appointment of one of its officers (1) to be the minor's guardian ad litem (5).

4. (1) Any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit:

Who may act as next friend or be appointed guardian for the suit

Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or, in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed, as the case may be

(3) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit.

(4) Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

Representation of minor by next friend or guardian for the suit rule (2), shall be made by his next friend or by his guardian for the suit

4] (2) Every order made in a suit or on any application before the Court in or by which a minor is in any way concerned or affected, without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit, as the case may be, may be discharged, and, where the pleader of the party at whose instance such order was obtained knew, or might reasonably have known, the fact of such minority, with costs to be paid by such pleader

Applications to be by representative—The Code no doubt distinguishes between next friends and guardians for the suit, the former term being used in respect of plaintiff minors, and the latter when the minors are defendants But if a guardian ad litem has not been appointed for a defendant a next friend can apply (5)

Order obtained by next friend or guardian—This rule shows that no order by which a minor or lunatic is in any way concerned or affected can legally be made without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit (6) The words "may be discharged" appear to give discretionary power to the Court (7) No order binds a minor unless he was

Receipt by next friend or guardian for the suit of property under decree for minor.

(2) Where the next friend or guardian for the suit has not been appointed or declared by competent authority to be guardian of the property of the minor, or, having been so appointed or declared, is under any disability known to the Court to receive the money or other moveable property, the Court shall, if it grants him leave to receive the property, require such security and give such directions as will, in its opinion, sufficiently protect the property from waste and ensure its proper application.

Receipt of property under decree.—This section was substituted in the last Code by Act VIII. of 1850 sect. 53 (d). It has been held that this rule did not apply in the case of a managing member of a Mitakshara joint-family who was appointed guardian ad litem of his minor brother for the purpose of a rent suit in which both the brothers obtained a decree for arrears of rent (3)

7. (1) No next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian.

(2) Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor.

Scope of rule.—The provisions of this rule are intended to protect the interests of minors,(4) and have been adopted (5) from the rule previously laid down by the Privy Council (6) A suit relating to the estate or person of an infant, and for his benefit, has the effect of making him a ward of Court, and no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the Court itself (1). This principle on which the rule is based, has been applied to a case which, it was held, strictly did not fall within its terms, it being held that when the next friend of a minor withdrew from a suit, though it was not proved that the defendant entered into any agreement with the next friend, it was open to the minor through another next friend to have the suit re-opened on review on the ground that the former next friend, though guilty of no fraudulent conduct, was grossly negligent of the minor's interest in withdrawing from the suit (2). The rule contemplates the existence of a guardian and a pending litigation, and was therefore held not to apply where, when the agreement was made, there was neither a guardian for a suit nor a suit (3).

As to the effect of a compromise entered into without leave, vide post. Where a compromise was effected and allowed by the Court, and a decree was made in accordance with its terms, it was held that no appeal lay against the compromise decree, and that the remedy for setting it aside was by way of review or regular suit (4). Where a guardian had entered into a compromise without leave but undertook to present the petition to Court and subsequently declined to do so, and opposed a decree being passed in its terms, it was held that inasmuch as leave had not been asked for and the guardian objected to the Court passing a decree in terms of the compromise, the Court had no power to enforce it, even though its terms might appear to be beneficial to the minors (5). A decree holder who rests his case upon his decree having been made against a minor by consent, is under the necessity of proving that the consent was given by some one having authority to bind the minor (6).

Leave.—The Court has to grant leave. The form, however, of expression used for the purpose of indicating that the Court grants leave to compromise is of slight importance. The question is whether the Court, after a consideration of the circumstances, really intended to grant leave (7). The Court must, however, in some form show that it has considered the question and granted leave. And the mere passing of a decree on a compromise does not amount to sanction, which will not be inferred from the subsequent passing of a decree in terms of such compromise (8). In order that a compromise may be binding upon a minor, the leave of the Court must be express, and it must be arrived at upon the exercise of a judicial discretion as to the propriety of the compromise in the interests of the minor and the section makes no exception in the case of a certified guardian (1) Under the last Code such leave was presumed in certain cases (2) The amended rule now requires that the leave should be expressly recorded following the Privy Council decision that it should in some way, not open to doubt, be shown that the leave of the Court was obtained (3) Where a Hindu father was party to a partition suit and was himself the guardian ad litem of his minor son (also a party) it was held that the fact that he represented the family did not exempt him from the duty of obtaining leave for a compromise which was clearly intended to affect the son's interest, and that since such leave was not obtained, the son was not bound by it (4)

The Court should not make a decree by consent against an infant without ascertaining that it is for his benefit that such a decree should be pronounced (5) The Court must have before it the materials necessary to enable it to arrive at a judicial conclusion with respect to the compromise The terms and evidence of their propriety and reasonableness must be before it (6) In order to make an agreement or compromise, to which this rule applies, a lawful agreement or compromise, it is necessary that the next friend or guardian should ask the Court to consider the proposed terms of the agreement or compromise, and before making the agreement or entering into the compromise should obtain permission from the Court to enter into the agreement or compromise proposed The Court should record the fact that such application was made to it, that the terms of the proposed agreement or compromise were considered by the Court, and that, having regard to the interests of the minor, the Court granted leave to the making of the agreement or compromise From the mere fact that the Court passed the decree in accordance with the compromise it cannot be inferred that any of those steps preliminary and necessary to the making of the decree have been taken by the Court (7) If leave is given under a misrepresentation of a material fact, due either to fraud or culpable and wilful ignorance it is not binding (8)

When necessary—The rule does not only refer to agreements out of Court but to such agreements as also to compromise decrees, namely, those agreements which are given effect to by a decree of the Court The words "any agreement etc," include a compromise finally determining the suit (9) The provisions apply to compromises after decree (10) Applications in execution are proceedings in the suit, so that a compromise of such a proceeding would be a compromise

"with reference to the suit" (1) A guardian has no power to waive a right to compensation for part of the estate taken under the Land Acquisition Act, (2) nor to enter into an agreement to refer matters in suit to arbitration, (3) though the contrary has also been held, (4) or to withdraw a suit without the leave of the Court (5) A mere matter of proof, such as the consent by a guardian of a minor defendant to accept the oath of the plaintiff (6) or abstaining from pressing objections, it being uncertain whether there was evidence sufficient to sustain them (7) is not within the rule.

Effect of want of leave.—A decree by consent without leave is invalid and not binding on the minor (8) The only modes, however, of setting aside a decree are by review under sect 114 or by a separate suit, (9) and not by application for a rule in the original suit, (10) or in execution proceedings under sect 47 the question whether a decree was void as against the minor not being one relating to the execution of the decree (11) The compromise can be avoided by a minor either on or before his attaining majority (12) In a recent Privy Council decision where a Hindu father had been appointed guardian ad litem of an infant son in a suit for partition by a member of the joint family and had made a compromise without the leave of the Court it was held that the

7] 8 (1) Unless otherwise ordered by the Court, a next friend shall not retire without first procuring a fit person to be put in his place and giving security for the costs already incurred.

(2) The application for the appointment of a new next friend shall be supported by an affidavit showing the fitness of the person proposed, and also that he has no interest adverse to that of the minor.

"Retire"—The words "at his own request" have been omitted but the sense is the same (2)

6] 9 (1) Where the interest of the next friend of a minor is adverse to that of the minor or where he is so connected with a defendant whose interest is adverse to that of the minor as to make it unlikely that the minor's interest will be properly protected by him, or where he does not do his duty, or, during the pendency of the suit, ceases to reside within British India, or for any other sufficient cause, application may be made on behalf of the minor or by a defendant for his removal, and the Court, if satisfied of the sufficiency of the cause assigned, may order the next friend to be removed accordingly, and make such other order as to costs as it thinks fit.

(2) Where the next friend is not a guardian appointed or declared by an authority competent in his behalf, and an application is made by a guardian so appointed or declared, who desires to be himself appointed in the place of the next friend, the Court shall remove the next friend unless it considers, for reasons to be recorded by it, that the guardian ought not to be appointed the next friend of the minor, and shall thereupon appoint the applicant to be next friend in his place upon such terms as to the costs already incurred in the suit as it thinks fit.

Removal of next friend—Where a Court finds that a next friend does not do his duty in relation to a suit it is its duty not to permit him to prejudice the interests of the minor, but to adjourn the suit in order that some one interested in the minor may apply on his behalf for the removal of the next friend and for the appointment of a new next friend, or in order that the minor plaintiff may, on coming of age, elect to proceed with the suit or withdraw from it (1) Courts can be moved to stay a suit improperly brought on behalf of an infant, and to remove an improper next friend of an infant and to substitute a proper person in his place (2) It has been considered expedient to enact that where a guardian insists on his right to be appointed next friend in the place of another there should be power to require him to become liable or give security for costs in the suit previously incurred and the second clause has been amended accordingly

10. (1) On the retirement, removal or death of the next friend of a minor, further proceedings shall be stayed until the appointment of a next friend in his place.

(2) Where the pleader of such minor omits, within a reasonable time, to take steps to get a new next friend appointed, any person interested in the minor or in the matter in issue may apply to the Court for the appointment of one, and the Court may appoint such person as it thinks fit

11. (1) Where the guardian for the suit desires to retire or does not do his duty, or where other sufficient ground is made to appear, the Court may permit such guardian to retire or may remove him, and may make such order as to costs as it thinks fit.

(2) Where the guardian for the suit retires, dies or is removed by the Court during the pendency of the suit, the Court shall appoint a new guardian in his place

Costs.—The former section ran “and may order him to pay such costs as may have been occasioned to any party by his breach of duty” This may be done now This rule is not, so far as regards payment of costs, applicable to any person appointed to act as guardian ad litem without his previous consent (3) As to whether the Court may decree costs against a guardian, except in the case mentioned in this rule, see notes to r 3, ante

12. (1) A minor plaintiff or a minor not a party to a suit on whose behalf an application is pending shall, on attaining majority, elect whether he will proceed with the suit or application.

(4) Where he elects to abandon the suit or application, he shall, if a sole plaintiff or sole applicant, apply for an order to dismiss the suit or application on repayment of the costs incurred by the defendant or opposite party or which may have been paid by his next friend

(5) Any application under this rule may be made ex parte, but no order discharging a next friend and permitting a minor plaintiff to proceed in his own name shall be made without notice to the next friend

Election of minor to proceed—An application under this rule may be made ex parte and does not require notice. Leave (which may be nunc pro tunc) will be given as a matter of course unless there is an absolute bar by positive enactment. The provisions as to correction of title refer to a pending suit and not to a suit after final decree, in which it only remains to proceed to execution. The omission to comply with the requirements of this rule is a mere irregularity and will not bar execution of a decree (1). Quære—whether a minor who having been a party to a suit but not properly represented was served with summons afterwards on attaining majority carried on the suit as transferee of the estate from the previous owner, was not bound as a party (2)

13 (1) Where a minor co plaintiff on attaining majority desires to repudiate the suit he shall apply to have his name struck out as co plaintiff, and the Court, if it finds that he is not a necessary party, shall dismiss him from the suit on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on the next friend, on any co plaintiff and on the defendant

(3) The costs of all parties of such application, and of all or any proceedings theretofore had in the suit, shall be paid by such persons as the Court directs

(4) Where the applicant is a necessary party to the suit, the Court may direct him to be made a defendant

14. (1) A minor on attaining majority may, if a sole plaintiff, apply that a suit instituted in his name by a next friend be dismissed on the ground that it was unreasonable or improper

Unreasonable or improper suit. (2) Notice of the application shall be served on all the parties concerned, and the Court, upon being satisfied of such unreasonableness or impropriety, may grant the application and order the next friend to pay the costs of all parties in respect of the application and of anything done in the suit, or make such other order as it thinks fit

15. The provisions contained in rules 1 to 14, so far as they are applicable, shall extend to persons adjudged to be of unsound mind and to persons who though not so adjudged are found by the Court on inquiry, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity, to be incapable of protecting their interests when suing or being sued

Persons of unsound mind or mentally infirm.—By sect 163 of the last Code the provisions in sects 110 to 162 of that Code were declared mutatis mutandis to apply in the case of persons adjudged to be lunatics under Act XXXV of 1858 or any other lunacy law for the time being in force. It was held that the provisions of sect 110 of the last Code were by that section to be applied to lunatics. Whatever might be the meaning of the word 'guardian' in sect 440, when minors were concerned, it was held that there was no reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to alter or affect the existing law in respect of the persons who alone are entitled to bring suits on behalf of the estate of a lunatic. The person denominated guardian must mean the person who is himself competent to sue. A guardian of the person only of a lunatic has no right to bring a suit in respect of the lunatic's estate. The manager of the estate is the person to do so though under sect 410 a person other than the guardian of the estate could also sue with the leave of the Court (1).

Sect 163 of the last Code applied in terms only to those adjudged to be of unsound mind and therefore in other cases of unsoundness of mind a next friend or guardian could not be appointed under Chapter XXXI (2). The provisions however of that Chapter were held not to be exhaustive and the Courts to have an inherent power to act in the interests of justice. Though a person alleged to be a lunatic though not so found might appear either in person or through a vakil, (3) if it was held that a person of unsound mind was not entitled to sue by a next friend or defend by a guardian until he had been adjudged to be a lunatic, serious failure of justice might result (4). Where therefore, a person was admitted or was found to be of unsound mind, although he had not been adjudged to be so, he should, it was held, if a plaintiff, be allowed to sue through his next friend, and the Court should appoint a guardian ad litem where he was a defendant (1). It had to be first ascertained whether the person in question was or was not of unsound mind, and in the case of a suit instituted by a next friend whether the suit was for his benefit (2). It will be observed that the amended rule gives effect to these rulings, and the preceding rules are made directly applicable both to adjudged and non adjudged lunatics. The rule also includes the mentally infirm so as to cover the case of a person incapacitated from protecting his interests by reason of his mental weakness or of his being a deaf mute.

16. Nothing in this Order shall apply to a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief suing or being sued in the name of his State, or being sued by direction of the Governor General in Council or a Local Government in the name of an agent or in any other name, or shall be construed to affect or in any way derogate from the provisions of any local law for the time being in force relating to suits by or against minors or by or against lunatics or other persons of unsound mind.

Princes and Chiefs—Sect 461 of the last Code, which this rule replaces was substituted for the former section by sect 53 (e), Act VIII of 1890. The former section ran, after the word "name," "and nothing in sects 442-462 applies to any minor or person of unsound mind, for whose person or property a guardian or manager has been appointed by the Court of Wards (3) or by the Civil Court under any civil law

ORDER XXXIII

Suits by Paupers

1. Subject to the following provisions, any suits may be

Suits may be instituted in forma pauperis instituted by a pauper.

Explanation.—A person is a “pauper” when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint in such suit, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth one hundred rupees other than his necessary wearing-apparel and the subject matter of the suit.

“Suit” “Instituted”—It was held that the wording of this and the following rules indicate that the only kind of application contemplated by the Legislature is an application to institute a suit (1) The word “instituted” has now been substituted for “brought”. It was however held in the case last cited that a Court had power to allow a suit instituted in the ordinary form to be continued in forma pauperis (2) It has been held that an order to give security for costs obtained in a suit filed in the ordinary course ceases to operate as regards antecedent costs if leave is given to continue the suit as pauper provided the leave is granted before the time for giving security has expired (3) Although the provisions in the Code only provide for suits to be brought by a pauper, it has been held that the Court has power to allow a defendant to defend in forma pauperis (4) Order XLIV post provides for pauper appeals and as to cross appeals in forma pauperis see notes to that order. Sect. 141 provides for the procedure in miscellaneous proceedings and the provisions of Chapter XXVI of the last Code, which these rules replace have been held applicable to petitions for Probate (5) and to suits sanctioned for removal of trustees under the Religious Endowments Act (6)

mortgaging his claims (1) A Hindu father's wealth is not a bar to a son suing as a pauper to prove his adoption, (2) nor does a husband's wealth preclude a wife suing as a pauper when she cannot claim from him the means of carrying on the suit (3) In the case of minors the English practice (4) appears to be not to allow a minor to institute a suit through his next friend, unless he gives proof not only that he is himself a pauper, but that the next friend is a pauper, and that he cannot get any substantial person to act as next friend (5) Following this practice, the Calcutta High Court allowed a suit to be brought in forma pauperis by a next friend who was also a pauper (6) The question whether a minor might sue as a pauper by a next friend who was not a pauper was not decided in that case, but the right was subsequently affirmed by the Madras High Court, (7) which held that the English practice to the contrary was not justified by the Code The Code does not exclude persons holding a fiduciary character, and therefore an executor or administrator can sue in forma pauperis (8) It has been held that there is no necessity for an inquiry whether an alleged representative of an admitted pauper is a pauper or not, and that the Court if satisfied that he is the legal representative, should admit him to carry on the suit (9) But the Bombay High Court has disagreed (10) The conditions of pauperism are different (a) when the plaintiff requires a court fee, and (b) when none is required In either case the effect of pauperism is the same As regards the first case the measure is the sum required to pay the fee on the plaint In the second case Rs 100 is the measure The intention in both cases is the same viz to fix a certain sum—in one case the fee on the plaint, and in the other case Rs 100, and to provide that if the petitioner has not this sum at his disposal he will be exempt from court fees (11) So, property admitted to be the property of the petitioner is not the "subject matter of the suit," although claimed in the petition (12) The concluding portion of the Explanation, "other than his necessary wearing apparel," etc., do not govern its first part (13)

Formerly excepted suits—Under sect 402 of the last Code a pauper could not sue to recover compensation for loss of caste, libel, slander, abusive language or assault The suits excepted were strictly limited to those mentioned Where it was argued that Chapter XXVI of the former Code was intended to apply only to suits for the enforcement of personal claims and therefore not to suits under the Religious Endowments Act or sect 539 (now 92, 93) of the Code, it was held, that in that Chapter and particularly in sect 402 and the former section corresponding with r 5, the restrictions on the liberty of the right to sue as a pauper were expressly prescribed and that the Court would be adding to those restrictions if it held that a person should not be allowed to sue as a pauper when his suit is one that is brought under the Act mentioned (1) There are, however, now no excepted suits as sect 402 of the last Code has not been re enacted The Special Committee stated that in the light of the case law it was misleading, so far as it suggested that a suit would be for loss of caste or abusive language and they saw no sufficient reason for withholding from a pauper a right to sue as such in respect of defamation or assault

2 Every application for permission to sue as a pauper shall contain the particulars required in regard to plaints in suits a schedule of any moveable or immoveable property belonging to the applicant, with the estimated value thereof, shall be annexed thereto, and it shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings

3 Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, the application shall be presented to the Court by the applicant in person, unless he is exempted from appearing in Court, in which case the application may be presented by an authorized agent who can answer all material questions relating to the application and who may be examined in the same manner as the party represented by him might have been examined had such party attended in person

Presentation of application — Where an applicant dies before leave is granted the legal representative may present a fresh application or may institute a suit for the same relief which the deceased sought to recover if the right to sue survives in him (2) R 3 is imperative and a petition to sue as a pauper must be presented in person unless the pauper is exempted from appearing in Court under sects 132 133 ante (3) So where a petitioner was in jail and did not present the petition in person it was rejected, (4) and the mere fact that several persons jointly present an application does not authorize the Court to entertain it on behalf of applicants who do not appear in person (5) A leader may be an authorized agent, (6) but in that case he must be specially authorized

as the pauper's attorney, an ordinary talalutnamah not being sufficient (1) If the applicant does not appear in person he may, under r 4, be examined by commission

4. (1) Where the application is in proper form and duly presented, the Court may, if it thinks fit, examine the applicant, or his agent when the applicant is allowed to appear by agent, regarding the merits of the claim and the property of the applicant.

(2) Where the application is presented by an agent, the Court may, if it thinks fit, order that the applicant be examined by a commission in the manner in which the examination of an absent witness may be taken.

If presented by agent, Court may order applicant to be examined by commission.

Examination of applicant—It was held under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, that the examination referred to is that of the petitioner or his or her agent, and that at this stage the Court has no power to examine witnesses (2) The present rule also speaks merely of the examination of the petitioner or his agent. If on the examination some of the grounds appear which are mentioned in the next rule then notices are to issue as provided in r 6, and they pave the way to the formal hearing mentioned in r 7, at which the question of the applicant's pauperism has to be determined. The proceedings under this (3) and the next rule are of a preliminary character, and a rejection under them is not as in the case of r 7, of a final kind and a bar to a subsequent application (4)

The rule directs the examination of an applicant regarding the merits in order that it may be ascertained whether his allegations show or do not show a right to sue (5) The mere statements in the plaint cannot be accepted as the sole material on which a decision as to this question can depend, for if this were so, the granting of an application would depend not on whether the pauper had in fact any merits to go upon but on the skill of the person drafting his petition and plaint, and the examination as to the merits under this section would be superfluous (6)

 (d) where his allegations do not show a cause of action, or
 (e) where he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the proposed suit under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject-matter.

Rejection or application —The provisions of this rule, operating as they do in derogation of the ordinary rights of a litigant, must be construed strictly, and the exercise of the Court's power to reject under this rule is limited to the grounds specified in the various clauses of the rule itself (1)

There are conflicting decisions as to whether an appeal does (2) or does not (3) lie from an order rejecting an application to sue as a pauper. It has, however, been held in several cases (4) that such an order is subject to revision as to limitation in the case of pauper applications, see below (5)

Clause (d) in the last Code ran, "that his allegations do not show a right to sue in such Court" The concluding words, "sue in such Court," lent some support to the argument that the paragraph referred to the jurisdiction of the Court, and not to the cause of action disclosed in the application (6). It was, however, held that the words "show a right to sue" cannot be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether "the right to sue" arose within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely, that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law (7). This is now made clear in the amended clause

So the Court will see not only whether it has jurisdiction, (1) but whether there is a right to sue or cause of action to be entertained, (2) and, assuming so, whether the intended suit is barred by res judicata (3) or limitation, (4) or whether a previous application has been refused (5). The Madras High Court in one case, (6) and apparently the Calcutta High Court, (7) have held that if the petitioner shows a right to sue, the Judge should allow the application without going into the merits of the claim, the examination as to the merits under r 4 being merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether the allegations do or do not show a right to sue, or cause of action. Where a plaint in forma pauperis has been admitted, but the Court holds that it has no jurisdiction, and returns the plaint to the plaintiff, it has no jurisdiction to make the plaintiff pay the court fees (8). An agreement by a plaintiff, about to sue to redeem a village, to pay his vakil a lump sum of Rs 1500, and in default to realize it out of the revenue of the property, was held to be an agreement within the scope of clause (e) (9). No leave to appeal in forma pauperis will be given where there is subsisting such an agreement (10).

6 Where the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day (of which at least ten days' clear notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government pleader) for receiving such evidence as the applicant may adduce in proof of his pauperism, and for hearing any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof.

7. (1) On the day so fixed or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Court shall examine the witnesses (if any) produced by either party, and may examine the applicant or his agent, and shall make a memorandum of the substance of their evidence.

(2) The Court shall also hear any argument which the parties may desire to offer on the question whether, on the face of the application and of the evidence (if any) taken by the Court as herein provided, the applicant is or is not subject to any of the prohibitions specified in rule 5

(3) The Court shall then either allow or refuse to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper

Examine—The examination must be conducted by the Judge in person (1) As appears from the second paragraph, and was previously held (2) the examination is not limited to the question of pauperism, but embraces all the matters referred to in r 5, ante (3) This paragraph enables the parties to argue the question if they so desire but does not preclude the Court if no argument is offered from considering that question (4) If a new defendant be added an inquiry must be made in the presence of such new defendant (5) Semble, that an order admitting a plaintiff to sue as a pauper made by one Court becomes ineffectual when the plaint is returned by that Court and that it becomes the duty of the Court before which the petition is subsequently presented to pass orders de novo on the subject (6) The inquiry into pauperism under this and the previous rule takes place before any suit is in existence for until an application to sue as a pauper is granted there is no plaint and consequently no suit (7) As to appeal and revision see notes to r 5 and as to review notes to r 15

8 Where the application is granted, it shall be numbered and registered, and shall be deemed the plaint in the suit, and the suit shall proceed in all other respects as a suit instituted in the ordinary manner, except that the plaintiff shall not be liable to pay any court-fee (other than fees payable for service of process) in respect of any petition, appointment of a pleader or other proceedings connected with the suit

Admission of application—When an application is granted no appeal lies (8) The order cannot be set aside either on appeal or motion by a superior Court If subsequently to permission being granted it appears that the order has been obtained improperly application should be made to the Court out of which the order issued (9) Limitation depends on the date of the application and not on the day when the application is granted and registered, otherwise a case might be barred whilst the Judge is considering whether the application to sue as a pauper should be admitted (1) As to limitation in cases in which an application is withdrawn or refused see notes to r 15, post There is no suit in existence until the application has been granted (2) The exemption from liability upon that event only extends to the cases mentioned So a pauper must pay the proper stamps and penalty (if any) on a document on which he relies (3)

9 The Court may, on the application of the defendant, or of the Government Pleader, of which seven days' clear notice in writing has been given to the plaintiff, order the plaintiff to be dispaupered—

Dispaupering.

- (a) if he is guilty of vexatious or improper conduct in the course of the suit,
- (b) if it appears that his means are such that he ought not to continue to sue as a pauper, or
- (c) if he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject matter of the suit, under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject matter

Dispaupering—If it appears from facts that have been discovered after permission to sue in forma pauperis has been granted that the applicant ought not to be allowed to continue to litigate as a pauper, the remedy is by application under this rule to the Court which made the order, and not by appeal or motion in the superior Courts (1)

10 Where the plaintiff succeeds in the suit, the Court shall calculate the amount of court fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper, such amount shall be recoverable by the Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, and shall be a first charge on the subject matter of the suit

notes to next rule The Crown has a right to receive fees at the institution of every suit It temporarily foregoes (r 8) its right in the case of pauper plaintiffs, and thus places means in their hands to proceed to judgment against their defendants Without the forbearance of Government to insist on its ordinary rule, the suit in such a case could not have been brought or the money realized It is therefore reasonable that the Crown, in consideration of its giving up its rights to these fees, should have for their defrayal the first claim on the proceeds of the pauper suit (1) The order should not be a contingent one (2) The amount of court-fees is a first charge (3) on the subject-matter (4) of the suit To enforce it the Government need not bring a separate suit, but can realize the court fee from the property by proceedings in execution (5) The rule is enabling, and though it indicates the manner in which the Crown may proceed to realize the debt, it does not preclude the Crown or its representatives from urging its prerogative and insisting on its rights to precedence over all their creditors (6) The period allowed to Government is the ordinary period allowed for execution to an individual under the Limitation Act (7) The section provides that persons who have been successful as paupers shall, so far as the subject-matter of their success is concerned, be liable to satisfy, out of what they recover, the amount of the fees which have been for a time, pending the decision of their suit, remitted to them But the Collector cannot sell the decree, that is, the whole of the plaintiff's right in the decree, which he has got without waiting for the recovery by the plaintiff of that for which he has got his decree (8) An order under this rule for sale of property for the purpose of realizing court fees, and a sale under such order, are ultra vires and a nullity when, in fact, there was no jurisdiction in the Court to make the order (9) In addition to their being a first charge, they are also recoverable from any party ordered to pay If the pauper succeeds, the fees payable to Government are, under this rule, recoverable from the defendant (10) A defendant should not, however, be made liable to

11. Where the plaintiff fails in the suit or is dispaupered,

Procedure where pauper or where the suit is withdrawn or dismissed,— fails

(a) because the summons for the defendant to appear and answer has not been served upon him in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, or

(b) because the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing

the Court shall order the plaintiff, or any person added as a co-plaintiff to the suit, to pay the court-fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper

Failure of suit—There has been some conflict as to the meaning of the word ‘fails’ It has been held that r 10 only applies where there has been a contest, or else an admission of the claim which has avoided a contest, and refers to cases of adjudicated success, and that, similarly, this rule applies only to cases of adjudicated failure, and to the other cases specified, as where the plaintiff has been dispaupered or the suit has been dismissed under O IX r 2, 3 ante (4) It was held, therefore, not to apply where the parties came to an amicable arrangement under which the suit was to be dismissed (5) And where an appeal in forma pauperis was withdrawn it was held that no order could be made either under this rule or r 9, and that it was not open to the Court to order the respondents to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties (6) The last decision but one has, however, been dissented from by the Madras High Court, which has held that the words “succeeds” in the last rule and “fails” in this, refer to the ultimate decision or the result of the suit, and not to the mode in which the decision is arrived at, that it would be doing violence to the language of the section to introduce the words “after contest” and that a pauper plaintiff is liable to pay the stamp duty if his suit is dismissed without trial (7) A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has more recently held that where there is a withdrawal as the result of a compromise, the plaintiff does not succeed within the meaning of the last rule, but "fails" within the meaning of this (1) The section has now been amended to include a withdrawal

The terms of this rule are mandatory, and it is obligatory upon the Court when it passes its decree to provide in that decree for payment by the plaintiff of the court fees (2) The decisions, however, are conflicting upon the question whether where the Court omits to make an order, the Government may, (3) or may not, (4) apply to rectify the decree R 12 now declares the right of Government to apply An order under this rule amounts to a decree in favour of Government against the unsuccessful plaintiff for the amount of the court fees, and can be executed by attachment and sale of any property he possesses (5) This and the last rule only deal with the fees payable to Government Costs, that is costs of parties inter se against a pauper plaintiff, might, it was held, be awarded to a successful defendant under Chapter XVIII of the former Code (6)

Where a suit is instituted by a next friend on behalf of a minor, the latter is the plaintiff It frequently is right to make a guardian or next friend liable for costs, but there are also cases in which it is not proper to do so And it does not necessarily follow that because the suit is unsuccessful, the next friend is, as a matter of course, to be ordered personally to pay the costs (7)

The origin of the last penal clause of sect 142 of the last Code is to be found in sect 53, Reg IV of 1827 known as Elphinstone's Code where however, it is made applicable to all plaintiffs alike It was omitted from the Code of 1859 but re enacted in that section with respect to pauper plaintiffs not for the purpose of exempting them from paying costs to a successful defendant but because it was deemed necessary to provide a special protection to defendants against being harassed by persons who ex hypothesi are not likely to be influenced by the fear of having to pay costs (8) It has now been altogether omitted

15 An order refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue; but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) incurred by the Government and by the opposite party in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper.
Refusal to allow applicant to sue as pauper to bar subsequent application of like nature.

Bar to subsequent application—There must be a “refusal” Therefore the rule does not apply where the Court has not passed such an order, as, for instance, if it returns the application to have the question of pauperism tried by a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, (1) or strikes off “for the present” the application for default by non appearance Under such circumstances the application may be renewed (2) The provisions, moreover, of this rule do not affect the right of a person against whom an order of refusal has been made to obtain a review, and an order under r 7, refusing leave to sue as a pauper, is subject to review under sect 114 (3) Assuming however that there is an order which is final, the bar under this rule being one to jurisdiction, a Court is competent and bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit (4)

On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the only course open to the applicant is that declared in this rule, viz to institute a suit in the ordinary way, and the date of the institution of that suit for the Costs incurred.—Although this rule makes it a condition precedent in the institution of an ordinary suit by a person whose application to sue in forma pauperis has been rejected that he should first pay the costs incurred by Government the suit ought not to be dismissed for default in payment of such costs when no demand for the payment has been made either on behalf of the Government or by the Court (5)

ORDER XXXIV.

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property

1 Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage

foreclosure sale and redemption*

Explanation—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage

Mortgage suits—This Order is taken (with the exception of rr 9 and 11 which are new) from sects 85-90, 92-94, 96, 97 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). R 14 is a provision analogous to sect 100 of that Act both dealing with charges. Certain amendments, chiefly by way of addition, have been made, to which notice will be drawn. The object of the introduction of this Order was stated to be that hitherto some confusion had been occasioned by the co-existence of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Code in regard to execution in mortgage suits. The incorporation of this Order in the Code would, it was said, be welcomed by every one who is familiar with the almost endless controversies which have gathered round the applicability of the provisions of the Code to the enforcement of decrees for sale under the Transfer of Property Act. It was considered that the provisions relating to execution in mortgage suits—that is, questions of procedure—should be dealt with in their entirety in the Code, and this Order has been introduced to give effect to this view. As a consequence of this the sections above mentioned of the Transfer of Property Act as also sect 99 (as to which see r 14) and a portion of sect 100 of that Act, have been repealed by the fifth schedule. The general effect of this order, therefore, is that the ordinary provisions of the Code apply to mortgage suits and the execution of mortgage decrees unless there be some special exception to the contrary. It has been said that the effect of the incorporation of these sections of the Transfer of Property Act is that the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court should discard any independent practice based on the old procedure (1). The subject of this Order has already been fully dealt with by Di Rash Behary Ghose in his work on mortgages and by Mr H S Gour in his Law of Transfer in British India. It is not necessary, therefore, to go over the same ground. We therefore content ourselves with noting the amendments and additions effected by the present Code.

R 1 is taken from sect 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the word "interest" substitutes in lieu of the words "in the property comprised in a mortgage," (1) the words "either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption". The former phrase 'Having an interest in the property, etc,' has been the subject of numerous cases, which will be found collected in Mr Gour's work. It was proposed to add at the end of the first paragraph of the rule the words 'and the decree shall not bind any person not so joined.' Sect 85 of the Act contained the proviso following 'Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest.' It was pointed out that this proviso had given rise to certain doubts which it was sought to remove by substituting for it the words cited with a view to making it clear (2) that a person not a party is not bound by a decree. It has been recently held that a mortgagee who is made a defendant and who omits to set up a mortgage is barred from suing on such mortgage where in consequence of his omission the property is ordered to be sold free from the mortgage which had not been pleaded (3). As regards the former proviso it was said (4) that the proviso subordinating the obligation to join to notice was unnecessary and misleading. For, in the absence of any discriminating equity affecting the right of excluded interests it was not clear what object the proviso was intended to serve. Could it be supposed that if the plaintiff had omitted to join a necessary party because he had no notice of his interest, then his interest would be differently affected to what they would be if he was excluded even though the plaintiff did have notice of his interest? Notice may sometimes affect the question but it does not always do so. The proviso has now been omitted but the proposed addition has not (probably as being unnecessary) been made. It has been held that a son in a Mitakshara joint family is a person having an interest in the mortgage and is a necessary party (5). But in a suit for sale on a mortgage where the defendant-mortgagors were the managing members of a Mitakshara joint family who in that capacity had purchased the mortgaged property it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the family was sufficiently represented by them and that the suit would not fail through non joinder of the other members (6). The Calcutta High Court has recently dissented from this holding that under this rule a mortgage suit brought by the karta of a joint family without making the other members of the family parties is not maintainable (7). It has also been held that the effect of an intentional non joinder of a subsequent mortgagee in a suit on a prior mortgage would not be the dismissal of the suit but only of so much of it as relates to property affected by the subsequent mortgage (1)

Even if the non joinder as a party defendant who ought to have been made a party to a suit for sale on a mortgage is by itself a defect fatal to the suit, such defect is cured if the Court acting under O I r 10, sub rule (2), adds such person as a defendant (2)

The Explanation to r 1 is new There were a number of decisions on the question whether a prior mortgagee was a necessary party in a suit to enforce a subsequent mortgage, a question the determination of which depended upon the meaning to be attached to the word "property" in sect 85 Was all that was involved in the puisne mortgagee's suit the equity of redemption, in which case the prior mortgagee not being interested therein need not be joined, or was the interest involved something more than the equity? in other words, the mortgaged property subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee, in which case the latter was a necessary party This question has now been settled by the exclusion of the ambiguous word "property" in the body of the rule and the addition of the Explanation which removes the doubts which have arisen from the conflict of authorities on the point

In r 2 (c) the words "if so required" have been added before "retransfer" The special Committee stating that according to Mofussil practice a retransfer was not ordinarily required, and being of opinion that this practice should not be altered It has been held that a Court passing a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit under this rule has no power to award interest at other than the contractual rate up to the time fixed for payment unless for some legal reason it sees fit to interfere with the contract as to the rate of interest (3)

The same Committee as regards r 3 omitted a proposed provision as to the defendant paying money to the plaintiff, considering it better that in every case he should pay into Court Clauses (a) and (b) of the same rule are new, as are also the similar clauses in rr 5 and 8 R 5 (2) deals with an application by the plaintiff only The concluding words of sect 89, "and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished," have been omitted

Clause (3) of r 8 appears to be an addition The question which may be raised in connection with this rule, whether one suit for redemption has the effect of barring a second suit for the same relief, has already been dealt with See notes to sect 9, O II r 2 sects 11-14, and Index

R 9 is new. It is a recognition of existing practice and remedies and is an obvious omission in the Transfer of Property Act

So also is r 11, which has been inserted in compliance with the suggestion of the Privy Council (4) This rule was in the Transfer of Property Bill, but

The third paragraph of r. 13 has been amended

2 In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court

Preliminary decree in foreclosure-suit shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or

(b) declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and directing—

(c) that if the defendant pays into Court the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall also, if necessary, put the defendant in possession of the property, but

(d) that, if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property

3 (1) Where, on or before the day fixed, the defendant pays

Final decree in foreclosure-suit into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up,

and, if so required,

(b) ordering him to retransfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree,

and, also, if necessary,

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property.

(2) Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property

Power to enlarge time Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day fixed for such payment

(3) On the passing of a decree under sub rule (2) the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed to be discharged

Discharge of debt. Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1) — See notes to r 1 ante The transfer of Property Act did not contain any provision for the passing of a final decree in cases where payment was made in accordance with the terms of the preliminary decree This was an omission which has been supplied in the first clause of this rule, and of rr 5 and 8, post These provide for the passing of final decrees in such cases

Extension of time — As to appeal see O XLIII r 1 (o)

4 (1) In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree to the effect mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 3 and also direct that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiff as aforesaid, together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same

Preliminary decree in suit for sale (2) In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or of any person interested either in the mortgage money or in the right of redemption, pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) on such terms as it thinks fit, including the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure the performance of the terms

5 (1) Where on or before the day fixed the defendant pays into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up, and, if so required,

(b) ordering him to retransfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree,
and also, if necessary,

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property

(2) Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in rule 4.

Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1) —See notes to rr 1 and 3 ante It is now provided by this rule that the application which follows a preliminary decree for sale is for a decree for sale (1) An application for a decree absolute for sale of a mortgage charge, under the terms of a consent decree which provided for satisfaction of the decretal debt by instalments, is an application under this order, and is governed by Art 181, Sched I of the Limitation Act, and must be made within three years from the accrual of the right to apply (2)

6 Where the net proceeds of any such sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such amount

In making a decree against the mortgagor personally under this rule, the Court may direct payment by instalments under O XX r 11 (3)

7. In a suit for redemption, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or

(b) declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and directing—

(c) that, if the plaintiff pays into Court the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall deliver up to the plaintiff, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his

- (d) that, if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall (unless the mortgage is simple or usufructuary) be debarred from all right to redeem or (unless the mortgage is by conditional sale) that the mortgaged property be sold

8 (1) Where, on or before the day fixed, the plaintiff pays ^{Final decree in re} into Court the amount declared due as afore ^{demption suit} said, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

- (a) ordering the defendant to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up,

and, if so required,

- (b) ordering him to retransfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree,

and also, if necessary,

- (c) ordering him to put the plaintiff in possession of the property

(2) Where such payment is not so made, and the mortgage is not simple or usufructuary, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the defendant, pass a decree that the plaintiff and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the plaintiff to put the defendant in possession of the property

(4) Where such payment is not so made, and the mortgage is not by conditional sale, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the defendant, pass a decree that the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is found due to the defendant, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the plaintiff or other persons entitled to receive the same

Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day fixed for payment.

Power to enlarge time

Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1)—Where in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the plaintiff owing to a bona fide mistake paid into Court less than the sum due, it was held that under this rule the Court had power to extend the time limited for payment of the full decretal amount (1) See notes to rr 1 and 3, ante payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in Order II, rule 2

(2) Nothing in sub rule (1) shall apply to any territories to which the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, has not been extended.

It has been said that this rule has merely effected a change of procedure in the manner in which mortgaged property must be realized in execution of money decrees (1)

Suit for sale—The Code repeals sect 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. In its place this rule has been enacted. The first part of that section provided that a mortgagee should not bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under sect 67 of that Act. In so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property under a judgment unconnected with the mortgage debt, it has been considered inexpedient. It was beyond doubt competent to a mortgagee to purchase the equity of redemption

tion from the mortgagor by an agreement subsequent to, and distinct from, the mortgage transaction. There was no reason, therefore, why it should not be equally competent to him to have it sold in satisfaction of any claim which he might have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage (1). This has accordingly been enacted. Sect. 99 spoke of "any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not". The present rule is limited to claims arising under the mortgage. To this extent only the former provisions are retained. The Select Committee were also at one time of the opinion that sect. 99, in so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the property under a judgment for the mortgage debt, served no useful purpose. As to this they wrote: "We understand that the provision was enacted to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the debt as such, and in execution selling the mortgagor's interest in the property; we, however, think that no such provision was needed, seeing that under the law, as it stood prior to the Act, the Courts never allowed the sale of a bare equity of redemption under a judgment on the covenant" (2). It was, however, subsequently considered that as the mortgagor would be deprived of the benefit of the period of redemption given him by a mortgage decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, unless the former provisions were maintained in respect of claims arising under the mortgage, the former restrictions should to this extent be retained in those territories to which that Act applied. Where a usufructuary mortgagee who had not obtained possession brought a suit for possession and this was compromised and by consent a simple money decree was passed in his favour it was held that the decree being one passed on a compromise, he was not precluded from bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of it (3). Where usufructuary mortgagees obtained a decree for possession and costs and then in execution of the decree for costs applied for attachment of part of the property, it was held that this application was not barred by this rule (4). In a recent case where mortgagees stating that they had relinquished their claim under the mortgage, obtained a simple money decree, and when this was not satisfied proceeded to put their mortgage into Court and prayed for a decree for sale on it it was held that the former proceedings were not a bar to this suit (5).

15. All the provisions contained in this Order as to the sale or redemption of mortgaged property shall, so far as may be, apply to property subject to a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 or in some other effectual way.

Interpleader—Prior to the English Judicature Acts, the right of interpleader at Common Law differed from that in Equity. Common Law interpleader was regulated by the Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Will 4 c 58) and the C L P Act of 1860 (2). The language of sects 470 and 471 of the last Code was almost identical with that of the first mentioned statute, and the English rulings, so far as the two enactments are the same applied (3). The English Acts with the exception of sect 17 of the C L P Act 1860 are now repealed, and the right of interpleader and practice in interpleader proceedings are regulated in England exclusively by O 57. As to the form of an interpleader suit see case last cited. The prohibition in r 5 forbidding a tenant to bring a suit to compel his landlord to interplead with another person not claiming through

ORDER XXXVI.

Special Case.

1. (1) Parties claiming to be interested in the decision of any question of fact or law may enter into an agreement in writing stating such question in the form of a case for the opinion of the Court, and providing that, upon the finding of the Court with respect to such question,—

Power to state case for Court's opinion.

(a) a sum of money fixed by the parties or to be determined by the Court shall be paid by one of the parties to the other of them ; or

(b) some property, moveable or immoveable, specified in the agreement, shall be delivered by one of the parties to the other of them , or

(c) one or more of the parties shall do, or refrain from doing, some other particular act specified in the agreement.

(2) Every case stated under this rule shall be divided into consecutively numbered paragraphs, and shall concisely state such facts and specify such documents as may be necessary to enable the Court to decide the question raised thereby.

2. Where the agreement is for the delivery of any property, or for the doing, or the refraining from doing, any particular act, the estimated value of the property to be delivered, or to which the act specified has reference, shall be stated in the agreement.

Where value of subject-matter must be stated.

3. (1) The agreement, if framed in accordance with the rules hereinbefore contained, may be filed in the Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit, the amount or value of the subject-matter of which is the same as the amount or value of the subject-matter of the agreement.

Agreement to be filed and registered as suit.

(2) The agreement, when so filed, shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the other or the others of them as defendant or defendants, and notice shall be given to all the parties to the agreement, other than the party or parties by whom it was presented.

4. Where the agreement has been filed, the parties to it shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court and shall be bound by the statements contained therein.

Parties to be subject to Court's jurisdiction.

5. (1) The case shall be set down for hearing as a suit instituted in the ordinary manner, and the provisions of this Code shall apply to such suit so far as the same are applicable.

Hearing and disposal of case.

(2) Where the Court is satisfied, after examination of the parties, or after taking such evidence as it thinks fit,—

(a) that the agreement was duly executed by them,

(b) that they have a bonâ fide interest in the question stated therein, and

(c) that the same is fit to be decided,

it shall proceed to pronounce judgment thereon, in the same way as in an ordinary suit, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow.

Proceedings on agreement—As O XIV rr 6, 7, ante, deal with the stating by consent of an issue in a suit, upon the finding of which an agreement becomes absolute, so the present rules deal with the power of parties to state a case for the Court's opinion which shall be set down for hearing as a suit (1) to proceed hereunder, be instituted by presenting a plaint in the form prescribed, but the summons shall be in the form No 4 in Appendix B or in such other form as may be from time to time prescribed.

(2) In any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms, respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend, and, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the decree, and such sum for costs as may be prescribed, unless the plaintiff claims more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and such decree may be executed forthwith.

Scope of rules—In 1885 was passed the English Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act (18 & 19 Vict c 67) Subsequently to the passing of the Code of 1859, the Indian Bills of Exchange Act (V of 1866) was passed. The words of the Indian Act were slightly larger than those of the English Act, (1) but in spirit the two Acts were precisely the same (2). The Code of 1877 consolidated the provisions of the Code of 1859 and of Act V of 1866 from sect 2, of which Act sect 532 in the last Code was taken (3). The intention of the Act was that where there was no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but that if the defendant had a real, though it may not be a good, defence, he should have leave to appear and to set it up (4). The effect of the provision therefore is, that where leave is refused, the plaintiff gets a decree on his allegations merely, unsupported by evidence, on proof of service of summons and on the usual certificate of the Registrar that no leave to defend has been obtained (5). If leave is granted, the suit proceeds as one instituted in the ordinary course, evidence being taken on both sides.

"Suits upon bills of exchange," etc.—The rule is confined to suits on negotiable instruments (6) and the plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal, and interest is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable (7). As, however, already stated, the plaintiff, when no leave to defend is granted, gets his decree upon his simple statement in the plaint unsupported by any evidence. It was accordingly formerly held, (8) that it was not the intention of the Legislature that a summons served in the form prescribed by the former section should have the effect of enabling the plaintiff's statement of the fact, in his petition to prevail without evidence. The section it was considered, applied only to those simple cases in which the negotiable instrument itself, together with mere lapse of time, was sufficient to establish for the plaintiff a prima facie right to recover. There fore the section was held not to apply where a promissory note was payable by instalments, and contained a stipulation that on default in payment of the first instalment the whole amount was to become due, and a suit was brought to recover the whole amount on default in payment of the first instalment, as in such case the plaintiff was obliged to allege the occurrence of another fact besides the lapse of time since the making of the bill, viz that the first instalment had not been paid, which fact was necessary according to the terms of the bill in order to complete the plaintiff's right to sue (9). The Explanation to the section of the last Code overruled this decision and declared that a suit on a negotiable instrument was not limited to such cases. Thus, had the case cited occurred after the enactment of the Explanation, a decree would have been granted (1). The last mentioned case appeared, however, to throw doubt on the point, and with a view to clear it up the following amendments were suggested —

(1) The Act is now repealed in the High Court (O II r 6), but is in operation in County Courts. In the former Court the procedure is by specially endorsed writ (O III r 6, O XIV r 1), which may be had in suits other than those on negotiable instruments to which the procedure is confined under the Code.

“The provisions of this rule shall not be deemed to be inapplicable to a suit merely because the cause of action includes facts which, if not admitted by the defendant, would have to be proved by the plaintiff.”

Illustrations

(a) A sues B upon a promissory note bearing an endorsement of payment which has been cancelled. This section is not inapplicable merely because A must prove that the note was endorsed by inadvertence, but that payment was not made and the endorsement cancelled in consequence.

(b) A executes, in favour of B, a promissory note for Rs 1,000 payable in two equal instalments on the 1st July and 1st September, respectively with a stipulation that, in default of payment of the first instalment, the whole amount shall become immediately payable. On the 15th July, B sues A for the whole amount. This section is not inapplicable merely because B must allege and prove that the first instalment was not paid on the 1st July.

As regards, however, the proposed amendment, the Special Committee reported that the explanation to sect. 532 of the last Code was inserted to negative the effect of the decision in 1 Cal 130 but its meaning as it stood was obscure. They therefore deleted the explanation and added the words italicized in the body of the rule, “the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted” which will remove the doubts at which the explanation was aimed. Suits under this Order must be brought within six months from the time the instrument sued on becomes due and payable (2).

Summons—The plaint is in the ordinary form but as evidence is not receivable, particular care must be taken to see that all the facts showing how the cause of action arose are stated in the plaint (3). The summons, however, either follows the Form in the Schedule, or is in such other form as the High Court may from time to time prescribe (See notes to next rule). After the usual return of service and the expiration of the period mentioned in the summons an order of Court for a decree should be obtained (4). Quære—whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be made before the time fixed by the summons has expired. But the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend has expired, to extend the time (5). But see now sect. 148 and notes to next rule. The plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons whatever sum, principal, or interest is, on the legal construction of the instrument, demandable, though as to interest beyond the scope of the instrument the question is a different one, and out of the scope of the Act (1) The rule, however, says that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a sum not exceeding that mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) Where a suit has been instituted under these provisions, which was held to be not maintainable under them, a fresh summons under the ordinary procedure may be ordered (2)

Leave to defend—Applications for leave to appear and to defend a suit must, according to the Limitation Act, be made within ten days from the date when the summons was served (4) It has been held, however, that the Court, on granting leave to issue a plaint under these provisions, may fix a reasonable time, having regard to the residence of the defendant, within which the latter may apply for leave to defend, and that the ten days prescribed by the Form was not an unalterable limit (5) In the last cited case twenty eight days was fixed by the summons itself as the time within which the defendant might apply for leave. But where the time fixed by the summons itself is ten days, though it has been a question of doubt whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be made before the time fixed by the summons has expired, the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend has expired, to extend the time (1). But see now notes to last rule. It has been held that in an application for leave to appear and defend, the defendant cannot go into the question whether the summons was served on the date shown by the sheriff's return or not at all (2).

When there is no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but if the defendant has a real (it is not necessary to say a good) defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up. As cases, however, sometimes occur where an apparently real defence is shown, but its sincerity is doubtful, there the defendant is let in to defend, only on the terms of his bringing the money into Court (3). It was held under the English Act that it was not necessary that there should be a defence on the merits, and that if the defendant appears and discloses any defence, legal or equitable, he will be allowed to appear and defend (4). In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claims compensation under sect. 95, he is entitled to apply for leave to defend, and if a prima facie case is made out, leave should be given (5). Where there is a reason to doubt the bona fides of the defence, the condition of paying the money into Court, or giving security, will be imposed (6). In giving leave to defend, the Court has a discretion to order security for costs, not only where there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence, but also where it appears unnecessary, though allowable (7). If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, he will be allowed to apply to have the leave rescinded (8). Where a conditional order is passed, but the condition is not performed, the order is a nullity, and subsequent steps to set it aside are unnecessary (9).

"Special circumstances"—The Court will determine in each case what these are. The point is, is it reasonable that the decree should be set aside? Under this rule, though a defendant has not come in within the time required, yet he may appear and make his defence on the decree against him being set aside (1). The question as to what took place upon the occasion of the service of summons by the Sheriff is one which may properly be taken into consideration on an application under this section to set aside the decree (2). But irregular service of summons on two out of three defendants to an action brought on a joint promissory note, does not give the defendant properly served any ground to question the decree passed against him (3).

ORDER XXXVIII

Arrest and Attachment before Judgment

Arrest before judgment

- 1 Where at any stage of a suit, other than a suit of the nature referred to in section 16, clauses (a) to (d), the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise,—

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for appearance

(a) that the defendant, with intent to delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

(i) has absconded or left the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(ii) is about to abscond or leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(iii) has disposed of or removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof, or

(b) that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit, the Court may issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance

Provided that the defendant shall not be arrested if he pays to the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant any sum specified in the warrant as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and such sum shall be held in deposit by the Court until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court

2. (1) Where the defendant fails to show such cause the Court shall order him either to deposit in Court money or other property sufficient to answer the claim against him, or to furnish security for his appearance at any time when called upon while the suit is pending and until satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit, or make such order as it thinks fit in regard to the sum which may have been paid by the defendant under the proviso to the last preceding rule.

(2) Every surety for the appearance of a defendant shall bind himself, in default of such appearance, to pay any sum of money which the defendant may be ordered to pay in the suit

Application for security—These rules amalgamate sects 477, 478, 479 of the last Code. The object of the process in this and the following rules is to have some security for the execution of the decree when it is passed, and that the person of the defendant will be within reach at that time. A creditor is, however, not entitled, merely because he has a just demand against his debtor, to arrest him before judgment, (1) nor can a debtor be arrested simply to secure easy execution of the decree should one be obtained (2). The procedure is only intended to secure to a creditor his rights when it is shown that a debtor with one or other of the intentions (3) mentioned in r 1, has done or is about to do the acts mentioned in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), or is about to leave British India (4) under the circumstances stated. And if a creditor procures the arrest of his debtor without reasonable or probable cause, he renders himself liable to a suit for damages or to summary proceedings under sect 95. It is not the principles governing the English writ ne exeat regno which govern the matter, but the words of the Code (5).

Order to give security.—In showing cause it may be shown that the suit is not a bona fide one, that the defendant has not done or is not about to do the acts charged in clauses (i), (ii), (iii) of r 1, or that he is not about to leave India, or that, if he is about to leave, none of the circumstances mentioned exist, or that even if the suit is bona fide the institution of it has been vexatiously delayed till the defendant is about to depart from India in order to embarrass or coerce him (6). It has been held that the word "claim" in sect 479 of the last Code meant the amount of money claimed, and that the security required to be given by a defendant who is arrested before judgment did not include security for costs (7).

3. (1) A surety for the appearance of a defendant may at any time apply to the Court in which he became such surety to be discharged from his obligation.

Procedure on application by surety to be discharged.

(2) On such application being made, the Court shall summon the defendant to appear or, if it thinks fit, may issue a warrant for his arrest in the first instance

(3) On the appearance of the defendant in pursuance of the summons or warrant, or on his voluntary surrender, the Court shall direct the surety to be discharged from his obligation, and shall call upon the defendant to find fresh security.

4 Where the defendant fails to comply with any order under rule 2 or rule 3, the Court may commit him to the civil prison until the decision of the suit or, where a decree is passed against the defendant, until the decree has been satisfied Procedure where defendant fails to furnish security or find fresh security.

Provided that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule in any case for a longer period than six months, nor for a longer period than six weeks when the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed fifty rupees

Provided also that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule after he has complied with such order

Failure to give security—It is of course only in the event of a defendant neither furnishing security nor offering a sufficient deposit that he can be committed to custody (1) When committed the Court can secure the defendant's appearance by a warrant to the jailor (2) The defendant is to be committed until the suit is decided or where a decree is passed against him until the decree has been executed The words in the former Code were "until execution of the decree" These last words were somewhat obscure It was said that they could not mean until steps were taken to execute the decree as such a construction would put an immense power of oppression into the hands of the judgment creditor It was held therefore that execution meant complete execution—that is until possession was given to the plaintiff of what was ordered by the decree An arrest therefore under this section became after decree an arrest until the decree was satisfied or wholly executed It therefore became subject to the limitation as to time imposed by sect 312 (now 58) which forbade extension of such arrest beyond the period of six months (3) The amendment gives effect to this view commitment becomes one in execution, and that after judgment the debtor must have subsistence money or be released. A 432 of the last Code however provided for subsistence money

5 (1) Where, at any stage of a suit, the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for production of property

(a) is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or

(b) is about to remove the whole or any part of his property from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court may direct the defendant within a time to be fixed by it, either to furnish security, in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court, when required, the said property or the value of the same, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security

(2) The plaintiff shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, specify the property required to be attached and the estimated value thereof

(3) The Court may also in the order direct the conditional attachment of the whole or any portion of the property so specified

Scope of rule—This rule corresponds with sects 81 and 83 of Act VIII of 1859 and amalgamates sects 183 and 184 of the last Code. Clause (b) of the former sect 483 has been omitted. The main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realize the amount of the decree supposing a decree is eventually made from the defendant's property (1). Though an attachment before judgment is directed by r 7 to be made in the same manner as attachment in execution, the objects for which these two sorts of attachment are made are entirely different. An attachment prior to decree is not an attachment for the enforcement of the decree but it is a step taken merely for preventing the debtor from delaying or obstructing such enforcement when the decree subsequently passed is sought to be executed (2). An attachment after decree is an attachment made for the immediate purpose of carrying the decree into execution and it presupposes an application on the part of the decree holder to have his decree executed (1) The scope and object of this and the following rules are merely to protect a plaintiff against loss arising from the defendant making away with his property pending the suit. They do not ensure to the plaintiff payment, in any event, of whatever may be decreed to him. They do so only so far as that is ensured by preventing the defendant making away with property (2)

The application—The jurisdiction given to Civil Courts to attach before judgment should be exercised with great discretion, and no Court should grant such an attachment on light grounds or unless it is perfectly satisfied by trustworthy evidence that the defendant is about to dispose of his property or to remove it from the jurisdiction of the Court (3) In all applications for attachment before judgment, there must be uberrima fides on the part of the plaintiff, and where the most perfect good faith is wanting the application should be rejected (4) The application can be made at any stage of the suit, but can be entertained only so long as the suit is pending (5) The facts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) must have been done with the intent mentioned in the first paragraph, namely, to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree which might be passed (6) Clause (a) says, is "about to dispose of" etc., therefore the section does not apply where the defendant has actually parted with the property (7) The section does not refer exclusively to moveable property but applies to immoveable property also (8) Where it was contended that the words in sect 484 of the last Code, "produce and place at the disposal of the Court" show that moveable property only can be attached it was held that the term "property" as used in the section, was wide enough to include property of every description moveable and immoveable, whether in the actual possession of the defendant or of some other person on his behalf and the words mentioned only referred to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (9) Attachment of property covers its profits (10) A Small Cause Court cannot, however attach immoveable property (11) Where the property is the property in suit, an injunction should be obtained under O XXXIX r 1 clause (a) which may be enforced under r 2 of that order by imprisonment or attachment. And where the property is not that in suit, an alternative remedy is given under r 1 of the same order clause (b) where the word "property" is not confined to property within the jurisdiction or to property which is in dispute in the suit (12) This rule has no application in divorce proceedings (13)

Property without the jurisdiction.—It was held under the last Code both that the section did not (1) and did (2) apply where the property sought to be attached was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was pending. A Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it. It was therefore held, under the Code of 1859, that a Court of Small Causes could not attach immoveable property under this section (3). This is the law now. It was held that the Court had jurisdiction where the property was a chose in action due from the Collector who, like the judgment-debtor, resided within the jurisdiction of the attaching Court (4).

Call for security—For form of order calling for security, see Sched I, App F, No 5. As to whether property beyond the jurisdiction can be attached under this rule, see last paragraph but one. Cause can be shown after security has been furnished to avoid attachment (5). Sect 145 ante, applies to sureties under this rule (6). An order under sect 483 of the last Code was not one of those in respect of which an appeal was given under sect 588 of that Code, (7) though an appeal lay from an order of attachment under the following section. An appeal lies under the present section (see O XLIII r 1 (g)). The words “produce and place at the disposal of the Court” refer only to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (8).

“Conditional attachment”—“Conditional attachment” might mean an attachment to be made conditionally on the security not being furnished or cause shown by the prescribed day, or it might mean an immediate attachment of a provisional kind conditioned to become plenary if security should not be furnished or cause shown according to the terms of the order. The form shows that the latter was the intention of the Legislature (9).

property specified, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, be attached.

(2) Where the defendant shows such cause or furnishes the required security, and the property specified or any portion of it has been attached, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn, or make such other order as it thinks fit.

Order of attachment.—This rule corresponds with sect 81 of the Code of 1859. It is only on the defendant's failure to show cause or furnish security that attachment can be made. So the latter cannot be ordered unless security has first been demanded, (1) and on one or other of the grounds stated in r. 5, ante (2). As to the form of an order under this section, see Sched I, App F, No 7. An appeal lies from it (3).

Effect of attachment.—The property in the goods attached is in nowise altered by the attachment, but remains as before in the defendant. The Court, as it were, locks up the goods, so that they cannot be disposed of or carried away in any mode that would delay or defeat the execution of the decree if obtained. (4) There is nothing in the Code which makes an attaching creditor a secured creditor, or creates any charge or lien in his favour over the property attached. The order does not purport to deal with any question of title. In other words, attachment prevents alienation, it does not confer title. The making of an order of attachment only operates so as to give the judgment-creditor certain rights in execution (5). It has always been held that an attachment before judgment conferred on the plaintiff no right prior to that of the Official Assignee (6). And it makes no difference whether the vesting order is before or after decree, for it cannot be contended that a decree qua decree simply constitutes the judgment creditor a secured creditor, or gives him any charge or lien over the property of the judgment-debtor (7). Under, however, the Code of 1859, an attachment, previous to the date of the vesting order, in the execution of a decree, conferred on the judgment creditor a right prior to that of the Official Assignee (1) This was so because under that Code the first attaching creditor had priority over other judgment creditors But no such priority is now allowed In fact, there is now no question of priority in a matter of this description, for under sect 295 (now 73) all decree holders who have applied for execution of their decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor before the realization of assets from him are entitled to rateable distribution (2) As already stated, an attachment creates no lien Whether the attachment be before or after judgment, all creditors are entitled to share rateably, subject to the provisions of sect 73 An attaching creditor has no exclusive claim until a sale at his instance has actually taken place The amendments of the law of procedure in this country have been based upon the principle that so far as possible the creditors should be treated pari passu, and that nothing short of actual realization of the debt due should give rights of priority (3)

Save and except in the two classes of cases mentioned in r 9 and 10, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative The effect of such an attachment, whether made before or after a decree, is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place Therefore though there is no distinct provision such as that which is to be found in sect 64, any private alienation of property attached before judgment during the continuance of the attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (4) An attachment does not affect rights of strangers See r 10, post Where an attachment under the former section, issued by a Court at the instance of a third party, prohibited the creditor from recovering and the debtor from paying the debt, it was held that an order on those terms was not an order staying the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect 15 of the Limitation Act (5)

7 Save as otherwise expressly provided, the attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree.

Mode of attachment—This section corresponds with sect 85 of the Code of 1859 As to attachment of property in execution, see O XXI, ante See also Forms in Sched I, the concluding words of the former section, "for money," have been omitted

8 Where any claim is preferred to property attached before judgment, such claim shall be investigated in the manner hereinbefore provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money

Claims to attached property—This rule corresponds with sect 86 of the Code of 1859 (1) The order dealing with the investigation of claims is O XXI, rr 58-63, which must therefore be applied to cases of attachment before judgment (2) In the last-mentioned case it was said that this section, which prescribes the manner of investigation, is silent as to the result, the Court apparently considering that the sections following sect 278 of the last Code had not been applied But however this may be, if the defendant has ceased to have any interest in the property, as where a vesting order in insolvency has been made, it is clear that the attachment ought to be raised, for when the law directs the claim to be investigated it implies that if the claim is made good the attachment, which was intended merely to preserve the defendant's interest from the effect of private alienations shall come to an end (3) The omission to object to the validity of the attachment on the ground that property sought to be attached is not transferable at the time when the application is made for attachment before judgment does not operate as a bar to the investigation of the objection when an application has been made for execution of the decree made in the suit (4)

9. Where an order is made for attachment before judgment, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn when the defendant furnishes the security required, together with security for the costs of the attachment, or when the suit is dismissed

Removal of attachment when security furnished or suit dismissed

Removal of attachment—This rule, which corresponds to sect 87 of the Code of 1859, indicates that in the event of the suit not being dismissed but decreed, the attachment shall subsist, and save in the case mentioned in this rule and in the next, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative (5) For the former words "the Court which passed the order shall remove" have been substituted the words italicized

execution of a decree, conferred on the judgment creditor a right prior to that of the Official Assignee (1) This was so because under that Code the first attaching creditor had priority over other judgment creditors But no such priority is now allowed In fact, there is now no question of priority in a matter of this description, for under sect 295 (now 73) all decree holders who have applied for execution of their decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor before the realization of assets from him are entitled to rateable distribution (2) As already stated an attachment creates no lien Whether the attachment be before or after judgment, all creditors are entitled to share rateably, subject to the provisions of sect 73 An attaching creditor has no exclusive claim until a sale at his instance has actually taken place The amendments of the law of procedure in this country have been based upon the principle that so far as possible the creditors should be treated pari passu, and that nothing short of actual realization of the debt due should give rights of priority (3)

Save and except in the two classes of cases mentioned in rr 9 and 10, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative The effect of such an attachment, whether made before or after a decree, is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place Therefore though there is no distinct provision such as that which is to be found in sect 64, any private alienation of property attached before judgment during the continuance of the attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (4) An attachment does not affect rights of strangers See r 10, post Where an attachment under the former section, issued by a Court at the instance of a third party, prohibited the creditor from recovering and the debtor from paying the debt, it was held that an order on those terms was not an order staying the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect 15 of the Limitation Act (5)

Investigation of claim to property attached before judgment.
 Claims to attached property.—This rule corresponds with sect 26 of the Code of 1800 (1) The order dealing with the investigation of claims is O XXI rr 55-63, which must therefore be applied to cases of attachment before judgment (2) In the last mentioned case it was said that this section, which prescribes the manner of investigation is silent as to the result, the Court apparently considering that the sections following sect 278 of the last Code had not been applied. But however this may be, if the defendant has ceased to have any interest in the property, as where a vesting order in insolvency has been made, it is clear that the attachment ought to be raised, for when the law directs the claim to be investigated it implies that if the claim is made good the attachment, which was intended merely to preserve the defendant's interest from the effect of private alienations, shall come to an end (3) The omission to object to the validity of the attachment on the ground that property ought to be attached is not transferable at the time when the application is made for attachment before judgment does not operate as a bar to the investigation of the objection when an application has been made for execution of the decree made in the suit (4)

9. Where an order is made for attachment before judgment, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn when the defendant furnishes the security required, together with security for the costs of the attachment, or when the suit is dismissed.

Removal of attachment when security furnished or suit dismissed.
 Removal of attachment.—This rule, which corresponds to sect 87 of the Code of 1800, indicates that in the event of the suit not being dismissed but decreed, the attachment shall subsist, and save in the case mentioned in this rule and in the next, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative (5) For the former words "the Court which passed the order shall remove," have been substituted the words italicized.

10 Attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree

Attachment before judgment not to affect rights of strangers, nor bar decree-holder from applying for sale

Rights of third parties—The attachment does not by this rule (1) affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit. Therefore the rights of rival creditors cannot be affected by it (2) But these rights must now exist prior to the attachment (3) The attachment does not prevent the property being sold in execution of another decree, whether that decree has been obtained before or after the attachment (4) The main object of the attachment before judgment being to prevent the defendant from disposing of or removing his property from the jurisdiction, this rule, it has been said, proves that this prevention is not intended merely for the benefit of the attaching creditor, but may enure also to the benefit of other persons (5) Though one person may have secured the goods, another decree holder may apply for the sale of them (6) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court, where the plaintiff had obtained a money-decree against a Mitakshara coparcener, after having obtained attachment before judgment of certain joint-property, and the debtor had died before execution, it was held on appeal that a subsequent application to execute the decree had been rightly dismissed, since an attachment before judgment is merely precautionary and creates no charge, and so could not defeat another co-parcener's title by survivorship (7) As to insolvency, see notes to r 6, ante

11. Where property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of this Order and a decree is subsequently passed in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution of such decree to apply for a re-attachment of the property.

object is to ensure to a plaintiff payment of his decree. Although they do not ensure this in any event, they do so only so far as that is ensured by preventing the defendant making away with property (1). In other words, the attachment does not of necessity ensure the property to the person who attaches it, provided only he eventually gets a decree. The plaintiff must not only wait until he has obtained a decree, but he is not competent to proceed against the property attached until he has taken the preliminary steps the law requires for its enforcement (2). He must, in other words, apply for execution just like any other creditor (3). This is now made clear by the addition of the words "upon an application for execution of such decree". When, however, an application for execution is made, by the terms of this rule no application for attachment is necessary, the attachment before judgment enuring and becoming upon and by virtue of the application for execution an attachment in execution (4). And upon principle it would seem that the date to be assigned to the attachment as an attachment in execution is that on which application for execution is made (5). It has been held that an attachment before judgment cannot be regarded as the inception of an execution, or as binding the goods in such a manner as to exclude the right of a third party (such as the Official Assignee) accruing after such attachment, but before judgment and warrant for execution (6).

Further, execution is necessary if it desired to control

try the suit (1) As to this, "Equity acts in personam," that is, the Court's directions are addressed to the defendant personally, and they are not regarded as directly affecting the subject matter in dispute. The application of the maxim in India is subject to the statute. The Code (2) has given to Mofussil Courts the power to act in personam. The Presidency High Courts under their Charters have a similar, but in terms less restricted, jurisdiction (3). Injunctions may be granted by all Civil Courts with the exception of Presidency and Provincial Small Cause Courts. The jurisdiction may be exercised either by a Court of first instance, or of appeal (4). The Court of first instance has, before appeal, no jurisdiction to grant an injunction after the claim is dismissed, and it has no jurisdiction after the appeal has been admitted to issue an injunction during the pendency of the appeal. Nor a fortiori when a suit for an injunction is dismissed, can the Court which dismisses such suit take upon itself to stay by injunction the execution of a decree passed in another suit (5). The Appellate Court has the same power in respect of the grant of an injunction as the first Court had (6). The Court may also interfere in revision (7).

The High Courts may enforce these orders by proceedings for contempt, (8) and the Code (r 2) invests Courts with power to compel obedience (9). The Code has also provided for the enforcement of decrees granting permanent injunctions (10). An injunction operates from the date of the order being made and not from the time of the sealing of the writ or even from the time of its being drawn up, and a party who has notice of an order is bound by it from the time it is pronounced. An injunction must, however erroneous it may be, be obeyed until it is discharged. It has, however, no effect in altering the rights of property (11).

Though the issue of an injunction is a matter of discretion, the latter is governed by certain general judicial principles (12). As an injunction is not to be arbitrarily refused where a proper case for its issue is made out, so it is not to be granted merely on the ground that it can do no harm (13). The subject-matter of a temporary injunction is the protection of legal rights pending litigation. Its object is to prevent future injury, leaving matters as far as possible in statu quo until the suit in all its bearings can be heard and determined (1) In exercising jurisdiction the Court does not pretend to determine the legal rights, but merely keeps the property in its actual condition until the legal title can be established. It interferes on the assumption that the party who seeks its interference has the legal right which he asserts, but needs the aid of the Court for the protection of the legal right or of the property in question until the legal right can be ascertained. The Court upon an application for a temporary injunction will deal with the injunction upon the evidence before it, and will confine itself strictly to the immediate object sought, and as far as possible abstain from prejudging the question in the cause (2) A temporary injunction is thus not decisive upon the merits, whilst a perpetual injunction, being in effect a decree, is conclusive upon all parties in interest.

The general rules governing the grant of relief are (a) the applicant must show a fair prima facie case in support of the right claimed, (3) (b) and an actual or threatened violation of that right, (4) (c) productive of irreparable or at least serious damage (5) So a temporary injunction will not be granted to restrain a wrong which is a mere technical invasion of the plaintiff's rights and does not threaten serious injury (6) As has been concisely said the Court will not grant an injunction unless real injury is apprehended (7) (d) The applicant's conduct should be such as not to disentitle him to assistance, it should be fair and honest, and free from acquiescence or delay (8) A less degree of acquiescence or delay will bar relief on an interlocutory application than at the final hearing. Apart from the fact that delay is calculated to throw doubt upon the reality of the alleged injury, it is not really material unless it has prejudiced the defendant (9) (e) There must be a greater convenience in grant than in refusing the injunction (10) Where, however there is a right it cannot, it has been said, be limited by the religious prejudices of neighbours (1) (f) Lastly, equally efficacious relief must not be obtainable by any other usual remedy except in case of breach of trust (2) In a recent case it was held that in deciding whether to grant a temporary injunction the Court should consider whether there was a substantial question pending decision as to the rights of the parties, and whether the nature of that question was such that it was proper that an injunction should meanwhile be granted and whether there would be a greater convenience in granting it (3)

With certain exceptions the aforementioned principles apply equally to perpetual as well as to temporary injunctions These exceptions are that whereas upon an application for a temporary injunction the plaintiff is required merely to show a clear prima facie case, in order to obtain a grant of a perpetual injunction, the legal right must have been established as well as the fact of its actual or threatened violation productive of serious damage (4) In the case of alleged acquiescence a stronger case must be made than would be a bar upon an interlocutory application

A mandatory injunction, that is, an order compelling a defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were at the time when the plaintiff's complaint was made may be either temporary or perpetual, and, generally speaking, the principles regulating its grant are those which are applicable to preventive injunctions, temporary or perpetual as the case may be (5) It has, however been doubted by one of the Judges in a recent case in the Bombay High Court whether a mandatory injunction can in strictness be considered as a temporary injunction under this rule (6) Prompt action is essential if a mandatory injunction is the desired remedy (7)

to see whether the operation of an injunction has been interfered with, regard must be had to the terms of the injunction itself. If it has been disobeyed, then proceedings in the matter of the contempt will lie against those in active disobedience and those who abet them. The High Courts have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing these decrees in personam. This jurisdiction has not been affected by the Code (1). It has been held that a District Court is not a Court of Record, and as such has no inherent power to commit for contempt (2). However this may be, the Code gives powers which according to the last cited case are only exerciseable when the Court is put in motion by a party who deems himself aggrieved. Sub rule (3) has been remodelled. See Bombay decision, cited (3). The Code, while providing a specific penalty for the breach of an injunction, does not provide that one of the penalties which result from infringement is that any dealing with property the subject of an injunction contrary to its terms is illegal and void. The words of the rule are not to be read as providing for any other penalty than that which is therein specially mentioned (4). Sect. 188 of the Penal Code does not apply to an order made by way of injunction in a civil suit between party and party (5).

As an injunction operates from the date of the order being made, a party may be committed for the disobedience of an order between the date it is made and the date of its issue, the reason being that if the rule were otherwise the party against whom the order was made would have all that time during which he might defeat it (6). A party, therefore, who has notice of an order, is bound by it from the time it is pronounced, and any means of information whereby notice is actually received is sufficient, it not being requisite that a defendant should be officially apprised of the injunction or be served with process in order to render him liable for contempt (7).

In order to decide whether there has been an actual breach of the injunction, it is important to observe the objects for which the relief was granted as well as the circumstances attending it. The violation of the spirit of an injunction, even though its strict letter may not have been disregarded, is a breach of the Court's orders (8). On the other hand, when the conduct complained of is literally a breach of the injunction, is not so in spirit, and the parties have acted in good faith and there is no evidence of any intention on the part to violate the order, they will be held guiltless (9). It is not for a defendant to say that he has acted well and that the injunction is against whom an injunction is issued may be a person who with knowledge of an injunction and assists that person to commit a breach of the injunction may himself be committed for contempt though not for breach of the injunction (1) As regards permanent injunctions, they are decrees, and are enforceable as such (2)

Appeal, Review, Revision.—An appeal lies from an order under rr 1, 2, 4 See O XLIII r 1 (r) And it has been held that since an order under r 1 means any order passed under r 1, and since under that rule a Court has the power of refusing an injunction, an appeal lies against an order refusing an injunction (3) It is essential to prove a wrong exercise of discretion (4) But in the under mentioned cases (5) a second appeal was held not to lie It has been held that no appeal lies from an order refusing to grant an injunction without notice (6) A permanent injunction is appealable as a decree (7) The Court may, under sect 115, revise an order, (8) or under sect 114 review (9) Where on an application for the issue of a temporary injunction the Court ordered the defendants to furnish security, it was held that this was not an order under r 1 of this rule, and was not appealable under O XLIII r 1 (10)

Damage or alienation, waste.—Sometimes an injunction, whether temporary or perpetual, is the instrument by which the Court specifically enforces the obligation if arising on contract, or specifically restrains the violation of those other obligations which are the subjects of the law of tort In other cases a temporary injunction is merely incident or ancillary to the general relief in this sense that it seeks merely to preserve the status quo, enjoining interference pendente lite by waste, damage or alienation with the subject of litigation or the fraudulent disposition of his property by a party defendant to a suit These two rules regulate the grant of temporary injunctions, the latter relating to temporary injunctions in cases of contract or tort, the former relating to injunctions against interference with the subject of litigation here spoken of as injunctions pendente lite

In the case of injunctions in matters of contract and tort, it is not necessary to separately consider temporary and perpetual injunctions in cases of contract, for the kinds of cases, whether of contract or tort, in which an injunction, either temporary or perpetual, may be granted, do not differ from each other If the case, as alleged, be such that at the hearing a perpetual injunction would not be granted, then clearly a temporary injunction ought not to be granted before the hearing, though, of course, it does not follow that a temporary injunction will be granted before the hearing, in every case in which a perpetual injunction might fitly be granted at the hearing, for to justify a temporary injunction, not only must the case be such that an injunction is the appropriate relief, but there must be the further ingredient that, unless the defendant is at once restrained by injunction, irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit can be decided upon its merits.

• In the limited class of cases which are now to be considered, the injunctions are always from the nature of the case of a temporary character, and must thus be separately considered

Injunctions may thus be roughly divided into (A) injunctions whether temporary or perpetual in cases of (a) contract or (b) tort (r 2), and (B) temporary injunctions against (a) interference with the subject-matter of litigation, or (b) fraudulent disposition of property pending litigation (r 1)

The power given by r. 1, clause (a), is substantially the same as that long exercised by English Courts of Equity. The object is to restrain the defendant from doing anything which may prevent the property remaining in statu quo during the pendency of a suit, upon the principle that when the plaintiff seeks to recover property in specie the defendant shall not be allowed to decide the question in his own favour by dealing or making away with the property, the right to which is the question in dispute. So the Court will restrain not only waste or damage to the subject of litigation whether moveable or immoveable property but may also restrain the mere alienation of property whether moveable or immoveable. For in every case the plaintiff might be put to the expense of making the vendor a party to the proceeding, and at all events his title, if he prevails in the action, may be embarrassed by such new outstanding title under the transfer (1). The Court, even though it acts on the doctrine of lis pendens, will prevent, if possible, the necessity of proceeding on such a principle and will not in a proper case deprive a suitor of the more effective protection of an injunction (2). This clause deals with suits in which a claim is made for specific property in the hands of the defendants, and it is only in such suits that any question can arise of waste, damage or alienation. The object of the exercise of the jurisdiction is to secure the safety of that specific property which is in dispute in the suit pending the litigation, as also at its close to secure that any decree which may be made with reference thereto shall not prove unfruitful (3).

The power, however, of issuing an injunction pendente lite ought to be most cautiously exercised. It is only in cases where property, which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit, is in danger of being destroyed, damaged, or put beyond the power of the Court, that the latter ought to interfere so as to restrain persons who may turn out in the final event of the litigation to be the actual owners of the property from proper enjoyment and possession of it (4).

that a perpetual injunction may be granted, but not an interlocutory one, where to refuse it may be to make the proposed decree unfructuous. An injunction in respect of civil judicial proceedings may have reference to an action or to proceedings taken in execution of a decree obtained therein. R 1 deals with the particular case of wrongful sale in execution, a provision which was not contained in the Code of 1859. Sect 56 of the Specific Relief Act was not intended to and does not affect temporary injunctions applied for under sect 492 (now r 1) against the wrongful sale of property in execution of a decree. Therefore a subordinate Court may issue an injunction restraining proceedings in execution pending before a superior Court (1).

The law does not say that a property is, or is about, to be wrongfully sold, but that it is in danger of being wrongfully sold (2). These words are wide enough to include, (3) and the section is, in fact, most commonly applicable to claims in execution made under O XXI r 58. If a claimant under that rule, whose claim has been disallowed, institutes a regular suit against the decree holder, the Court has power to grant an injunction staying the sale pending the decision of the suit (4). And the Code having been amended so as to admit of the grant of an interlocutory injunction in such a case, the procedure indicated by the rule should be followed, and a sale should in case of applications by third parties, be restrained by injunction in the suit brought to try the title, and not by the order of the Court executing the decree (5). And in the execution of a decree ordering the sale of property, it is not competent for a Court to refuse to sell it because a stranger who is in possession of such property impeaches the decree, the course open to him if he wishes a stay of execution being to file a suit and obtain an injunction for that purpose (6). But though where property is in danger of wrongful sale the Court may issue an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing his decree against the property, yet when the Court dismisses the suit in which the injunction is sought and has been granted, it has no right to further restrain the defendant from executing upon the mere possibility of the Appellate Court reversing its decree. Once the suit is dismissed the Court has, in point of law, no power at all to deal with the proceedings in the suit in which execution has issued (7). Upon the dismissal of a suit for an injunction restraining the sale, the Appellate Court may issue a temporary injunction restraining the decree holder from proceeding with execution pending the appeal, (8) and the application may be granted subject to the terms of the applicant giving such security as the Court thinks fit (1) This decision has, however, recently been dissented from, the Court holding that in a case like this it was impossible to say that the property was in danger of being wrongfully sold • that sect 492 of the last Code required that it must be “proved” that the property was in such danger, and that to hold in such an application this was proved would be to decide an appeal which was not before the Court (2) It is submitted that the question is rather one of fact than of law, though no doubt dealing with the matter as one of fact the decree appealed from would, unless it was clearly erroneous, prove a serious obstacle to the grant of an injunction. The Code directs that ordinarily before granting an injunction notice of the application should be given to the opposite party (3) Where a Court made an order granting a temporary injunction without directing notice of the application for an injunction to be issued to the other side, and its order directing stay of sale of property in execution was passed ex parte without the other side being given an opportunity to show cause, it was held that the order was irregular (4) The application should be made without unnecessary delay, (5) and should on the face of it disclose a sufficient ground to warrant an order being made as prayed (6) The meaning of the word “wrongfully” may, in certain cases, be open to doubt (7) It is, however, clear that the property is not in danger of being wrongfully sold, when the plaintiff has no title to or interest in it, or if he has an alleged interest, when such interest is not the subject of sale in execution (8) So where ancestral property was attached in execution of a decree and a son of the judgment debtor instituted a suit to establish his right to the property and made an application for a temporary injunction directing stay of sale pending the decision of the suit, it was held that, inasmuch as what was advertised to be sold was the right and interest of the plaintiff's father in the property, it could not be said that the property was being wrongfully sold in execution of a decree and the temporary injunction ought not to have been granted (9) It has been said that in interpreting this portion of the Code a Judge cannot be too careful as to the mode in which he permits the machinery of the Courts to be used for the purpose of enabling a plaintiff in one suit to delay a decree holder in another from obtaining the fruit of his judgment by executing his decree in ordinary course against the property of his judgment debtor At the same time, it is of course, most desirable to guard as far as possible, against a multiplicity of suits, which was one of the objects the Legislature had in view in enacting the provision in its present shape The Courts will, therefore amongst other things, consider whether the refusal to grant the application for an injunction will result in further litigation, and whether any practical injury will result to any one if the injunction be allowed (10) It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the term 'decree' as used in the Code (1) does not include the decree of a Court of Revenue and that therefore an application for stay of sale in execution of a decree of a Court of Revenue in a suit under sect 93 of Act VII of 1881 cannot be entertained by a Civil Court (2)

Fraudulent disposition of property—This provision differs from that enacted by clause (a) in that the property dealt with by the injunction is not the property in dispute in the suit namely that to which both parties lay claim and the title to which has to be decided but is property whether moveable or immovable (3) the title to which is admittedly in the defendant and therefore, not in dispute in the suit. It presupposes a general intention on the part of the defendant to defeat and defraud his creditors and permits of an injunction analogous to the remedy of attachment before judgment (4). The ordinary rule is that pending a suit to enforce a general claim against a person there cannot be an injunction to restrain him from parting or dealing with his property not being property specifically in dispute in the suit (5). When however such intended parting and dealing with property is not done in the bona fide exercise of ownership but with an intent to defraud persons who being creditors of the owner, have or might have the right to resort to such property in satisfaction of their claim there arises in their behalf an equity to restrain such threatened dealing with the property even as against its legal owner. Both an attachment under O XXXVIII r 6 and an injunction under this clause have as their subject matter not the property in suit but the property of the defendant therefore applications under these provisions are clearly distinguishable from an application for an injunction under clause (a) against the waste damage and alienation of property which is in dispute in the suit. And as applications under that Order and clause (b) are both distinguishable from an application under clause (a) so also applications under that Order and clause (b) respectively are clearly distinguishable from each other. O XXXVIII r 6 is applicable only to cases where it is probable that the defendant is about to make away with his property so as to make it impossible for the plaintiff to execute any possible decree against him and empowers the Court in such a case to make an order calling upon the defendant for security and in default thereof to attach the property. It has no application where the property is the property in suit which must if necessary be followed under the provisions of r 1 clause (a). The latter provision applies to a case where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant in possession is likely to damage and make away with any property in dispute in the suit and empowers the Court in such a case to issue an injunction to the defendant to refrain from the particular act complained of (6). But though O XXXVIII r 6 and r 1 clause (b) of this Order have both this in common that the property to be dealt with by the Court is not that in dispute in the suit the following important differences exist between these provisions. In the first place, the property is actually attached in the one case, while in the other the property is left in the owner's hands, subject only to the prohibition enjoined by the injunction. Secondly, the provisions as to attachment are generally limited to property sufficient to satisfy the decree which may be passed in the suits in which the application for attachment is made. Thirdly, questions have arisen as to the possibility of attachment where the property is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is pending, (1) whereas an injunction, in so far as its action is in personam, is not so limited. Lastly, any private alienation made subsequent to attachment is null and void, but such is not the case with alienations made subsequent to the issue of an injunction either under clause (a) or (b) of the first rule (2).

"Breach of contract."—See Woodroffe on Injunctions, Ch. VI, where the subject is fully considered. Whether or not there has been a breach of contract in any particular case depends on the facts of that case, and the substantive law governing it. The ordinary remedy for such breach is damages. Extraordinary remedies are specific performance, rescission, cancellation, receiver and injunction. With this last relief in its temporary form, the Order alone deals. The Court will interfere by injunction, to prevent the violation of contracts, and to compel parties to perform their covenants and agreements by injunction, temporary or perpetual, mandatory or otherwise. Certain common conditions are essential to the grant of this relief, viz (a) the Court must be one of competent jurisdiction (3) to grant the relief prayed, (b) the agreement must constitute a contract (4) (c) such contract must not be one the performance of which would not be specifically enforced, (5) for injunctions respecting contracts must be governed by rules relating to specific performance (6). Where an agreement is of an affirmative character, the remedy lies in specific performance, and an injunction may also be granted both for the enforcement of negative terms, if any, and also in aid of and ancillary to the relief sought by way of specific performance of the contract. If, however, an agreement, though of an affirmative character, is such that the Court would not specifically enforce it, no injunction will be issued to prevent the breach thereof, (7) except in certain cases of negative agreements coupled with affirmative

(26) The decision in Darab Kuar v Gombi Kuar, 22 A 449 (1900), that the section does not apply to cases of injury in tort and acts of trespass, is clearly erroneous.

3 The Court shall in all cases, except where it appears that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party.

Before granting injunction Court to direct notice to opposite party.

4. Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

Order for injunction may be discharged, varied or set aside.

Practice. Notice—The present Order contains the practice as regards temporary injunctions. The practice as regards perpetual injunctions is the same as that which governs the making of decrees generally (1) Injunctions are granted upon suit, and should as a rule be specifically prayed for when the obtaining of this form of relief is a substantial object of the action. In urgent cases application for an injunction may be made ex parte without notice and before or after appearance. As, however, enacted by r 3, notice as a general rule must be given to the opposite party. The power to issue an ex parte injunction no doubt exists, but the greatest care should be employed in its exercise, and only in cases where considerable mischief might ensue if the issue of the process were delayed until notice was given (2) If the Court be of opinion, upon an application ex parte, that the case is not so urgent as to require its immediate interference, it will either grant a rule nisi or order notice of the application to be served on the defendant. Where an injunction is granted without notice the party aggrieved may apply either to have it discharged under r 4 or he may appeal, (3) though the former appears to be the more proper course. No appeal lies from an order refusing to issue an injunction without notice to the opposite party (4) In other than urgent cases application is generally made by motion for a rule nisi or upon notice before or after appearance of the defendant.

Instead of issuing an injunction in the first instance the Court may grant an interim order, (5) which is really an order in the nature of an injunction granted when the plaintiff, not showing quite a case for an ex parte injunction without more, shows a case for giving short notice of motion for an injunction and for protection in the meantime.

An interim order and a rule nisi may be, and ordinarily are, granted at the same time. In the case of every application it must be proved either (as is usually the case) by affidavit, or otherwise, that sufficient grounds exist for the grant of the relief claimed (1) The defendant's admission may, of course, be sufficient (2) Particular care must be taken to state all material facts fully and fairly in applications for an ex parte injunction, (3) such as injury, (4) defendant's intention to waste, damage, alienate, or to commit some other threatened injury (5)

If sufficient prima facie evidence is given the Court may either grant an injunction absolutely or as provided for in r 2 on terms It may require the plaintiff or defendant to enter into terms as a condition of withholding an injunction The most usual undertaking is to require a plaintiff as a condition of the Court's interference in his favour to abide by any order which it may make as to damages (6) The undertaking is ordinarily given by Counsel or pleader on behalf of the party for whom he appears, or by the party appearing in person, and forms part of the order of injunction

In some cases the motion for a temporary injunction is treated as a trial of the action, and the hearing of the cause is not proceeded with, the injunction being by consent made perpetual on the motion In cases, however, where relief, additional to that by injunction, is sought, such a course is not feasible, and the trial proceeds, when upon judgment the injunction is made permanent or dissolved. If upon judgment the action is dismissed, any injunction which may have been granted goes as a matter of course An injunction which has been granted upon an interlocutory application is superseded by the judgment in the action If it is intended that it should remain in force it must be expressly continued.

Discharge, Variance and Dissolution A marked feature of temporary injunctions, as distinguished from those which are final or perpetual, is that the former are liable to be dissolved on notice upon sufficient cause shown at any stage of the proceedings after, or perhaps even before, the coming in of the answer (7) The application should be made on motion at any time before the hearing of the cause in which it was granted (8) and before the Court by which the Court was satisfied, (1) unless the case has been transferred, when an appeal may be made to that Court to which the case has become attached. The same rules of pleading and evidence apply both to applications for the grant and dissolution of injunctions. The injunction will either be continued or dissolved according to the merits as disclosed by the pleadings and the preponderance of the evidence.

If an injunction obtained ex parte is set aside on the ground of concealment of material facts, (2) or an injunction granted on non est affidavits as having been issued on insufficient grounds (3) the plaintiff may apply again if he can make out a sufficient case.

An appeal lies under O. XLIII r. 1 (r) from an order under this rule, the appeal not being limited to an affirmative but including also a negative order (4).

Interlocutory Orders

6. The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, order the sale, by any person named in such order, and in such manner and on such terms as it thinks fit, of any moveable property being the subject-matter of such suit, or attached before judgment in such suit, which is subject to speedy and natural decay, or on account of any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once.

Power to order interim sale.

Sale of perishable articles.—The benefit of the provisions of the last Code should plainly be claimable in the case of such articles, and the section has accordingly been amended. No amendment has been added so as to empower the Court to order sale of such articles if the state of the market requires such a course.

(2) The provisions as to execution of process shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this rule.

"Application"—The application can only be made after summons has been served and after reasonable notice of the intention to apply for the order has been given in writing to the defendant (1) See next rule

Inspection—The principle upon which the right of inspection is justified is that wherever in respect of the property of an individual a right accrues to another which cannot be measured without inspection of the subject or property, the Court is competent to compel the proprietor to permit such inspection as indispensable for administering justice (2) Under this rule the Court has jurisdiction to make an order for preparation of an inventory (3)

Detention, etc—An order for investment is not an order for detention, custody or preservation under this rule (4)

"Subject matter of such suit"—The words of the English rule or as to which any question may arise therein were originally omitted because it was thought that the words marginally noted were sufficiently comprehensive to cover all matters in issue in the suit, (5) but they have now been inserted

8 (1) An application by the plaintiff for an order under rule 6, or rule 7 may be made after notice to the defendant at any time after institution of the suit

(2) An application by the defendant for a like order may be made after notice to the plaintiff at any time after appearance.

Decree not containing order for adjustment—It was held in the under-mentioned case (1) that a separate suit was not necessary, and that where a decree does not expressly direct an adjustment of accounts such adjustment can be ordered in execution if it be shown from the nature of the decree that it could and should have contained such an order and is imperfect without it.

Deposit.—The rule applies only when the party making the admission holds the property or other thing which the party in whose favour the order is made seeks to have delivered to him. But even if this rule is intended to apply to a case where the property is not so held by the party making the admissions, it would not cover the case where the money was held by another Court to the credit of another suit (2)

ORDER XL.

Appointment of Receivers.

1. (1) Where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order—
Appointment of receivers.

- (a) appoint a receiver of any property, whether before or after decree,
- (b) remove any person from the possession or custody of the property,
- (c) commit the same to the possession custody or management of the receiver, and
- (d) confer upon the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realization, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of documents as the owner himself has, or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit

(2) Nothing in this rule shall authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove

2 The Court may by general or special order fix the amount to be paid as remuneration for the services of the receiver.
Remuneration.

3. Every receiver so appointed shall—Duties.

- (a) furnish such security (if any) as the Court thinks fit, duly to account for what he shall receive in respect of the property,
- (b) submit his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs,
- (c) pay the amount due from him as the Court directs, and
- (d) be responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence.

4. Where a receiver—

ment, or land of which the revenue has been assigned or redeemed, and the Court considers that the interests of those concerned will be promoted by the management of the Collector, the Court may, with the consent of the Collector, appoint him to be receiver of such property.

Amendments.—The former Chapter XXXVI, dealing with Receivers, contained three sections, 503, 504, and 505. Sect. 503 has (subject to the amendments indicated) been incorporated in rr 1-3. R 1 corresponds with the first half and the last paragraph of sect 503. R 2 corresponds with the first portion of clause (d), the rest of that clause being retained in r. 1. R 3 is the second half of sect. 503, less the last paragraph, which has been put in r 1. R 4 is new. R 5 is sect. 504. Sect 505 has been omitted. This is the most important change effected, as the former restriction of power to High Courts and District Courts has been removed. Other amendments of former provisions appear to be of a verbal character.

Just and convenient.—These words are derived from the English Judicature Act which greatly enlarged the powers which the Court of Chancery formerly exercised, and the Courts in India have the fullest jurisdiction to appoint, as well as to remove a receiver in the exercise of judicial discretion. (1)

Definition and nature of the Office of Receiver.—A receiver is an officer appointed by the Court to receive and preserve the property or fund in litigation pro tempore when it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should hold it, (2) or where a party is incompetent to do so, as in the case of an infant (3). A receiver is a judicial officer, originally of the Court of Chancery, and as a general rule

a mere custodian having no powers except those conferred by the order of his appointment, though with the growth of Equity jurisdiction it has become usual to clothe them with much larger powers than were formerly conferred (1) A receiver is an officer of the Court through whom Equity takes possession of the property which is the subject of a litigation, preserves it from waste and destruction secures and collects the proceeds and ultimately disposes of them according to the rights and priorities of those entitled thereto whether regular parties in the cause, or only coming before the Court in a reasonable time and in the due course of procedure to assert and establish their claims As the representative of the Court he is subject to its orders accountable in such manner and to such persons as the Court may direct and has in his character as receiver no personal interest save that arising out of his fiduciary capacity and responsibility for the correct and faithful discharge of his duties He is not the representative of a party or parties but the representative of the Court (2) A receiver can only be properly granted for the purpose of getting in and securing funds which the Court at the hearing or in the course of the cause will have the means of distributing among the persons entitled to those funds (3) The receiver appointed in a particular suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court so to speak for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court in order to preserve the subject matter of the suit pendente lite and the possession of the receiver is simply the possession of the Court To such an extent is this the case that any attempt to disturb that possession without the leave of the Court is a contempt of Court The receiver has no personal rights in the property and he cannot take any steps even for the purpose of defending his possession without the sanction of the Court Also as a rule so little personal interest of any kind has he in the matter that he is not justified himself in making any application whatever to the Court If it is necessary that he should take action of any sort it is for the parties to the suit, or one of them to come to the Court to put him in motion and whatever the receiver rightly does with regard to the property, he does it simply in the character of agent for the owners of the property or the persons interested in it and with certain exceptions in no sense is principal (4) Although ordinarily a receiver does not himself apply for commencing proceedings for contempt and although generally speaking the action is taken by the parties beneficially interested in the property there is nothing to prohibit his doing so Receivers have on occasions taken action themselves without the parties coming forward in the matter (5) A receiver has a proprietary right or interest whatever Notwithstanding his appointment the proprietary right in the estate remains in the persons who are by law entitled to the estate (6) The receiver's possession is not a possession by any personal right It is the possession of the Court, and he is totally devoid of any interest in the property (1) A receiver should not be appointed in supersession of a bona fide possessor of the property in dispute unless there is some substantial ground for interference (2)

The general objects sought by the appointment of a receiver may be described to be to provide for the safety of property pending a litigation, and until the hearing of the cause, (3) or during the minority of infants to preserve property in danger of being dissipated or destroyed by those to whose care it is by law entrusted, or by persons having immediate but partial interest therein (4) A receiver duly appointed is from the moment of his appointment to be considered as an officer of the Court itself He will be protected by it in the proper discharge of the necessary duties of his office, the possession of the receiver not being permitted to be disturbed without the special leave of the Court (5) and it will be treated as a contempt of the Court if any such interference takes place (6) the reason being as explained by Lord Eldon (7) that their possession is the possession of the Court, (8) and the Court being competent to examine the title will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of law, but will itself examine the title, the mode being by permitting the party to come in to be examined pro interesse suo (9)

The receiver's functions are to obey the orders of the Court, collect and account for the rents, and manage the estate, and the Court will see that this is done and protect the agent appointed under its order (10) Under the last Code a receiver might have been appointed of any property moveable or immoveable, the subject of a suit or under attachment (11) The words of the present rule are "any property," without either of these qualifications, which however doubtless still subsist Where a receiver is required for the purpose not only of receiving rents and profits, or of getting in outstanding property but of carrying on or superintending a trade or business, he is usually called a manager, or a receiver and manager, (12) though the terms are synonymous (13) The appointment of a manager implies that he has power to deal with the property over which he is appointed manager, and to appropriate the proceeds in a proper manner. He is bound to carry on in accordance with the general course of business adopted by the particular trade and is the servant and officer of the Court and must, upon any question arising as to the character or details of the management be directed by the Court, which on appointing a manager of a business or undertaking in effect assumes the management into its own hands. Managers are responsible to the Court which appoints them, and no order of any of the parties interested in the business over which they are appointed managers can interfere with this responsibility. The Court will in no case assume the management of a business or undertaking except with a view to the winding up and sale of the business or undertaking. The management is an interim management, its necessity and its jurisdiction spring out of the jurisdiction to liquidate and sell, the business or undertaking is managed and continued in order that it may be sold as a going concern and with the sale the management ends. A manager may be appointed to carry on a private trade or business so as to wind it up for the benefit of the parties interested (1). The Court, if it can appoint a receiver has ample power to provide for the management of the property and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (2). In cases where the manager of the estate must necessarily reside in the country where the estate is situated, it is usual in English practice to add to the order directing the appointment of a manager, in order for the appointment of one or more consignees (who are the paid agents of the Court to manage the estate which is in the hands of the Court) resident in England to whom the produce of the property in question may be remitted and by whom it may be disposed of (3).

The possession of the receiver is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed (4). His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceeding according to their titles. The property in his hands is in cu tota levis for the person who can make a title to it. It does not follow that because wide powers are conferred upon receivers including a power to remove the property in possession his relation either to the Court or to the parties interested in the proceeding undergoes any change in proportion to the extent of his powers (5). The appointment though it may operate to change possession has no effect itself upon the title to the property in any way and determines no right as between the parties (6). Although a receiver is an officer to hold property for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled to it yet when such property is ascertained, the receiver is considered as his receiver (1) He is not appointed for the benefit of strangers to the suit, but he is not to be regarded in any sense as the agent or representative of either party to the action, (2) though the ordinary law of principal and agent applies to this extent, that what the receiver rightly does he does in the character of agent for the owner (whoever he be) of the property, and this is so even in the case of parties who opposed his appointment or objected to his receiving particular powers (3) It was held under the Code of 1859, which contained less extensive provisions than those of the last and present Code, that his duties as officer of the Court were confined in the case of property the subject of attachment to realizing, preserving, or managing the property for the collection of the moneys and money profits due to the debtors (4) Where, however, the receiver of attached property acts in the exercise of powers conferred upon him by the Court, it is erroneous to regard him as the judgment creditor's agent because on his application the appointment is made. The appointment is the act of the Court, and once made he is an officer of the Court and subject to its orders (5) A receiver is frequently spoken of as the "hand of the Court," and the expression very aptly designates his functions as well as the relation which he sustains to the Court. The assets and property in his hands are as much in the custody of the law as if levied upon under an execution or attachment, it being held that the appointment of a receiver is in effect an equitable execution by means of which the Court makes a general appropriation thereof, leaving the question of who may finally be entitled to be determined thereafter (6) When a party is declared entitled to the property by the final decree in a suit the Court has no option but to give that party possession of it. The Court having been in possession of the property on behalf of the parties to the suit is bound to give possession to the successful party in that suit. Any one else entering into possession would be a trespasser (7) He has no estate or interest himself, and his power to manage is created simply by the order of the Court appointing him and is binding only upon the persons before the Court (1) His powers at best are no more than those which the parties to the suit turn out to be possessed of when the case is finally decided, but if he takes possession of property under colour of his appointment his conduct cannot be disputed by a motion to discharge or get rid of the attachment (2) As the servant of the Court and not of the parties he has only such power as the Court may choose to give him and it is a contempt for any of the parties to enter into an agreement with him restricting and controlling his powers (3)

Appointment of receiver is a form of specific relief—The appointment of a receiver pending a suit is a form of specific relief (4) The last Cod (5) further provided for the appointment of a receiver of property under attachment (6) This can still be done by virtue of the words any property and before or after decree Relief by specific performance injunction and receiver belong to the same branch of the law Moreover the appointment of a receiver operates as an injunction against the parties their agents and persons claiming under them restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7) and an order for an injunction is always more or less included in an order for a receiver it is not necessary if a receiver be appointed to go on and grant an injunction in terms (8) All three forms of relief are dealt with by the Specific Relief Act The issue of temporary injunctions and the appointment of receivers together with the subject of arrest and attachment before judgment and interlocutory orders were dealt with by the last Code under the single heading of Provisional Remedies (9) Relief granted by appointment of a receiver pendente lite bears in many respects a close analogy to that by temporary injunction Both are extraordinary equitable remedies as distinguished from the ordinary modes of administering relief Both are essentially preventive in their nature being property used only for the prevention of future injury rather than for the redress of past grievances Both have one common object in so far as they seek to preserve the res or subject matter of the litigation unimpaired to be disposed of in accordance with the future decree or order of the Court (10)

Whether however the negative duty or duty to abstain be contractual or general the injunction which enforces it is the same in nature and form The general grounds of similarity between relief by receiver and by injunction have been adverted to Perhaps the principal element of difference between these two important remedies lies in this that an injunction is strictly a conservative remedy merely restraining action and preserving matter in statu quo without affecting the possession of the property or fund in controversy while the appointment of a receiver is usually a more active remedy since it changes the possession as well as the subsequent control and management of the property. The Court by an injunction ties up the hands of the defendants, and preserves unchanged not only the property itself but the relations of all parties thereto. But in appointing a receiver the Court goes still further, since it wrests the possession from the defendant, and assumes and maintains the entire management of the property or fund, frequently changing its form, and retaining possession through its officer, the receiver until the rights of all parties in interest are satisfactorily determined.

From the point of resemblance already indicated, it is not to be inferred that the appointment of a receiver necessarily follows from the granting of an injunction or that the two remedies are necessarily inseparable. And while it frequently happens that the Courts are called upon to administer both species of relief in the same action and at one and the same time yet it by no means follows that because an injunction is granted a receiver must be appointed and the two are to be treated as distinct and independent matters. The Court, therefore, may refuse a receiver although the case presented is a fitting one for an injunction, and although an injunction has already been granted (1). A distinction exists between the case in which an injunction and that in which a receiver will be issued and appointed respectively. "That distinction seems to be that, while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case it would be sufficient if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, while in the latter case a good prima facie title has to be made out" (2).

Relief, whether it be given by the issue of an injunction or the appointment of a receiver, is granted generally upon the principle quia timet, that is, the Court assists the party who seeks its aid, because he fears (quia timet) some future probable injury to his rights or interests, and not because an injury has already occurred which requires any compensation or other relief.

Law relating to receivers—The law relating to the appointment of receivers in Civil suits (3) in British India (4) is contained in this Code (5) and in the Specific Relief Act, (6) which merely declares that the appointment of a receiver pending a suit rests in the discretion of the Court, and refers to the Code of Civil Procedure for the mode and effect of their appointment and for their rights, powers, duties, and liabilities. Both the earlier Codes (Act VIII of 1859, and X of 1877) dealt with the subject (7). Act X of 1877, however contained provisions of a more complete character and which were in fact

th some minor alterations in the sections relating to receivers, the same as one of the present Code. Sect 92 of Act VIII of 1859 enabled the Court to appoint a receiver or manager in all cases in which it might appear to the Court to be necessary for the preservation or the better management or the custody of any property "which is in dispute in a suit," and sect 213 enabled the Court to appoint a manager to realize debts or rents and receipts of landed property where the debts or land were attached in execution of decree. Chapter XXXVI. of the Code of 1877, which with some minor alterations,⁽¹⁾ was identical with the same Chapter of the last Code, supplied the place of both of these provisions, and going further, gave the Court very general powers as to the appointment of receiver ⁽²⁾ Further, orders made under sect 92 of Act VIII of 1859, were appealable only at the instance of the defendant,⁽³⁾ but orders made under sect 503 of the Codes of 1877 ⁽⁴⁾ or 1882 ⁽⁵⁾ were appealable at the instance of either party. Prior to the establishment of the High Courts, the Supreme Courts of the Presidencies appointed receivers following the principles and practice of the Court of Chancery in England ⁽⁶⁾ The provisions of the present Code are (with one important exception) the same as those of the last, with certain omissions which have been noted and additions which have been italicized, and the principal of which will be found in rr 1, 2, and 4. The exception is the omission of sect 505 of the last Code as to which see post.

Jurisdiction to appoint a receiver—The jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in this country to grant relief by injunction or receiver is determined by the Code and Specific Relief Act. Certain common conditions are necessary to the existence of jurisdiction to grant either of these forms of relief. Shortly stated ⁽⁷⁾ these conditions are as follows:—

(1) In the first place specific relief whether given by the issue of an

(1) In sect 503, cl. (d), the words as the Court thinks fit were inserted after the word 'remuneration' by Act VII of 1888, sect 42. In sect 594, Act X of 1877 the opening words of the section were if the property be instead of where the property is. In the same section Act VII of 1888, sect. 43, substituted the words the Court may with the consent of the Collector appoint him for the words the Court may appoint the Collector in Act X. of 1877, so as to render the Collector's consent necessary to his appointment as receiver.

(2) Sects 503–505 of Act X. of 1877 were, except as to the points mentioned in the last note, identical with the same sections of the last Code. As to sect 504, see Act XIII of 1879, sect 92. Sect 505 was first inserted in the Code by Act X. of 1887. A Mofussil Court of Small Causes could not appoint a receiver under the Code of 1877, as Ch XXXVI was not extended to those Courts, but it is otherwise under the present Code. Narsingdas v. Tularam, 2 B 538 (1878).

(6) See Kishnundo Biswas v. Prawn Kissen Biswas (1829) Clark's Rules and Orders, 1829. Notes of decided cases, 52. In the charter establishing the Supreme Court of Judicature, 26th March, 1774 cl 18, given in Vol. I of Smollett and Ryan's Rules and Orders, it is ordained that the Supreme Court be a Court of Equity with full power and authority to administer justice as nearly as may be according to the rules and proceedings of the Courts of Chancery. As to the High Courts, see High Courts Act, 1861, cls 9–11, and Letters Patent, sect 19. As to the former powers of District Courts to appoint receivers, see John Tiel v. Abdul Hye, 19 W R 37, 39 (1872), Joyanaram Geerjee v. Shubpersad Geerjee, 6 W R Misc 1 (1866) (Jurisdiction of Sudder Ameen). As to Mofussil Small Cause Courts, vide ante.

injunction or the appointment of a receiver, cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law, (1) that is, such enforcement must not be the sole object of requiring specific relief, but the real object must be the protection of some civil rights or the prevention of a tort or civil wrong. Though, however, the Court cannot interfere for the purpose of giving a better remedy in the case of a criminal offence, yet if an act which is criminal touches also the enjoyment of the property, the Court has jurisdiction (2). So the fact that an act complained of amounts to the criminal offence of misappropriation rather than to simple waste, is no ground for refusing relief by way of appointment of a receiver (3).

(B) Secondly, assuming the matter to be of a civil nature, it is ordinarily a necessary condition to the grant of either form of relief that there should be a suit pending in which either of these reliefs may be granted (4). Under the last Code, however, a receiver might have been appointed not merely of property the "subject of a suit," but also of property "under attachment." And though these words are omitted this is doubtless so now (5). The suit must be pending in the Court from which either of these reliefs is sought. Thus, a District Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or manager in respect of property in dispute in a suit pending in a Subordinate Court, (6) and where a Court has thus no jurisdiction to make an order it can have no jurisdiction to modify such order (7). R 1 gives power only to the Court in which the suit is brought or by which the property has been attached. A Court cannot appoint a receiver except it has seisin of the property either by a suit being pending or by proceedings in execution of decree made in a suit being pending, and attachment having been made. It is only the Court in which a proceeding is pending, and which has thereby the property under its control, that can appoint a receiver. It was formerly only where the procedure contained in sect 505 of the last Code had been adopted that a District Court could appoint a receiver in suits pending before or attachments made by subordinate Courts (8). As to this now, vide post.

(C) Thirdly, not only must the matter be of a civil, as opposed to a criminal, nature and subject to what is above stated a suit be pending, but such suit must disclose a cause of action, and the Court must have general jurisdiction to entertain it. If it has not such jurisdiction it will plainly have no power to grant relief. The Court must not be barred by the Code or any other enactment from taking cognizance of the suit, which must further be not only of a civil nature generally, but within the meaning of that Code (9).

(D) Lastly, the Court to which application for the relief prayed for is made, must be one which, assuming all the preceding conditions to have been fulfilled, has otherwise jurisdiction to try the suit in which that relief is sought. With regard to this, the extensive power of the Court of Chancery to act in personam must be considered with reference to the limitation on jurisdiction imposed by the Charter and by the Code. The Courts of this country have ordinarily no jurisdiction to try suits for immovable property where such property is situate without the local limits of their jurisdiction and it would appear to be doubtful whether the equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely, to take cognizance of any equity between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands outside it. But whatever may be the precise extent of the jurisdiction the Civil Procedure Code has given to the Mofussil Courts the power to act in personam when the person against whom relief is sought resides within the jurisdiction. The Presidency High Court under their Charter have a similar, but in terms less restrictive, jurisdiction (1). In the case of receivers it is not necessary in all cases to authorize the Court to make an appointment that the property in respect of which the receiver is to be appointed should be within the local limits of its jurisdiction (2).

The Presidency High Courts possess the same powers with regard to the appointment of a receiver as are possessed and exercised by the Courts in England under the Judicature Act of 1873, and the practice in respect of these matters should be the same (3). Formerly while all Civil Courts with certain exceptions had jurisdiction to issue injunctions on the other hand the powers conferred by the Code in respect of the appointment of receiver could be exercised by the High Courts and District Courts only provided that whenever the Judge of a Court subordinate to a District Court (4) considered it expedient that a receiver should be appointed in any suit before him, he nominated such person as he considered fit for such appointment and submitted such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court and the District Court authorized such Judge to appoint the person so nominated or passed such orders as it thought fit (5). The first step taken by the Subordinate Judge was to nominate, and from this proceeding there was no appeal the Judge then approved and authorized the appointment and from this also there was no appeal then the Subordinate Judge appointed the receiver previously nominated and from his order there was an appeal (6). The Judge of the Lower Subordinate Court had first to satisfy himself that it was expedient that a receiver should be appointed in a suit before him, for this purpose he had to inquire judicially, and satisfy himself upon evidence that the appointment of a receiver was necessary and recommend a proper person. He did this under sect 503 of the last Code. If he refused to do it his order refusing the application was an order under the same section, and as such was appealable (1). In the first of the last mentioned cases, it was held that an order by a Subordinate Judge dismissing an application for the appointment of a receiver after obtaining sanction from the District Judge was appealable. But it was recently held that a Subordinate Judge when considering the expediency of the appointment of a receiver, was also acting under sect 503, and whether he appointed or whether he refused to take the necessary steps preliminary to the appointment, he was equally acting under sect 503 and an appeal lay (2). After such inquiry he was to nominate such person as he considered fit to be nominated, and submit such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court then, if the District Court authorized such Judge to appoint the person so nominated, but not otherwise he was to appoint him. But the Judge of the District Court might decline to authorize the Judge of the Lower Court to make the appointment of the person so nominated, and might himself pass such other order as he thinks fit (3). These words in the last Code gave the Judge of the District Court full control over the matter of the appointment of a receiver. His duty was not only to approve or disapprove of the particular person nominated, but also to take into consideration the necessity for the appointment of a receiver at all (4). These words gave full discretion to the District Judge to pass such order as the circumstances of the case, considered in all their bearings, required. He might give the proper directions to the Subordinate Court. Nomination in sect 505 seemed to be equivalent to the conditional appointment of a receiver which the District Court could accept or reject or modify (5). In the latter case the District Judge made an ex parte order for the appointment of a receiver under sect 505. Subsequently, the District Court made an order admitting a review. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Without deciding whether an appeal would lie against the order of the District Judge, the High Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the order of the District Judge having been in the first instance ex parte, he had clearly the power to review it (6). But these words, it was held, must be read as controlled by the words preceding them and did not confer upon the District Court the power itself to appoint a receiver not nominated by the Subordinate Court (7). The Judge of the Lower Court, in making his inquiry had all the power conferred upon him that might be necessary for such inquiry. He might adjourn the case from time to time, and he might hear fresh evidence at any time before he made the appointment. He might even abstain from appointing when he had received the necessary authority, if he had good grounds for so doing; otherwise he might be appointing an unfit person when he had facts before him to show that the appointment would be most improper. Sect. 505 of the former Code was not imperative. It merely enabled the Judge of the Lower Court to appoint when authorized by the District Court to do so (1). As already stated, sect. 505 of the former Code has now been omitted. It was considered that its effect in practice was often to defeat the purpose for which an application was made, and that having regard to their standard of efficiency there was no longer any reason to withhold from Subordinate Judges the power to appoint receivers.

The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver may be exercised either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appeal (2). In order to give the Court jurisdiction there must be a pending suit, (3) and the Court cannot in so far as its power to appoint a receiver extends only to the better management or custody of any property which is the subject of a suit appoint or continue the previous appointment of a receiver when the suit comes to an end by its dismissal (4) but when a suit is decreed, there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which limits the power of the Court to appoint a receiver after the decree when this course is necessary or proper. This is now expressly stated. As long as the order appointing a receiver remains unrevoked and as long as the suit remains a lis pendens, the functions of the receiver continue until he is discharged by order of the Court (5). Although the dismissal of a suit may operate as a discharge of the receiver appointed in it (6) yet the Court has ample jurisdiction without the aid of a pending process to require accounts from its own officer, to permit parties interested to intervene in the examination of these accounts, to make just allowances to its officers for his administration and to deal with all questions of costs connected with the investigation of his accounts as between him and any parties interested who may be allowed to appear and take part in it (7).

The Court if it can appoint a receiver has ample powers to provide for the management of the property and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (8). The subject matter of the appointment was in terms of the last Code (vide now ante) property moveable or immoveable which was 'the subject of the suit' (9).

or "under attachment," which latter words applied to property taken for the first time in execution of any decree (1) Where the property to be managed is not the subject of the suit no manager can be appointed before attachment (2) Where, owing to the value of the subject matter of a suit, the Court has no power to try the same, any order made therein by way of appointment of a receiver is passed without jurisdiction (3) The fact that the acts complained of, and which form the ground of an application for a receiver, amount to a criminal offence rather than to a civil wrong, will not deprive the Court of jurisdiction, if such acts affect a right to property (4) It was held by the Allahabad High Court that the fact that there exists, in respect of any immoveable property an order of a Magistrate passed under sect 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is no bar to the exercise by a civil Court of the power conferred on it by r 1 of appointing a receiver in respect of the same property, for the Magistrate's order under sect 145 is only intended to control any period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seisin of the matter, and passes such order as may be necessary for the protection of the property (5) But it has been recently held by the Calcutta High Court that the appointment of a receiver by a Civil Court under r 1 of this order cannot supersede an appointment by a Magistrate, and that the Court should either appoint as its receiver the person appointed by the Magistrate or should make a conditional appointment and inform the Magistrate of it so that he may have an opportunity to withdraw his attachment (6)

The appointment may be made either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appellate or revisional jurisdiction Where a Court of first instance dismisses a suit it becomes functus officio save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs An application, therefore, made to a Court of first instance after dismissal of the suit, but before appeal filed, asking that a receiver might be restrained from parting with funds in his hands, pending an appeal, was held to be one which the Court had no jurisdiction to grant The Court's jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be a pending suit (7)

An Appellate Court may also appoint a receiver If, therefore, a party whose suit has been dismissed desires to have any measure taken for the realization, preservation, better custody or management of property claimed by him he is at liberty after filing his appeal to apply to the Appellate Court which has authority to make or continue the appointment pending the determination of the appeal If a receiver has been appointed, but the facts proved only warrant the issue of an injunction, the Appellate Court will set aside the order appointing a receiver, and in lieu thereof will issue an injunction (8) When a receiver of a property has been appointed by an Appellate Court pending an appeal to the Court, he must, even when the appeal is no longer pending, be regarded as the receiver of the property of which he has been put in possession until he is finally discharged, and the Appellate Court has jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to the receiver, including proceedings for contempt, until he has had his accounts passed by it (1)

The grant of preventive or protective relief is purely discretionary—The exercise of the jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or issue an injunction (2) is not a matter ex debito justitiæ, but one which is purely within the discretion of the Court. The latter is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so. But the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of Appeal (3). All questions of discretion are usually questions of degree (4). Where there is a discretion exercisable the Court is bound to look at all the circumstances of the case (5). The jurisdiction of the Court to interfere being equitable is governed on equitable principles. And, therefore, the Court will amongst other things look to the conduct of the person who makes the application (6). Where an appeal attacks the exercise of discretion, before the Appellate Court will interfere on this ground in favour of the appellant, the latter must satisfy such Court that the discretion has been improperly exercised (7).

The appointment as well as the removal of a receiver is also a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the Court (8). In exercising its discretion the Court should proceed with caution (9) and be governed by a view of the whole circumstances of the case (10). The power conferred by the Code to appoint a receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course, and it is not a reason for allowing an application for the appointment of a receiver, that it can do no harm to appoint one (11). The discretion given by the Code is one that should be used with the greatest care and caution (12) and the appointment of a receiver is a step which should not be taken without special reasons particularly in the case of a bona fide possessor with legal title (1) The main principles upon which such discretion should be exercised have been laid down in the case of Owen v Homan, (2) and those principles have been held to be as equally applicable in this country as in England (3) In that case Lord Cranworth said — "The receiver, if appointed in this case, must be appointed on the principle on which the Court of Chancery acts of preserving property pending the litigation which is to decide the right of the litigant parties In such cases the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property Where indeed, the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble Such is the case when a receiver of a property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration (4) No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking it and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant But where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the enjoyment the case is necessarily involved in further questions The Court by taking possession at the instance of the plaintiff may be doing a wrong to the defendant, in some cases an irreparable wrong If the plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the Court may by its interim interference have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subsequent restoration (

in all cases, therefore

As in the case of injunctions the Court will always look to the conduct of the party who makes the application for a receiver and will not interfere unless his conduct has been free from blame, (6) and parties who have acquiesced in property being enjoyed against their own alleged rights cannot come to the Court for this form of relief (7) A stronger case is generally required for the appointment of a receiver than for the issue of an injunction It may well be that circumstances which will warrant the issue of an injunction will not warrant the appointment of a receiver Accordingly, while the Court may in its discretion refuse to appoint a receiver, it may yet consider the case to be one which calls for an injunction The opinion of the Court of first instance is, in these matters, of great weight It has all the facts and the parties before it, and is probably the best tribunal to decide whether it is necessary or expedient, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that a receiver should be appointed (1) And a party who in appeal attacks the exercise of this discretion should show that the discretion has been improperly so exercised (2) The exercise of the power being thus discretionary it would be difficult, even if it were possible, with any precision to make out the limits within which it is ordinarily circumscribed; but some of the principles which govern the discretion of the Court in such appointment will be found considered more fully and in detail in the work cited (3) in those Chapters which specially treat of the cases in which a receiver may be appointed

The best guides in the matter of interference by way of injunction and receiver have been judicially stated to be the principles which determine the action of Courts of Equity in England (4) It is, in fact, on these principles that the relief given in Indian Courts by injunction and receiver is in the main founded

A judgment of the Court which is in personam may be enforced by process in personam, that is, by attachment of the person when the person is within the jurisdiction or by sequestration of the goods or lands of the defendant when these are within the jurisdiction of the Court until the defendant do comply with the judgment or order of the Court (5) Under the authority conferred by the Charters of the Supreme Courts and continued by their own Letters Patent, the High Courts in India possess the power of enforcing obedience to their orders by attachment for contempt, (6) and they have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing their decrees in personam (7) The jurisdiction of the High Court to imprison for contempt is a jurisdiction that it has inherited from the old Supreme Court, and was conferred upon that Court by the Charters of the Crown, which invested it with all the powers and authority of the then Court of Chancery in Great Britain, and this jurisdiction has not been removed or affected by the Code (8) The power of the Mofussil Courts to commit for contempt, otherwise than under the authority of special statutory enactments conferring, or of case law recognizing, that power, is a matter of doubt (9)

Duration of receivership—Except (according to English practice) in the case of managers there is often no limit of time fixed (9) When this is the case, and the suit is dismissed, the dismissal of the suit will in general operate as a discharge of the receiver But if the suit is decreed and no limit is fixed in the appointment of a receiver, it is not necessary for the judgment to direct that he be continued (10) Sometimes the receiver is only appointed until judgment, that is during the pendency of the suit or until further orders When this is the case, if he is to continue receiver the judgment must so direct, and as this is practically a new appointment, further security must be given unless, as is usually the case the security originally given is made applicable to any continuation of the appointment (11) It is within the discretion of a Court appointing a receiver in a suit to order that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary or for so long as it may be so (12)

A receiver may be appointed of any property, whether moveable or immoveable, provided it is the subject matter of a suit or under attachment; and probably, though the italicized words have now been omitted, the appointment will be limited to such cases. In, however, suits for partition of joint estates the Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of the estate out of which the plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned, in the hands of a receiver, and to order that the latter shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate (1). Receivers have been appointed of undivided shares, though Equity is generally averse to extending the aid of a receiver, as between joint owners or tenants in common (2).

Time when receiver may be appointed—A receiver may be appointed during the pendency of the litigation at any time before decree. The application for a receiver may be made at any stage of the action, according as the urgency of the case requires it. Where proceedings are already pending an order for a receiver may be made in these proceedings without any fresh suit being instituted. If the appointment of a receiver is a substantial object of the action the plaint should contain such a prayer, and if it does not, upon amendment a receiver may be obtained (3). A receiver may also be appointed or continued (4) by the decree, or the appointment may be made after the decree, (5) even though it had been previously refused if a state of facts entitling the party to a receiver were made to appear in the proceedings in the cause (6). Under r 1 a receiver may be appointed of any property after its sale in execution of a mortgage decree and before the confirmation of the sale (7). The provisions of this rule are not controlled by sect 95 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (8). A receiver will be appointed at the instance of a mortgagee when the interest payable under the security is in arrear (9).

plaintiff merely, but for all other persons who may establish right in the cause. He is not the particular agent of any party but an officer of the Court (1). With regard to the limitations on his title, it is to be observed that his possession is subject to all valid and existing liens upon the property at the time of his appointment, and it does not divest a lien previously acquired in good faith (2). The rights of the parties to an action are not interfered with by the appointment (3). It is not aversive to either party (4). If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter under a title paramount to that under which the receiver is appointed is in possession of the right which he claims, the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession (5). The appointment of a receiver is a matter which does not concern mortgagees or prior incumbrancers, for a receiver in the exercise of his authority will be obliged to respect former orders of the Court, and prior incumbrancers are at liberty to take such proceedings in behalf of their own interests as they may think fit (6). The appointment operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons claiming under them, restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7). The order does not, however, create a charge, but it operates as an injunction to restrain the defendant from himself receiving the proceeds of sale (8). A receiver of land never takes actual possession, he only receives the rent, nor does he receive such rent and profits by virtue of an estate or title vested in him, but he collects the same merely as an officer of the Court upon the title of some persons parties to the action (9).

Possession and interference with possession of receiver—The receiver being the officer of the Court from which he derives his appointment, his possession is exclusively the possession of the Court, the property being regarded as in the custody of the law, in gremio legis for the benefit of whoever may be ultimately determined to be entitled thereto. The possession being therefore that of the Court may not be disturbed without the leave of the Court, and any person who disturbs such possession is guilty of a contempt and liable to punishment therefor. No one is entitled to interfere with the possession whether he claims under, or paramount to, the right which the receiver was appointed to protect (10). Thus an attachment of money in the hands of the receiver is an interference with the Court's possession and may not, therefore, be made without the Court's leave first obtained (11). When the Court appoints a receiver it requires the parties to the action to give up the possession to the receiver of all property comprised in the order, and treats them as guilty of contempt if they refuse to do so (1)

As a general rule appointment of more than one receiver whether by the same or a different Court except in case of joint receivers, is not allowable (2) If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter is in possession of the right which he claims the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession of the right and does not interfere with the exercise of it (3) If, on the other hand, the claimant is out of possession he must apply to the Court before he institutes any legal proceedings affecting the possession which the receiver has acquired (4) even where the receiver has been appointed without prejudice to the rights of persons having prior charges (5) So, too, where a receiver has been appointed over the estate of a tenant in possession, though the appointment does not affect the rights of the landlord, the latter will not be permitted to exercise these rights, as, for example the right of distrainment without first obtaining the leave of the Court (6)

Parties whose rights are interfered with by having a receiver put in their way may, on making a proper application to the Court, obtain all that they may justly require The Court has the power and will always take care to give a party who applies in a regular manner for the protection of his rights the means of obtaining justice and will even assist him in asserting that right and having the benefit of it (7) The course of a party who claims a right paramount to that of the receiver, or rather to that of the party obtaining the receiver, is either to apply on notice in the action in which the receiver was appointed and to come in and be examined pro interesse suo, or to apply for leave to proceed by action notwithstanding the receiver's possession (8) The application in the suit is usually framed in the alternative that the receiver do accede to the plaintiff's demand or that the latter may be allowed to proceed (9) In most instances a party aggrieved may have ample relief by application on motion to the Court appointing the receiver In most cases of claims against a receiver the remedy by motion is adequate, and any person having such a claim may resort to this summary remedy. The more common practice and that which has been generally commended by the Court, is to hear and determine all rights of action and demands against a receiver by petition in the cause in which he was appointed without remitting the parties to a new and independent suit. And it rests wholly within the discretion of the Court to grant leave to bring an independent action against its receiver or to determine the controversy upon petition in the original cause (1).

Suits and applications against receiver.—It would be inconsistent with the main purpose of a receivership (to preserve property in controversy pendente lite) which devolves upon the Court the duty of protecting its possession, as well as incompatible with the dignity and authority of the Court, to allow its officer to be summoned before any tribunal in respect to the property in his hands, at the will of any and every person who has, or imagines he has, a just cause of action, or who for sinister purposes might institute a fictitious suit against him. On the other hand, to deny to those having just causes of action or claims which call for the adjudication of the Courts of Law or Equity, all opportunity for investigation and all right to a proper remedy, simply because the property to which they must look for reparation has been seized by the Court and is in its keeping, would violate the fundamental principles of personal rights. The difficulty thus presented has been overcome by requiring all those who desire to bring suit against a receiver first to obtain leave to do so from the Court which appointed him. The Court usually grants such leave unless it appears clearly from the application of the claimant that his demand has no legal foundation, the petition should therefore show a probable cause of action—one demanding adjudication by proceedings in Court (2). If a receiver duly appointed an

may be subje

The proceedings in a suit so brought will generally be restrained by injunction, or stayed or set aside on motion. Whether the party proceeding at law did or did not know that a receiver has been appointed over the property, or however clear his right may be, the Court will restrain the prosecution of the claim if it be instituted without leave (3). It has even been held that the consent of the Court to an action against a receiver is a condition precedent to the right to sue, and cannot be rectified by a subsequent application for permission to continue the action brought without such permission (4). But several later cases have disagreed with this (5).

It rests in the discretion of the Court to allow a party claiming rights against its receiver to bring an independent action against him or to compel such party to proceed against him by petition in the action in which he is receiver (1) When a Court is asked to give leave to sue its receiver, it may, and usually must, examine into the merits of the claim to ascertain whether a suit is necessary or proper for its adjudication, but such examination and the order made upon it cannot be used by either party as in any way affecting the merits of the case. The order simply permits a judicial investigation to be made, the examination is not itself a trial, nor is the decision an adjudication upon the merits (2)

Generally a receiver cannot be held personally liable in an action brought against him in his official capacity, the judgment being entered only so as to affect the funds in his hands (3) An action cannot be brought against a receiver by a person at whose instance he was appointed (4) If a special case be made out, the Court will allow a party to continue an action, notwithstanding that it has been commenced without leave (5)

An application for leave to sue a receiver may be made ex parte at the time of presenting the plaint and not in the suit in which the receiver has been appointed or on notice to the parties, (6) though it would appear that the latter course of applying in the suit has sometimes been followed (7) Any order declaring that leave to sue is not necessary will not bind the parties who are not present (8)

It is, of course, no ground for refusing to appoint a receiver that the acts complained of amount to a criminal offence and that a criminal prosecution is available to the petitioner

Nextly, the situation of the property and parties must be considered

The cases may be dealt with in the following classes —(a) where the property is in medio, (b) where the plaintiff possesses an admitted interest, (c) where the plaintiff's title is disputed by the defendant claiming under legal title, (d) miscellaneous cases (1)

Where the property is, as it were, in medio in the enjoyment of no one the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble, as where there is litigation as to the right to probate or administration (2)

The second case where plaintiff possesses an admitted interest is that of joint tenants and tenants in common in which the Courts are generally averse to interfere, (3) partition suits in which receivers are frequently appointed, (4) cases of tenant for life, remainderman Hindu widow (5) partnership where such a state of facts is shown by the party complaining as if proven at the hearing will entitle him to a dissolution (6) cases of trust where there are substantial grounds for the exercise of the jurisdiction, (7) infancy the property and interests of infants being under the peculiar and exclusive care of the Court of Chancery (8) and lunacy (9)

Thirdly, there are the cases of disputed title. If a right is asserted to property in the possession of the defendant claiming to hold under a legal title generally, a strong case is required to be made out. There must be some equity, danger of waste fraud abuse of trust or the like or want of reasonable appearance of title (10)

Then lastly there are miscellaneous cases (11) on contract covenant conveyance, lease debtor and creditor mortgages (12) and other cases (13) in which general principles may receive some modification from the peculiar circumstances of the case

Hitherto property the subject of a suit has been considered, but a receiver may also be appointed of property under attachment. The appointment of a receiver at the instance of a judgment creditor is known in English practice as equitable execution (1). A proceeding under the Code has nothing in common (beyond the fact that a receiver is appointed) with "equitable execution" (2). The application for a receiver may be made either by the judgment creditor or debtor, and in some cases it is as much to the interest of the first as of the second (3). Attachments are not superseded by the appointment of a manager (4). The proceeding does not change the property in the subject which is attached and affected by it (5). The fact that property under attachment is in the hands of a receiver does not protect it from attachment of all other creditors (6). A receiver may be appointed without the consent of the decree holder (7). The scope of the powers and duties of receivers of attached property are wider than those of managers under the Code of 1859 (8). "Powers of the owner," referred to in r 1, must be read in connection with other provisions of the Code (9). When a debt due from a third person to the judgment debtor is attached in the hands of the person who owes it, the Court may, if necessary, appoint a manager to sue for it (10). A receiver appointed in execution may sue for any debts attached, (11) in the term, however, only of the order appointing him, (12) or for contribution on contract, (13) or for the property of the judgment debtor (14). A receiver cannot waive a right to recover without the sanction of the Court (15). A receiver does not represent the estate for all purposes. He has none of the powers which may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property belonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (1) If grounds be shown for such a course the receiver may, on the application of the parties, be removed (2)

Rights and powers (a) General—It may be said in a general way that a receiver has no powers except such as are conferred upon him by the order by which he is appointed and by the practice and usage of the Court. He is merely an officer of the Court. His holding is the holding of the Court. He is but a minister, and therefore has not the discretionary power of a person acting in a fiduciary character. In theory the Court itself has the care of the property in his hands. He can do nothing likely to seriously diminish the fund without the special leave of the Court. He is not however merely the assignee of him whose property is placed in his care, but he may exercise such power in dealing with the property as belong to a receiver according to the practice of the Court and as are particularly conferred upon him by the order of his appointment (3). Under the Code the Court may grant to the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realization management protection preservation and improvement of the property the collection of the rents and profits thereof the application and disposal of such rents and profits and the execution of instruments in writing as the owner himself has or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit (4). A receiver is at all times subject to the control of the Court which possesses the power to make all necessary orders for the control of receivers appointed by it (5). He has a right to the protection of the Court and his possession will not be allowed to be disturbed (6). The Court will see that he carries out his functions and will protect the agent appointed under its orders (7). The scope of the receivership may be extended

(b) Discretion—In many matters of care and management receivers are allowed to use their own discretion subject to the control and approval of the Court. But in all important matters a receiver should apply for and obtain the direction of the Court which appoints him (8).

(c) Application for instructions—A receiver has a right to apply to the Court for instructions when a question arises as to what may be his duty under its orders (9).

(d) Delegation—A receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. If he does so and thereby causes loss to the estate he is bound to make it good (10).

may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property belonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (1) If grounds be shown for such a course the receiver may, on the application of the parties, be removed (2)

Rights and powers (a) General—It may be said in a general way that a receiver has no powers except such as are conferred upon him by the order by which he is appointed, and by the practice and usage of the Court. He is merely an officer of the Court, his holding is the holding of the Court—he is but a minister, and therefore has not the discretionary power of a person acting in a fiduciary character. In theory the Court itself has the care of the property in his hands. He can do nothing likely to seriously diminish the fund without the special leave of the Court. He is not, however, merely the assignee of him whose property is placed in his care, but he may exercise such power in dealing with the property as belong to a receiver according to the practice of the Court and as are particularly conferred upon him by the order of his appointment (3). Under the Code the Court may grant to the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realization management protection preservation and improvement of the property the collection of the rents and profits thereof the application and disposal of such rents and profits and the execution of instruments in writing as the owner himself has or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit (4). A receiver is at all times subject to the control of the Court which possesses the power to make all necessary orders for the control of receivers appointed by it (5). He has a right to the protection of the Court and his possession will not be allowed to be disturbed (6). The Court will see that he carries out his functions and will protect the agent appointed under its orders (7). The scope of the receivership may be extended

(b) Discretion—In many matters of care and management receivers are allowed to use their own discretion subject to the control and approval of the Court. But in all important matters a receiver should apply for and obtain the direction of the Court which appoints him (8).

(c) Application for instructions. A receiver has a right to apply to the Court for instruction when a question arises as to what may be his duty under it and is (9).

(d) Delegation—A receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. If he does so and the result is useful to the estate he is bound to make it good (10).

(c) Possession—It is both the receiver's power and duty to take possession of the property whether moveable or immoveable over which he is appointed. Where a receiver is appointed by the Court to get in outstanding personal property, it is his duty to collect all he can get in. The power of a receiver to take property implies a correlative duty on the part of any one having it in his possession to deliver it to him, and such holder violates the law in resisting the exercise of the lawful authority of the receiver (1).

(f) Leases—If tenants in possession of property over which a receiver is appointed are directed by the order to attorn to him, the receiver should, as soon as his appointment is complete call on them to attorn accordingly, and if they refuse, application should be made to the Court. The receiver is entitled to all the rents in arrear at the date of his appointment and to all the rents which accrue during the continuance of his receivership, and an order will, if necessary, be made for payment (2). As to power to serve notice to quit and sue see below (3). As regards the power of leasing, it is created by the order appointing the receiver who has no estate or interest in himself which enables him to lease. It is common to grant such powers of lease for a limited period, usually three years but whenever it is desired to lease for a longer term, the sanction of the Court must be obtained (1).

(g) Sales.—As to the practice of the High Court in assisting purchasers at receiver's sales (5) and sale by receiver during administration (6) see cases cited. Liens upon property held by a receiver are not divested by virtue of a sale made by him (7). A sale by the receiver made under the order of Court, cannot in the absence of fraud be attacked collaterally by persons who were parties to the proceedings or their representatives (8). When a suit has been dismissed the Court has no jurisdiction to give the receiver any fresh power, as for instance, liberty to sell (9).

(f) Borrowing If a receiver requires money to discharge his duties the Court will give him leave to borrow upon the security of the property in his hands (1) Where a receiver of joint property mortgaged that property to another after a money decree had been obtained against the owners, but had executed the mortgage previous to the attachment, held that the attaching creditors were not entitled to priority over the mortgagee (2)

(i) Payment—As to payments out by receiver, see note (3)

(j) Suits by or defended by receiver—With regard to suits by a receiver, two questions require consideration, namely, as to his right to sue in general and as to the name in which he should sue. One of the most important functions exercised by receivers in the discharge of their official duties is that of bringing such actions as may be necessary to the proper discharge of their trust, as well as to secure and protect the assets and funds to whose control they are entitled by virtue of their appointment (4). As a general rule all rights of action which belong to the party whose property is put into the hands of a receiver are transferred to the latter by virtue of his appointment (5). The appointment does not affect existing contracts or rights of action between the party whose property is placed in the hands of a receiver and others, he has no greater rights or advantages than those possessed by his principal (6). A receiver therefore, cannot maintain an action upon a note or obligation running to the original party which he himself could not have maintained (7). His right of action relates back to the beginning of the title in the party for whose property he is receiver. If substituted in place of the owners of the property he requires all their rights by subrogation (8). Inasmuch as for the purpose of actions and suits connected with the receivership receivers occupy substantially the same relation which was occupied by the original parties against whom or over whose estate they were appointed any defence which a defendant might have made to an action brought by the original party in interest is equally available, and may be made with like effect when the action is instituted by the receiver (9). The fact that a person is an officer of the Court entitles him to no privileges not accorded to other suitors and in seeking relief he must commence his actions by the same process that other suitors are required to employ (10). A receiver's liability for costs in an action instituted by him on behalf of the estate is similar to that of any other trustee—as e.g. an executor or administrator—who sues for the interest of an estate but being an officer of the Court he usually receives special consideration (11). Should he fail in his action he will of course be directed to pay the costs of the defendant but as between himself and the estate he represents, he will if he has acted properly, with care and in good faith be allowed his costs out of any funds which are in, or may come to his hands (1) Such an order in favour of a receiver will, however, generally, only be made in the suit in which he has been appointed, and not in the suit brought by him, unless in such latter suit the estate which he represents is fully before the Court. Since, however, a receiver sues in a representative capacity and not in his personal right, it is necessary that he should not only set out in his pleading the right of the party whom he represents but also the authority under which he assumes to act. Courts are inclined to the exercise of a strict control over their receivers in the matter of allowing them to bring suits concerning their receivership and an action brought by a receiver is considered as brought under the order of the Court itself. If, therefore a suit is instituted without authority the parties are entitled to the protection of the Court against such unauthorized proceedings on the part of the receiver, who will be directed to discontinue the action (2) The usual practice both in England and America (3) and in this country before instituting actions by a receiver in matters connected with his trust is to apply to the Court, from which he derives his appointment, for leave to bring such action. And, although it is frequently the case that the order of appointment in general terms authorizes the receiver to sue for and collect all demands due yet it is a common and a safe practice to first obtain special leave of Court before beginning the action. In order to avoid the necessity of frequent application to the Court for liberty to sue it has become customary to give to the receiver in the order by which he is appointed general leave, but as the authority to sue conferred by the order of appointment is confined to such suits as are contemplated by the order (4) and doubt may arise whether the particular suit brought is within the terms of the authority it is customary as above stated to obtain special leave in each case. Proof of the appointment of the receiver and of leave to sue is generally given by the production of a certified copy of the respective orders. It seems to be established that the regularity propriety or necessity of the appointment of a receiver is not to be questioned in a merely collateral action at least by parties or parties to the action in which the appointment was made. As to the rights of other parties in this respect there seems to be a difference of opinion. It has been said to be probable that those who were entire strangers to the original proceedings should be allowed in a collateral action where their interests are affected by the appointment to attack the order on the ground that it was procured through fraud collusion or deception practised on the Court but for no other reason (5) The general doctrine recognizing a receiver as the officer of the Court is not to be understood as limiting or restricting his rights in the management of a suit which he has once undertaken, and after entering upon a litigation he is regarded as being entitled to all the freedom of action of any other suitor, and the fact that he appeals from a decision which is against him is not of itself evidence of bad faith or of mismanagement of his trust, and may be a meritorious rather than a censurable act (1)

Some conflict of authority exists whether, in the absence of the special authority, a receiver may sue in his own name or in the name of the original party in whose favour the action accrued. In the first case a distinction must be drawn between the cases where, though the party suing may be a receiver, he has an independent cause of action entitling him to sue, and to sue in his own name, and in which cases he does not really sue in his character of receiver. So a receiver, who is holder of a bill of exchange, may by the law merchant sue in his own name, (2) also when, as bailee, he has a special property in the goods; (3) or if he is possessed of chattels and those chattels are unlawfully detained from him. So, too, after a tenant has attorned to the receiver and so created a tenancy between him and the receiver, the latter may distrain upon the tenant in his own name, and on his own authority without leave obtained from the Court, (4) and there may be other cases in which, having an independent cause of action, the fact that he is receiver does not disqualify him from suing (5). In other cases, however, and where the receiver is suing in respect of a cause of action which has accrued to him in his representative capacity from the party whose estate he holds, the prevalent rule appears to be that where the matter is not controlled by statute or order of the Court, the receiver should sue, not in his own name, but in that of the parties whose estate he holds (6). But this view is stated (7) to be losing ground and has not always been adhered to either in America (8) or England (9) and it has been held in the former country that a receiver by virtue of his appointment is a quasi assignee invested with title to such an extent at least as will enable him to sue in his official character (1) Where the order appointing the receiver gives him power to sue in his own name or in the names of the parties to the suit, it might well be held that such an order merely entitles the receiver to sue in his own name in cases in which such action is proper, and in all other cases to use the names of the parties It has, however, been decided that the Court had authority under sect 503 (now r 1) to confer on a receiver the power to sue in his own name, and that if the order appointing the receiver gives him liberty, he may do so in any case (2) Where the receiver is permitted to sue in the names of the parties and does so, no action on their part is necessary (3) A receiver of attached property may also sue He does not represent the estate for all purposes He would have none of the powers which may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property belonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (4) It has been held that where a receiver institutes proceedings, and is then replaced by another receiver, it is necessary that the new receiver should be made a party to those proceedings (5)

The necessity for permission extends not merely to suits brought by, but also to suits defended by, the receiver (6) The proper rule as regards applications in respect of the estate is that they should be made by the persons beneficially entitled, and not by the receiver, though it must be admitted that receivers have often originated proceedings in their own name (7)

(k) Indemnity.—A receiver is entitled to be indemnified out of his estate in respect of all costs, and charges, and expenses, properly incurred by him in the discharge of his office or under the order of the Court (8)

(l) Salary and allowance—The receiver's allowance is either a percentage (in ordinary cases 5 per cent) upon his receipts or a gross sum by way of salary A receiver is entitled to his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the discharge of his duties (9) A receiver may be entitled to allowances beyond his salary for any extraordinary trouble or expense (10) The receiver is entitled to be paid next after the costs of realizing the estate As the officer of the Court the Court is bound to see that he is paid (11)

(m) Lien.—He has a lien on the estate for his claims and allowances (1)

Duties and liabilities of receiver.—He is, as an officer of the Court, strictly amenable for his acts and accountable to the Court (2) which appoints (3) him. His first duty is to obey the order of the Court appointing him (4). He is not liable for acts done under the order of the Court (5). He should be strictly impartial, as he is appointed for the benefit not merely of the party on whose application the appointment is made, but equally for the benefit of all persons who may establish rights in the case (6). Many of the receiver's duties have been alluded to in dealing with his rights and powers. So his right to take possession implies also a duty to do so. He is responsible for any loss occasioned to the estate from his wilful default or gross negligence (7). He ought to appear and give all necessary information to the Court in all applications for payment of money (8). He is liable to account (9). He should keep correct and accurate accounts with vouchers (10) and should file them with regularity and promptitude (11) showing that all disbursements are payments properly made in respect of the estate (12). A receiver may be ordered to account although the suit in which he was appointed may be no longer pending (13). R 1 is new and contains important provisions in this respect. It has been drafted on the lines of sect 18 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The original proposal to imprison receivers was considered too wide and has been omitted.

Jurisdiction to remove and discharge.—The power to terminate flows naturally and as a necessary sequence from the power to create. The power of the Court to remove or discharge a receiver whom it has appointed may be exercised at any stage of the litigation. It is a necessary adjunct of that power of appointment and is exercised as an incident to or consequence of, that power, the authority to call such officer into being necessarily implying the authority to terminate his functions when their exercise is no longer necessary, or to remove the incumbent for an abuse of those functions or for other cause shown, and the cases upon this branch of the subject will resolve themselves into two classes viz cases of removal or substitution for cause, and cases of final discharge because of the necessity of the appointment having ceased to exist (14).

security is insufficient the Court may remove him summarily, and direct the delivery of all the assets to his successor, if he neglect or refuse to procure additional sureties (1) Where a receiver becomes bankrupt he will be discharged and a new receiver appointed (2) If a receiver has been wrongly appointed over property of a person not a party to the cause he will be discharged although there has been an abatement by the death of the sole defendant (3) When a receiver has been appointed temporarily in an ex parte proceeding, or before answer, and it subsequently appears from the defendant's pleading or otherwise that the appointment ought not to have been made, or that the complainant has presented no case for the intervention of a Court of Equity, it is proper that the receiver should be removed So where it is made to appear that there was no necessity for the appointment of the receiver, or where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that all the usual grounds for the appointment of a receiver—such as imminent danger to the property, fraud, insolvency, and the like—are wanting, the Court will remove the receiver and restore the status quo But where a receiver enters in good faith upon the discharge of his duties and the parties in interest acquiesce for a considerable time, their laches may be such as to defeat a subsequent application on their part looking to the removal of the receiver (4)

Since absolute impartiality as between the parties to the litigation is an indispensable qualification of a receiver, upon an application for his removal the Court may properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies And when it is shown that he was the nominee of one hostile party and bitterly opposed by the other, and that he was appointed under the mistaken belief that all interests had united in his selection, and that by reason of his interest his efficiency as an officer of the Court is impaired, it is proper to remove him (5) The mere fact of relationship between the receiver and the plaintiff in the action in which he was appointed is not, of itself, sufficient ground for his removal such relationship affording at the most, merely a circumstance to be taken into consideration at the time of his appointment, it being the general rule that no relative of either of the parties ought to be selected as receiver But where, in addition to relationship bias and improper conduct are shown a ground is made for his removal (6)

It is an established rule that a receiver will not be arbitrarily removed and another person substituted in his place in the absence of a substantial ground, merely because certain parties in interest desire it But it is competent for the Court to remove one receiver, and to substitute another in his stead by consent of all parties when the proceedings are bona fide, and when there is no attempt to traffic in the receivership (7) Where a receiver had been appointed in an administration suit another receiver who offered to act at a lower salary was, on the application of a mortgagee of tenant for life of the property, ordered to be substituted for him (8)

(8) Stanley v Cullinatt W N (1865)

The rule that a receiver may be removed for misconduct or breach of trust arises out of the nature of the office, and the supervising power of the Court of Chancery. Whenever the receiver is guilty of misfeasance or malfeasance in office it is the duty of the Court to call him to account, and in a proper case it has the undoubted right to order a summary removal (1). Either mismanagement or incompetence is a ground for removing a receiver (2). A receiver will be removed if his appointment has been an improper one (3) if he is irregular in carrying in and passing his accounts, (4) if his conduct has been such as to impede the impartial course of justice, (5) or to amount to gross dereliction of duty, (6) and when a receiver appointed on behalf of incumbrancers has been guilty of gross negligence in the discharge of his duties, he may be removed upon their application and may be required to pay interest upon the balances from time to time in his hands and to pay the costs of the proceedings for his removal (7).

Final discharge of the receiver—The discharge of a receiver may take place either during the course of the proceedings or at the conclusion of the litigation. A receiver is generally continued until judgment, but according to the decision undermentioned, (8) if the right of the plaintiff ceases before that time the receiver may be discharged, and cannot be continued at the instance of the defendant. In this case the plaintiff claiming to be an equitable creditor or incumbrancer of the defendant had obtained a receiver of the rents and profits of defendant's real estate upon which he claimed to have a charge. Defendant having paid and plaintiff having received the amount claimed to be due the receiver was discharged, although other defendants claiming to have annuities or incumbrances upon the same property objected, and asked to be heard against the discharge. Lord Eldon said: I apprehend that with the right of the plaintiff to have the receiver must fall the rights of the other parties. It would be most extraordinary if because a receiver has been appointed on behalf of the plaintiff any defendant is entitled to have a receiver appointed on his behalf. My decided opinion is that the order for the receiver must be discharged and that all falls together. In, however, a subsequent case (9) the Master of the Rolls said: 'There is no doubt that where a receiver is appointed under the authority of the Court he is appointed for the benefit of all parties interested and therefore he will not be discharged merely upon the application of the party at whose instance he was appointed' (10). If during the course of the proceedings the continuance of a receiver becomes unnecessary, on the object of the receivership is attained, the receiver will be discharged (1)

While the propriety of discharging a receiver, like that of appointing him, is to some extent a matter of judicial discretion, yet in some cases the right to a discharge becomes an absolute right which the Court has no discretion to refuse (2) In such a case, therefore, the granting of the order of discharge is not a matter of discretion, but its refusal is error which may be reversed on appeal. (3)

In general a receiver will not be discharged until the object for which he was appointed has been fully accomplished, or until the Court is satisfied that the exigency calling for a receiver has ceased (4) Since the final decree in the cause is generally decisive of the subject matter in controversy, and determines the right to the possession of the fund or property held by the receiver, it is usually the case that such decree supersedes the functions of the receiver since there is then nothing further for him to act upon If, on the other hand, the result be favourable to the defendant, the functions of the receiver are at an end, and it is proper to order him to account and be discharged (5) An order of dismissal of the suit which follows on the reversal of an order appointing a receiver clearly operates as a discharge of the receiver (6)

Under the Civil Procedure Code, once a suit has been dismissed, the Court dismissing it is functus officio except that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs Its jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be a pending suit (7) If, on the other hand, the controversy terminates favourably to the plaintiff or the party at whose instance the receiver was appointed, it will usually devolve upon him to carry out the decree of the Court according to the nature of the receivership and his powers under the decree (8) It has been said that the determination of the suit, however will not, ipso facto, discharge the receiver, but his functions must be terminated by a formal order of Court (9)

Unless the minutes of the order appointing or continuing a receiver and manager contain a provision for his discharge, an application to the Court is in general necessary to divest the possession of the receiver The appointment of a receiver made previous to judgment will not be superseded by it unless the receiver is only appointed until judgment or further order (10) The receiver may, however, be continued by the decree (11) The Court has jurisdiction notwithstanding a receiver has been discharged, to surcharge him in his accounts, (12) or to order him to pay his balance together with the amount allowed him for his salary and interest (13)

Discharge of sureties—The sureties of a receiver will not be discharged at their own request, and no regard will be had to their application unless it is for the benefit of the estate or unless there be special circumstances in the case, (2) as for instance where underhand practice can be proved, and the person secured can be shown to be connected with such practice (3) Where also a surety had become such in violation of partnership articles, he was discharged on his own application (4) When a surety procures his discharge during his continuance of the receivership the receiver must enter into a fresh recognizance with new sureties When a surety becomes bankrupt the receiver is usually required to enter into a fresh recognizance with two or more sureties If a surety dies without leaving any property available for the satisfaction of the recognizance, the Court will direct a new surety to be appointed, but the rule is otherwise where he leaves real property bound by his recognizance (5) The condition of the bond is that if the receiver shall from time to time, and at all times so long as he shall continue as receiver duly and faithfully in all respects discharge the duties and obligations which devolve upon him and duly pass his accounts, then the bond shall be paid but otherwise it will remain in full force (6)

If the receiver faithfully discharges his duties and passes his accounts and pays the balance due by him the surety is discharged, and he is at liberty to apply to have the recognizance vacated as to him Should this be not so, an action must be brought on his bond against the surety who is answerable to the extent of the amount of the recognizance for whatever sum of money, whether principal interest, or costs the receiver has become liable for, including the costs of his removal, and of the appointment of a new receiver in his place In ascertaining the liability of the surety the Court proceeds upon the principle that the surety is liable (to the extent of the amount of the penalty) for all sums of money which the receiver himself was properly liable to pay into Court or account for (7)

A surety who has been compelled to pay money on account of his obligation is entitled to be reimbursed out of the balance in the receiver's hands Lord Eldon saying: 'As the receiver is an officer of the Court and the surety is so in a sense, if there is anything due on account between them justice requires that, upon the application of the surety, he shall be indemnified for what he has paid for the receiver out of the balance due him' (8) And a surety who pays the debt of his principal has the same right against his co surety that he has against the principal, and will be permitted to put the bond in suit as against the co surety (9)

Appeal—It was held under sect 588 of the last Code (now represented by O XLIII) that an order authorizing a receiver to remove any person in possession of the property was appealable, under that section, at the instance of the person dispossessed (1) and it has also been held that under O XLIII r 1, cl (s) a final, but not an interlocutory order, appointing a receiver is appealable (2) and also that directions given by a Court in passing a receiver's accounts are not appealable (3)

ORDER XLI.

Appeals from Original Decrees

- 1 (1) Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a [s.] memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf. The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the Appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded
- (2) The memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from without any argument or narrative, and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Memorandum of appeal—The Appellate Court must look at the memorandum of appeal itself and not at the stamp on it in order to see which part of a decree is the subject of appeal before it. The Court can no more deal with a part of a decree which is not challenged by a memorandum of appeal or by objections filed by the opposite party than it can pass an order reversing the decree of a first Court when that decree is not in appeal before it. The memorandum of appeal or objections when filed are what give the Judge on appeal jurisdiction to interfere with the decree below. He cannot of his own motion deal with a decree which is not the subject of appeal to him or with a portion of a decree against which portion there has been no appeal and no objections filed. The Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to deal with that portion of the decree which is not the subject of appeal before it (1). The Code does not make any provision as to how Courts should deal with memoranda of appeal containing scandalous matter but Courts possess inherent power to stop such an abuse of its records (2).

"Presented"—In order to effect a valid presentation of an appeal it must be by the suitor in person or by a person duly qualified to present it, (3) and where an advocate or wakil is heard the grounds should have been duly

2 The appellant shall not except by leave of the Court, ^{Grounds which may be taken on appeal} urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal, but the Appellate Court in deciding the appeal, shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the Court under this rule

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground

Grounds of appeal.—The grounds which may be taken without leave under this rule are those only set out in the memorandum (1) An objection which may be heard under sect. 105 (formerly sect. 591) must be one set forth in the memorandum of appeal (2) and the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse leave (6) which is not taken away even when the point sought to be raised is one of limitation (7) Questions however may arise even as to those which are set out by reason of the fact that they raise a new case or points not the subject of determination in the lower Court. Generally speaking, in these cases pure points of law only are arguable which arise on the findings and require no further inquiry. This subject will be found discussed under the heading "Scope of the appeal" in the notes to sects 100 and 101, ante. This rule is equally applicable to second as to first appeals (1)

Grounds of appeal must be such as arise from out of the plaintiff's pleadings and documentary proofs and necessary to the decision of the appeal (2). In drawing up grounds of appeal it should (it has been held) be remembered that no subsequent event or devolution of interest can effect the decision of a question as it stood at the time the decision was pronounced. To give effect to these, some supplementary proceeding and not an appeal is necessary (3). Points not taken in the memorandum of appeal, if they raise questions of fact, upon which the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal must be taken to be conclusive, will not be allowed to be taken in special appeal (4).

If the appellant thinks that his grounds of appeal in the memorandum filed with the Judge are not sufficient, he may apply to the Judge to allow him to be heard upon the objections not mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, but if he does not do so, nor does he even make the objections upon which he relies before the High Courts previously to his appealing to that Court, he cannot ask the High Court to reverse the decision of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court because he did not reverse the decision of the first Court on grounds which were never mentioned in appeal, or not brought to the notice of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court (5). The Court, however, itself is not limited by the grounds of objection. It is entirely within the competency of the Court to take into its consideration anything in the case which either affects the regularity of the proceedings of the Court below, or relates to the correctness of the decision upon the merits, and the Court is not confined to the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal (6). This rule confers upon Courts power to decide appeals upon grounds other than those set forth by the appellant in the memorandum, and that power is to be exercised by the Court alone, and not to enable the appellant to take the respondent by surprise by urging matters of which he had no notice. Parties, however, complaining of judgments and decrees must mention all the grounds of complaint in the memorandum of appeal, and the provisions are not meant to relieve them of such necessity (7). As a rule the High Court will not permit grounds of appeal to be taken in argument which have not been taken in the memorandum of appeal, but where a decree comes before it which upon its very face is illegal—a decree which goes beyond the power of the Court which passed it—the High Court is bound to take up the point itself and rectify the mistake, and not to allow itself to become an instrument for the commission of further mistakes (1) An Appellate Court exceeds its authority in giving a plaintiff a relief for which he does not ask. Although the Court may decide an appeal before it upon grounds other than those stated in the memorandum of appeal yet the rule does not entitle the Court to go beyond the subject matter of appeal (2)

Where a Lower Appellate Court allowed an appellant (one of the defendants interested in a small portion of the decree) to raise an objection verbally (and not taken in the memorandum of appeal) to the whole of the decree and dismissed the suit on the ground of non joinder of parties it was held by the High Court that it was not open to the Judge upon the appeal of only one of the defendants as to a small portion of the decree to entertain the objection upon which he had thrown out the suit (3) When a Lower Appellate Court dismissed a suit on a point on which no issue was raised although it had been taken in the written statement and which was not made a ground of appeal, it was held by the High Court that the point must be considered to have been abandoned at the trial, it was therefore not open to the Lower Appellate Court to dismiss the suit on that ground (4)

3 (1) Where the memorandum of appeal is not drawn up in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, Rejection or amendment of memorandum it may be rejected, or be returned to the appellant for the purpose of being amended within a time to be fixed by the Court or be amended then and there

(2) Where the Court rejects any memorandum, it shall record the reasons for such rejection

(3) Where a memorandum of appeal is amended the Judge, or such officer as he appoints in this behalf shall sign or initial the amendment

Rejection or amendment of memorandum —The memorandum may be rejected under this rule if it is not drawn up in the manner prescribed, (5) as also on any of the grounds set out in O VII r 11 (formerly sect 54) read with sect 107 (formerly 582) (6) but a judicial order should be passed and the reasons for such rejection must be given (7)

Memo appeal insufficiently stamped —When a memo of appeal which is insufficiently stamped is returned in order that it may be sufficiently stamped the Appellate Court should fix a time within which the deficiency is to be supplied (8) In this rule there is no limitation as to the time when a memorandum may be rejected or amended (1) But the time for rejection is when the appeal is presented, and not after it has been once admitted (2) The filing of an appeal out of time is another matter The registration is a ministerial proceeding And when registered out of time, the Court may, on discovery, reject it (3) where there is fraud, misrepresentation, suppression of fact, or mistake (4) An order admitting an appeal after time, made ex parte by a single Judge of the High Court sitting to receive applications for the admission of appeals under a rule of the Court made under 24 & 25 Vict c 104, sect 13, and sect 27 of the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court, can be impugned and set aside, at the hearing by the Division Court before which it is brought for hearing, on the ground that the reasons assigned for admitting it were erroneous and inadequate (5) The High Court in special appeals can look into the grounds which the Lower Appellate Court Judge has given for admitting the appeal in which the decision appealed against was passed after the lapse of the period of limitation, and the grounds upon which he acted in so admitting the appeal are impeachable in special appeal (6) The discretion of the Lower Appellate Court in such cases is liable to review or appeal where such Court is acting through caprice or prejudice, or where the discretion is exercised without any proper legal material to support it Where the exercise of discretion is perverse, the High Court in second appeal will interfere (7)

4 Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants

One of several plaintiffs or defendants may obtain reversal of whole decree where it proceeds on ground common to all. than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be.

Decree proceeding on common ground.—The ordinary rule is that upon an appeal of one of several parties, an Appellate Court cannot reverse the decree appealed from as against any other of the parties, (8) nor can the Appellate Court, on the appeal of one defendant, having only a part interest in a decree, reverse the entire decree (9) It is not competent to certain defendants appealing and making a non appealing defendant a respondent, between themselves, to open out that portion of the case which, as between the plaintiff and the non appealing defendant, has not been appealed against, and when the ground on which the decision is given is not common to all the defendants this rule does not apply (1) But when the decision of the first Court proceeds on grounds common to all the defendants, one of the defendants is justified in appealing on behalf of all (2) Thus where, on the appeal of one of the several judgment-debtors, the bond on which the plaintiff sued was found to be false and not binding at all, all the other parties to the bond were released notwithstanding that they did not appeal (3) It is incongruous that a claim should be dismissed as against one party and allowed against another on contradictory grounds, as say, in the first case, on the ground that a mortgage is satisfied, and in the second on the ground that the mortgage had not been discharged It is to prevent such incongruities that power is conferred when an appeal is presented against the whole decree to interfere as well on behalf of parties who have not appealed as on behalf of those who have appealed (4) No distinction is made between decrees ex parte and others (5) Where there is a common ground amongst plaintiffs or defendants in appeal by one is virtually an appeal by all, though they may not be parties to the record (6) It is not directed that the Appellate Court should pass a decree in favour of persons who are not before it in appeal, but the effect of the provision is to make a decree passed in favour of one out of the defendants or plaintiffs operate in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be (7) The decree which may be the subject of such appeal is one affecting in the same manner all the plaintiffs and defendants—one incapable of division and upon which it would be impossible for a Court to find in one sense for some of the plaintiffs or defendants and in the opposite sense for the other plaintiffs or defendants, for instance where the suit relates to property in which all the plaintiffs or all the defendants are co sharers (8) If one of the several defendants appeal not against the whole decree but only against that portion of it which affects him and his defence in the Lower Court was not a defence common to other defendants, the Lower Court decree cannot be reversed in favour of those defendants who have not appealed (9) In a recent case where a lambardar had appealed against a decree without joining his co defendants (his tenants) it was held that under this rule it was open to him to obtain a reversal of the decree in favour of all the defendants, but the plaintiffs were bound to join all the defendants as respondents in a second appeal (1)

What is a common ground must be determined in each case upon the nature of the decree given, and the cases cited are given in illustration only of the general principle enacted (2)

The Calcutta High Court has held, (3) dissenting in this from a Madras decision, subsequently overruled, (4) that the former section did not require that the decree appealed against should proceed exclusively on grounds common to all the defendants, but that it should proceed on any ground common to the defendants

Under this rule, one of several persons who have stood on a common ground may appeal for all. They are not prevented from appealing severally if they wish to do so, but if they allow one of their number to represent them for pressing their appeal, they must accept his representative character as to the incidents also of the appeal, at least so far as the jural relation between the parties are concerned. The appeal opens up the whole case, though made by but one of the joint parties in the Court below. But the case being thus opened up, it is opened up for the respondent as well as for the appellant, and under the former sect 561 (now O XLI r 22) the respondent may press any objection against the decree which he could have urged in an independent appeal. Where a decree of the Court of the first instance is partly in favour of two joint plaintiffs, and one plaintiff appeals, the Appellate Court may reject the whole claim on the cross objection of the defendant, (5) the decree having been passed against the defendants, it was open to any one of them to appeal against it if the ground of appeal was common to all the defendants (6). But where there are several respondents before the Court of first appeal, though one of them may represent his fellows in a further appeal, he cannot represent a person who was not his co respondent and against whom therefore no decree could have been made on a point common to the two, or on any point at all (1)

It was held that the former section applied only to appeals by parties arrayed on the same side of a litigation in the original Court and against whom judgment on a common ground had been passed, and only some of them appeal from such judgment on behalf of themselves and others who do not join in the appeal. It did not relate to cases in which a party (be he a plaintiff or a defendant in the original Court) who has been unsuccessful only to a certain extent of the subject matter of the litigation in appeal from so much of the decree as has been passed against him, happens to value the appeal as if it related to the whole subject matter of the litigation or to pay Court fees on such amount (2). Where two suits brought by two different parties claiming different interests in a certain share to set aside the sale of that share, having been dismissed one of the plaintiffs appealed and the sale was set aside, it was held that the decision must be considered as setting the sale aside as to the whole of that share although the other parties did not appeal. If they both had joined in one suit but only one had appealed, the decree of the Appellate Court would have been for the benefit of both and the whole sale would have been set aside. Their bringing separate suits instead of joining in one suit ought not to make any difference in that respect (3).

It was held that where a respondent failed to give the notice required by Sect 561 of the former Code (see r 22 of this Order) it was not open to the Appellate Court to grant any relief to that respondent in a case where the granting or such relief was not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to the party who had appealed (4). But see now in this connection r 33 of this Order, which enacts part of O 58 r 4 of the English Rules.

Stay of proceedings and of execution

5 (1) An appeal shall not operate as a stay of proceedings under a decree or order appealed from except so far as the Appellate Court may order, nor shall execution of a decree be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred from the decree, but the Appellate Court may for sufficient cause order stay of execution of such decree

(2) Where an application is made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiration of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may on sufficient cause being shown order the execution to be stayed

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under sub-rule (1) or sub rule (2) unless the Court making it is satisfied—

(a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made,

(b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay, and

(c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub rule (3), the Court may make an ex parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application

“Stay of execution”—This rule, which refers to applications by parties only, (1) assumes that there is something to stay and therefore does not apply where the decree has been in fact executed (2) To execute a judgment or order is to carry it into effect or enforce it When there still remains something substantial to be done under a decree, before it can become thoroughly effectual that decree has to be “executed” within the meaning of this rule (3) So a decree directing the issue of a grant of probate to the propounder of a will is one that is capable of execution, and stay of execution of such decree can be granted under it (4) It was held that sect 283 of the former Code did not constitute an exception to the procedure laid down by sect 515 now replaced by this rule (5)

The principle upon which all stay is granted for the preservation of property pending litigation is that the successful party in the litigation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not to obtain merely a barren success (6) In cases where a stay of execution or an injunction is granted on an ex parte application liberty to apply to the Judge to vary or set aside the order must be implied if not expressed (7) And a Court which has jurisdiction to pass an order has equally jurisdiction to pass any subsequent order in any matter flowing from and naturally and necessarily arising out of the first order (8) The ruling that if property is sold before an order staying execution is communicated the sale is in such case not void (9)

has been dissented from (1) the order of stay taking effect when it is made and not when it is communicated. It has been said that an applicant who has asked for stay of execution should on the ground of its being an indulgence be made to pay costs even if successful (2). But this has been dissented from, (3) and there is certainly strong support in reason for the view that when the law allows an appeal and allows an appellant upon proper cause being shown to ask for and obtain an order for stay, it cannot be said that what is asked for is merely an indulgence.

By Court of first instance.—The rule assumes that the decree is appealable and not final (4). If an appeal lies, but has not been filed, the first Court but no other (5) may stay execution upon an application made before the expiry of the period of appeal, though as the rule states the successful party is not prohibited from executing his decree simply on the ground that the period for appealing has not expired (6). The Court which dismisses a suit becomes functus officio save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs (7). After appeal is filed the Appellate Court, as the Court which has seized of the suit, may stay execution (8). A Civil Court cannot stay execution in cases in which an appeal has been made to the Privy Council against a decree of the High Court (9).

"Sufficient cause"—The application should be supported by an affidavit verifying the facts alleged, and these facts should show sufficient cause for a stay (10). What constitutes sufficient cause must depend upon the facts of the particular case (11). In this connection the proviso to the rule must be referred to. The Court is given a discretion in the matter, and may refuse the application where there has been such delay as disentitles the party to any consideration from the Court (12). And see post. The provisions of this rule as regards the exhibition of sufficient cause apply equally to decrees for immovable as for moveable property (13).

"Substantial loss."—As appears from the use of the word "shall" this must be shown (1) So the Court granted the stay of that part of a decree which directed the completion of certain works, but refused it as regards another part ordering payment of money, as it was not satisfied that substantial loss would result (2)

"Delay"—Vide ante

Notice—Though there was no express provision as to notice under the last Code it was the practice to give notice to the decree holder before disposing finally of an application for stay of execution (3) And this will probably be so in the generality of cases now though not statutorily required unless the case falls within the fourth clause

Security—The taking of security is compulsory (4) The nature and extent of the liability depends on the words of the security bond given to the Court (5) The rule refers to the ultimate order, and therefore the obligation extends to the final decree passed after remand by the High Court in second appeal (6) The amount, of course, is determinable by the special circumstances When proceedings are ordered to be stayed on giving security the judgment debtor must be allowed reasonable opportunity to show that the security offered is sufficient (7) This clause does not contemplate a decree or order in a separate proceeding to be instituted in the future (8) The relationship between a decree holder and judgment debtor who has executed a security bond mortgaging property is not such as to be governed by sect 67 of the Transfer of Property Act and a suit is not necessary (9) In the case of third parties, the Bombay High Court has held (10) that payment by a surety may be enforced by summary process in execution The Calcutta High Court has considered a suit necessary (11) The former view has now been adopted in sect 145 ante In the under mentioned case the Court directed that execution should be first taken against the judgment debtor and then the surety (12) When property is deposited in Court in lieu of security for the purpose of staying a sale and the order directing the sale is confirmed on appeal, neither the depositor nor judgment debtor can claim to have the deposit restored which is then held for the decree holder (13) As to appeal see next paragraph The Court may, on the bond ceasing to have effect, direct that it be cancelled and returned. For the power to take security involves the other (1). But a Subordinate Court has no jurisdiction to release a security taken under the directions of the High Court (2). Where by order of an Appellate Court a security bond was executed by the judgment debtor for stay of execution of a decree pending the decision of an appeal under sect 545 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) and after the disposal of the appeal the decree holder applied for sale of the property under the subsisting attachment, it was held that the sale could be carried out in execution proceedings consequent on the attachment (3). A security bond under this rule pledging immoveable property exceeding Rs 100 in value requires registration (4).

Stay by Appellate Court—An appeal must be pending. A Court has no power after the passing of a final unappealable decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree (5). In the decision cited, (6) it was held that where an incidental decree under sect 244 (now 47) is under appeal, the Court may stay execution of the substantive or original decree in the suit pending the hearing of the appeal, though such original decree is itself not under appeal. See now r 8, post. The manner in which an Appellate Court effects a stay is either on appeal from an order of the Court of first instance refusing a stay, for such an order when made by a High Court is a "judgment" under the Letters Patent, (7) and when made by other Courts is one falling within sect 244 (now sect 47) ante, (8) provided that the Court against which the appeal is made is the Court executing the decree within the meaning of that section, (9) or after an appeal has been filed an original application may be made direct to the Appellate Court (10). But the Appellate Court must have acquired seizin either of the original suit or of the execution proceedings. It was therefore held that the High Court was not competent to stay proceedings in execution of a decree of a Subordinate Court merely by reason of an appeal having been preferred against an order of refusal to set aside the decree under sect 108 of the former Code, corresponding with O IX r 13 of this Code (11). A Superior Court has no power to direct a Subordinate Court to stay execution in a case which is not before it (12). When an Appellate Court reverses a decree in favour of a plaintiff, it should not stay execution of its own decree, for in such case a plaintiff having lost his decree is in no better position until his special appeal is decided than a plaintiff before judgment (1) When an Appellate Court refuses an application for stay, this does not prevent an application under sect 546 (now r 6), should an order for execution be obtained (2)

The Court has inherent powers of stay beyond those given by statute. There is an inherent power in the Court to stay under proper circumstances the drawing up of its own order or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require, (3) or to stay proceedings in the Lower Court—such power being auxiliary to that of the Appellate Court to reverse the order of the Inferior Court (4) And when an appeal is pending against a preliminary order directing an account, the Court having seizin of the appeal can, apart from the question whether the case falls within the Code, make an order staying the carrying out of such order pending the hearing of the appeal (5)

Appeal.—An order refusing stay of execution made by a Court which is not executing the decree is not appealable (6)

1 6 (1) Where an order is made for the execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be taken for the restitution of any property which may be or has been taken in execution of the decree or for the payment of the value of such property and for the due performance of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the Appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security.

(2) Where an order has been made for the sale of immovable property in execution of a decree, and an appeal is pending from such decree, the sale shall, on the application of the judgment-debtor to the Court which made the order, be stayed on such terms as security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit

For the power to take security involves the other (1) But a Subordinate Court has no jurisdiction to release a security taken under the directions of the High Court (2) Where by order of an Appellate Court a security-bond was executed by the judgment debtor for stay of execution of a decree pending the decision of an appeal under sect. 515 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) and after the disposal of the appeal the decree holder applied for sale of the property under the subsisting attachment, it was held that the sale could be carried out in execution-proceedings consequent on the attachment (3) A security bond under this rule pledging immoveable property exceeding Rs 100 in value requires registration (4)

Stay by Appellate Court.—An appeal must be pending A Court has no power after the passing of a final unappealable decree, and before the granting of an application for review of judgment, to order a stay of execution of the decree (5) In the decision cited (6) it was held that where an incidental decree under sect 244 (now 47) is under appeal, the Court may stay execution of the substantive or original decree in the suit pending the hearing of the appeal, though such original decree is itself not under appeal See now r 8, post The manner in which an Appellate Court effects a stay is either on appeal from an order of the Court of first instance refusing a stay, for such an order when made by a High Court is a 'judgment' under the Letters Patent, (7) and when made by other Courts is one falling within sect 244 (now sect 47) ante, (8) provided that the Court against which the appeal is made is the Court executing the decree within the meaning of that section, (9) or after an appeal has been filed an original application may be made direct to the Appellate Court (10) But the Appellate Court must have acquired seizin either of the original suit or of the execution-proceedings It was therefore held that the High Court was not competent to stay proceedings in execution of a decree of a Subordinate Court merely by reason of an appeal having been preferred against an order of refusal to set aside the decree under sect 108 of the former Code, corresponding with O IX r 13 of this Code (11) A Superior Court has no power to direct a Subordinate Court to stay execution in a case which is not before it (12) When an Appellate Court reverses a decree

Register of Appeals.

Registration—The registration of an appeal is a proceeding of a purely ministerial character (3). An appellant has no right to withdraw an appeal which has been regularly registered without the permission of the Court, and the leave of the Court is in every case necessary after an appeal has been regularly registered. As a general rule of practice, the respondent should be served with due notice of the application for leave when it is made after the notice of the day fixed for hearing has been issued. In every instance the appellant will be liable to pay to the respondent his costs occasioned by the appeal (4). When

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal

Object of rule—This rule was never intended by the Legislature to derogate from the right of appeal given by the law to every person who is defeated in a suit in the Court of first instance (2) Its object is to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to incur further costs which he might never succeed in recovering from the appellant (3) The fourth paragraph of the former section which was one of procedure only, (4) and dealt with summary proceedings in execution against the surety has been omitted The matter is covered by section 145 ante (5)

"The Appellate Court."—This rule applies, it has been held, only to appeals preferred to the High Court from subordinate Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and not to appeals preferred to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of one of its own Judges, (6) and does not apply to appeals from the orders of a Judge sitting as a commissioner of the Insolvent Court, (7) the right of appeal in such cases being given by sect 73 of the Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict c 21) It is applicable to an appeal from an order under sect 244 (now sect 47) (8) of the party complained of, in not paying the costs ordered to be paid, is vexatious (1)

Form of order.—An order for security for costs should follow the words of the rule, and should not specify the particular amount in rupees for which security should be given. It would be a good order under the rule if it directed the appellant to furnish the security within a time to be stated "for the costs of the appeal" or "for the costs of the original suit" or "for the costs of the appeal and of the original suit". To hold that the order must specify the amount in rupees of costs for which security should be given would either be to frustrate the intention of the Legislature in framing the section, or to make the order a purely speculative order. The object of the rule is that the respondent at the earliest moment which suits him should take the advantage of the rule, and at that time it would be impossible for the respondent, the appellant, or the Court to say what might be the costs of the appeal. The last paragraph of the former section was said to point to the security being for an indefinite and not for a definite amount. An order specifying the amount would not be a bad order, but the better practice is that the amount should not be specified in the order (2)

"Within such time."—The application to the Court to enlarge the time for giving security may be made either before or after the expiration of the time within which the security has been ordered to be furnished, and the Court may thereupon enlarge the time according to any necessity which may arise where it is just and proper that it should do so. If ultimately the order is not complied with, and the security is not furnished, the appeal may be rejected (3). It cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that the Court can in no case, after the time for giving security is passed, allow the appellant further time for giving security (4). This principle has now been adopted in sect. 118, ante. Though the Court may extend the time for furnishing the security demanded after the time allowed by the order has elapsed it will not do so unless on good grounds (5).

"Shall reject."—The Code empowers the Appellate Court to demand security, and directs that Court to reject the appeal if the security is not furnished within the time the Court orders. To justify the rejection of the appeal there must have been a demand on the part of the Court. The issue of a preliminary notice to show cause is not tantamount to a demand. It simply informs the appellant that the Court proposes to consider the propriety of demanding security from him, and offers him the opportunity of showing cause to the contrary. A Court is not bound by the Code to issue such a notice, though in practice it would generally be improper to make an order for security without affording the appellant the opportunity of contesting it. Where such notice is given the appellant is not bound to appear. He may allow the application to be decided in his absence. If he does not appear and the order is not made in his presence, he must have due notice of it to constitute a demand. The order directing the appellant to furnish security must be served either on him or on his vakil. It would be unreasonable to hold that he was in contempt or disobedience of an order which had not been communicated to him (1). Conflicting opinions have been expressed upon the question whether when the appellant has not given security for costs, the respondent should apply specially to have the appeal rejected or whether it is sufficient for him to object at the hearing of the appeal for non-compliance with the order (2). An appeal, though rejected may on sufficient grounds be restored (3). No appeal is given from an order for security for costs. It has been held, therefore, that it could not have been intended that the order for security which was unappealable might be questioned by an appeal from the act of the Court compulsorily done under the rule on security not being given as ordered. An order, therefore, rejecting an appeal under this rule is not a decree and is not appealable as such (4) nor as an order (5).

11 (1) The Appellate Court, after sending for the record if it thinks fit so to do, and after fixing a day for hearing the appellant or his pleader and hearing him accordingly if he appears on that day, may dismiss the appeal without sending notice to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred and without serving notice on the respondent or his pleader.

(2) If on the day fixed or any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed.

(3) The dismissal of an appeal under this rule shall be notified to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred.

Summary dismissal—This rule applies to appeals admitted and registered (6). A proceeding under this rule is to all intents and purposes a trial (7).

and a judgment and decree should be drawn up in the usual manner. It has been held that in dismissing an appeal under this rule a District Judge is not relieved from the necessity of writing a judgment, however short, showing the points raised, the decision thereon, and the reasons therefor (1). But it is not the practice of the Calcutta High Court to draw up decrees under this rule (2). And the Allahabad High Court has held that it is not obligatory upon the lower Appellate Court to write a judgment in such cases (3). But a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a lower Appellate Court must write its judgment (as provided by Bombay Civil Circular 51), when it dismisses an appeal under this rule (4). The order of dismissal under this rule is a decree and not merely a refusal to entertain the appeal, and so far as it is a final adjudication there is no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under this rule and an appeal dismissed after full hearing (5). Where an appeal is dismissed under this rule, the effect of the dismissal is to affirm the decree appealed against, which becomes merged in the decree of dismissal of the Appellate Court. When, therefore, an appeal has been dismissed under this rule the Court which made the decree appealed against has no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree (6).

12 (1) Unless the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal under rule 11, it shall fix a day for hearing the appeal.

(2) Such day shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the respondent, and the time necessary for the service of the notice of appeal, so as to allow the respondent sufficient time to appear and answer the appeal on such day.

It is not competent to a Court of Appeal to restrict the ground or grounds upon which the appeal heard under this rule is to be admitted finally (7).

13 (1) Where the appeal is not dismissed under rule 11, the Appellate Court shall send notice of the appeal to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred.

(.) Where the appeal is from the decree of a Court, the records of which are not deposited in the Appellate Court, the Court receiving such notice shall send with all practicable despatch all material papers in the suit, or such papers as may be specially called for by the Appellate Court.

(.) Either party may apply in writing to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, specifying any of the papers in such Court of which he requires copies to be made, and copies of such papers shall be made at the expense of, and given to, the applicant.

Records. If there is any part of the record not sent up which the appellant wishes to bring before the Appellate Court, it is his duty to ask the Court to send for it before the day of trial (1)

14. (1) Notice of the day fixed under rule 12 shall be affixed in the Appellate Court-house, and a like notice shall be sent by the Appellate Court to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and shall be served on the respondent or on his pleader in the Appellate Court in the manner provided for the service on a defendant of a summons to appear and answer, and all the provisions applicable to such summons, and to proceedings with reference to the service thereof, shall apply to the service of such notice.

(2) Instead of sending the notice to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, the Appellate Court may itself cause the notice to be served on the respondent or his pleader under the provisions above referred to.

15. The notice to the respondent shall declare that, if he does not appear in the Appellate Court on the day so fixed the appeal will be heard ex parte.

Procedure on hearing

16. (1) On the day fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the appellant shall be heard in support of the appeal.

(2) The Court shall then, if it does not dismiss the appeal at once, hear the respondent against the appeal and in such case the appellant shall be entitled to reply.

Hearing.—The rule says "on the day fixed" but the hearing of the appeal before the day fixed, if the pleaders of both parties are present and argue the case, is not to be a defect in procedure as regards intervention in a special appeal (see, e.g., 11). If it appears that the rules of Court relating to appeal have not been complied with, and no adequate excuse is offered, the appeal may be dismissed (12).

17. (1) Where on the day fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed.

(2) Where the appellant appears and the respondent does not appear, the appeal shall be heard ex parte.

"Where on the day fixed," etc.—A party seeking to put in motion the stringent provisions of the rule is bound to show very distinctly that the procedure under it has been strictly complied with, and that the appellant did not make his appearance on the day to which the case was adjourned. When he is unable to show that, or that the appellant below had any notice that an appeal was to have been heard on the day on which the Judge disposed of it, the appeal cannot be dismissed under this rule (3). Where a Lower Appellate Court, after eleven months' delay and without fixing any time for disposing of an appeal, dismissed it for default, the High Court set aside the order and remanded the case (4). If an appeal is called on without any day having been fixed for hearing and the appellant is absent, his absence is not a default which renders his appeal liable to be dismissed (5). It should appear on the record that a day had been fixed for the hearing of the appeal, and that thereupon the default had followed (6). But if an appeal is taken up before the appointed day and is allowed to proceed to a hearing in the presence of the pleaders of the parties, and is argued by them, there is no defect in the procedure (7).

"Appear."—The former section (556) ran "does not attend in person or by his pleader." But the word "attend" was held to be practically synonymous with "appear" (8). The present wording therefore effects no alteration in the sense. Where there has been no "appearance" the rule applies. But when there has been an "appearance" it does not (1) The question, however, has arisen as to what constitutes an appearance within the meaning of the rule. "Appearance" has several meanings, and these must be understood in reference to the particular subject to which it relates, and the purpose or end to be answered by the appearance has an important bearing in determining what is sufficient to constitute an appearance in a particular case. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (2) has recently ruled that an application by counsel or pleader who is instructed only to apply for an adjournment, which is refused, is not an "appearance," and that when in such circumstance an appeal is dismissed, the dismissal is one for default under this rule entitling the appellant to apply for re-admission under r 19. The decisions are not altogether uniform, but the balance of authority in the Bombay (3) and Allahabad (4) High Courts is in favour of the same view, which has also been taken by the Punjab Chief Court (5). Where, however, a pleader for the appellant appeared and asked for an adjournment but did not withdraw from the case, merely urging that the records were in possession of his leader who was absent, and that he could not argue the appeal, but the application for adjournment was not granted, it was held by the Madras High Court that it was open to the Court to refuse the adjournment, but that if it did so it was bound to write a judgment and dispose of the appeal, and could not dismiss it for default (6). But the Madras High Court has recently held that where the pleader was instructed only to apply for an adjournment and was not duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, nor accompanied by any one able to answer such questions, there was no appearance by the defendant (7). When the appellant and his pleaders were present when the appeal was called on for hearing, and one of the pleaders addressed the Court, but soon after the commencement of his argument, went to another Court and did not return, and the other pleader refused to address the Court, the appeal, it was held, should be dismissed, but not for default (8). If the appellant, in a case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court, does not put in an appearance and takes no steps to produce evidence, the Lower Appellate Court may dismiss the appeal for default (9). by the same appellant before the Court and he was summoned to give evidence in one of them, but failed to attend, judgment, it was held, could not be given against him for default in the other appeal (1)

"Be dismissed"—The Court, in the absence of the appellant on the day fixed for hearing, should dismiss the appeal and not reverse the judgment of the lower Court (2) If a Judge, instead of dismissing the appeal for non appearance of the appellant in person or by pleader, goes into the merits of the case and gives judgment against the appellant, the appeal must be considered as dismissed for default of the appellant in appearing, and an application for its admission and re hearing of the appeal cannot be treated as one for review. It is improper to consider or decide upon the merits of a case when the Judge has no opportunity of hearing what the appellant has to say in support of it (3) It is illegal to try an appeal on the merits in such a case, and the judgment given in this way is a nullity and must be cancelled, and its existence is no bar to the admission of the appeal (4) The amended rule now says the Court may make an order of dismissal. The former section ran "shall be dismissed" (5)

Appeal—In order dismissing an appeal from a decree for default, (6) or dismissing objections to the execution of a decree for default, (7) was formerly held to be a decree within the meaning of sect 2 of the last Code and thus appealable. But that section now excludes orders of dismissal for default from the category of a decree (8) A party may apply for its admission under r 19 and from this there is an appeal under O XLIII, post

"To the Appellate Court"—The application must be made to the Court dismissing the appeal (2) If an appeal is referred by a District Judge to an Assistant Judge for trial, under sect 17 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (Act XIV of 1869), and the Assistant Judge dismisses the appeal for default, the application for re-admission of the appeal should be made to him and not to the District Judge, and his order refusing to re-admit the appeal is not subject to reversal or review by the District Judge (3) As to limitation in case of such an application, see case cited (4)

"Prevented"—This and the kindred provision in O IX r 13 mean that the application may be based upon any ground which would be a just and proper one for granting the application, and not that the application can be based upon one ground only, viz that the applicant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing The affirmative provisions of the Code that a plaintiff or appellant may prove that he was "prevented by sufficient cause" from appearing or attending when his suit or appeal was called on and dismissed, do not imply the negative, namely, that an application for restoration cannot be granted unless "sufficient cause (in this sense) is shown" (5) It has been recently held that a Court has power to restore an appeal dismissed for default even where the appellant is not able to prove that he was prevented by a sufficient cause from appearing, and that the Court is not bound to restore an appeal in every case where the non appearance is due to the pleader's negligence, but may in its discretion leave him to his remedy against the pleader by an action for damages (6) The Court is bound to see whether the reasons set forth in the application for the re-admission of the appeal are satisfactory or not Thus, where the Lower Appellate Court refused an application for re-admission merely because the appellant had not conformed to a rule which he had passed that two pleaders should be engaged in every appeal, the High Court sent back the case to the Judge to consider whether a good ground had been shown for the re-admission of the appeal (7) The reasons for rejecting the application should be stated (8) When an appeal was transferred from the file of one Court to another, no notice of the transfer having been given to the appellant by the pleaders in the case and the appeal was dismissed in his absence, held that sufficient ground for his absence had been made out (9) What, however, is "sufficient cause" must be decided in each case according to its own peculiar circumstances

the question is whether an appearance by a counsel or pleader instructed to apply only for an adjournment is an 'appearance' within the meaning of the Code, and whether in such a case the suit or appeal can be dismissed for default. The first question has been answered in the negative and the second in the affirmative (1) When an appeal is dismissed under such circumstances the order of dismissal is for default and the appellant is entitled to apply for re-admission of the appeal under this rule (2) Where an appeal is dismissed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book such a dismissal can be set aside by review. Such a case is not one in which default was made in appearing at the hearing of the case if the record shows that the pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard. Under the Code there are only two methods known to the law by which a judgment and decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court can be set aside in India. These two methods are described in these provisions and those relating to review. Where it appears from the record that pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard there has been no default in appearing at the hearing of the case and therefore this rule will not apply (3)

Appeal.—The Code allows an appeal from an order refusing to grant an application under this rule for the restoration of an appeal. But it does not provide for an appeal from an order granting such an application (4) When however the order dismissing an appeal is not one which can properly be made under r 17 there is no appeal from an order refusing to re-admit the appeal under this rule and the remedy in such a case is by revision. Thus in a case when the appeal came on for hearing the appellant himself and two pleaders on his behalf were present in the Lower Appellate Court, one of the pleaders opened the case but in a short time was called away to attend to a case before another Court and the Lower Appellate Court waiting some little time for the pleader to return called upon the other pleader and the appellant to support the appeal and when each of them declared his inability to do so dismissed the appeal for the default of prosecution. The then appellant applied for the restoration of the appeal which was refused on the ground that no sufficient cause was shown for the restoration. The appellant appealed to the High Court under this rule. It was dismissed on the ground that the appeal in the Lower Appellate Court was not dismissed for default but the appellant was allowed to file an application for revision (5) When an application for restoration is made the applicant must produce all his evidence in support of it before the Court to which it is made. If he does not do so and the application is refused, he cannot, on appeal from the order dismissing his application, supplement his evidence (1).

20. Where it appears to the Court at the hearing that any person who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal, the Court may adjourn the hearing to a future day to be fixed by the Court and direct that such person be made a respondent.

Power to adjourn hearing and direct persons appearing interested to be made respondents.

Adding respondent.—The power of the Court to act under this rule is only limited in two respects, first, the person whom the Court may add must have been a party to the suit, and secondly, he must be a person interested in the result of the appeal. There is no period of limitation specified in the Limitation Act, for the action of the Court in that matter (2). The party added must be interested in the result of the appeal. Whether this be so must be determined in each case on its facts (3). In a suit for contribution the first Court gave a decree against one of the defendants and dismissed it against the other. On appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the lower appeal Court having, at the hearing of the appeal, found that the defendants, against whom the suit was dismissed, were not made parties to the appeal, though interested in the result of the appeal, directed that they should be made parties, and they entered appearance in accordance with the order made. Held that there was nothing wrong in the lower appeal Courts making them respondents and passing a decree against them (4). An Appellate Court is competent to make a person a respondent who in the original suit was arrayed on the same side with the appellant (5). In a suit for contribution, where there was a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 3 separately, and the suit was dismissed against defendant No. 2 on appeal by defendant No. 1, there being no appeal by the plaintiff, defendant No 2 might, it was held, be made a respondent (1) The Allahabad High Court has held that the provisions of the former section did not apply to second appeals, and that a second Appellate Court could not add a party as a respondent unless that party was a party to the appeal below, and this notwithstanding that he was a party to the suit in the Court of first instance; (2) but the opposite view has been held by the Madras High Court, and according to the ruling of that High Court, it is competent for the second Appellate Court to add parties who were defendants in the Court of first instance, though not joined as respondents in the Lower Appellate Court (3) This rule applies only to cases where at the hearing of the appeal the Court is satisfied that a person who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal (4)

21. Where an appeal is heard ex parte and judgment is pronounced against the respondent, he may apply to the Appellate Court to re-hear the appeal; and, if he satisfies the Court that the notice was not duly served or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court shall re-hear the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit to impose upon him.

Rehearing of appeal.—After an appeal is filed the power to set aside the original decree on an application under sect 103 (now O IX r 13) is vested in the Appellate Court This power is distinct from the power to set aside an ex parte appellate decree conferred by the present rule, which only enables the Court to direct the appeal from the original decree to be reheard, thus temporarily restoring the original decree (5) No appeal lies to the High Court under sect 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from an order refusing to hear an application under this rule to have an appeal from a decree in a rent suit, valued less than Rs 100, reheard in the presence of the respondent (6) An application to rehear the appeal is an application in the suit (7)

22. (1) Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection to the decree which

Form of objection and provisions applicable thereto.

(3) Unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection or his pleader of having received a copy thereof, the Appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served, as soon as may be after the filing of the objection, on such party or his pleader at the expense of the respondent

(4) Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit.

(5) The provisions relating to pauper appeals shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to an objection under this rule

Scope of rule—In this rule two classes of cases have been referred to under it a respondent may, firstly support the decree of the Court of first instance upon grounds which may have been decided against him by that Court, and if a part of the decree is adverse to him he has the right to object at the hearing of the appeal to that part of the decree without filing a separate appeal. These two classes of cases are not of an analogous character. Cross objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree which is partly unfavourable to him (1) A respondent, when the decree is against him, cannot (unless he has filed a cross appeal) be heard except to support the decree, and can only alter it by means of a cross appeal (2) A party may be satisfied with the decree of the Lower Court, and may be willing to allow it to stand unimpaired if his opponent does not think it necessary to appeal, but he may not be willing to have the decree modified or altered upon appeal in favour of his opponent, without having the whole decree set right. Again suppose a defendant sets up two defences to a claim brought against him, and the Lower Court determines in his favour as to one of them and against him as to the other the plaintiff's claim would be dismissed. The Lower Court might be wrong as to both defences and ought to have decided in the defendant's favour the defence which was decided against him and vice versa. If the plaintiff were to appeal and to reverse the decision of the Lower Court upon the defence decreed in the defendant's favour it would be unjust not to allow the defendant, if he could, to show that the Lower Court was wrong in point of law in determining the other defence against him, for he might thereby be able to show that the Lower Court was substantially right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, though wrong as to the defence which barred it (1). He may support the decree on the ground decided against him. This reason applies to special appeals with as much force as it does to regular appeals (2). It was held that the order of a Lower Appellate Court disallowing the objections filed by the respondent in that Court under sect. 561, was appealable because it was a decree passed in appeal within the meaning of sect. 581 of the 1st Code, whether it dealt with the grounds of appeal urged by the appellant or the objections taken by the respondent under sect. 561 (3). It was also held that sect. 617 of the 1st Code made applicable to revision petitions under sect. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, the procedure relating to appeals, and consequently a memorandum of objections would lie in such revision petitions (4).

Decree entirely in favour of respondent.—Where a decree is entirely in favour of a respondent it is not necessary for him to file a notice of objection to the decision on any issue found against him. He can support the decree on the ground that that issue ought to have been decided in his favour. The Appellate Court ought to decide that issue or show in its judgment a reason for not doing so (5). And see ante.

"Decided against him."—If a point has not been decided in favour of the respondent it must for the purposes of the rule be taken to have been decided against him within its meaning. It is not necessary to entitle a respondent to support a decree upon a particular ground that that ground should have been in express terms decided against him (6). Where a claim to set off was asserted in the respondent's (defendant's) written statement, but no issue on the point was raised, and no pronouncement on it was made by the first Court, and it was not made the subject of any cross objection, nor was it urged before the Appellate Court in argument, the former decision was held to be no bar to the Appellate Gudadhar Prasad*, 2 A. 631, 634 (1850), the appellant to the High Court lost his appeal in the Lower Court, and there was no objection which respondents could have taken by way of appeal to this Court against the decree of the Lower Appellate Court. See as to this case, Kamat v. Kamat, 8 B. 368, 370 (1834).

before the Calcutta High Court (1) it was decided that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co respondents (2) Thus where the Court of first instance decided a suit upon a ground common to all the defendants, it was held it was competent for the Appellate Court, on the appeal of only one of the defendants, to modify or set aside in favour of all the defendants the decree of the Lower Court, and the whole case was opened out in appeal, not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant who had appealed, but also as between the plaintiff and other defendants, who had been made respondents apparently because they had not joined in the appeal. It was held that the Appellate Court could not do complete justice between all the parties without opening up the whole case, and such an instance was one of the exceptional cases in which a respondent should be allowed to prefer objections as against his co respondents (3) It was also held by the Madras High Court that one respondent can file a memorandum of objections against another respondent (4)

Court fees on cross-objections—The objections under this rule have to be made by means of a document which has to be filed within one month after service of notice of the appeal, that is, on a date which is generally long prior to the date of hearing. Is that document chargeable with court fees at the time it is filed? Under sect 4, Court Fees Act, it is not so chargeable unless it is a document of any of the kinds specified in the first or second Schedule annexed to the Act. A memorandum of objections is not a document so specified in those schedules. Such being the case, no fee is leviable on a memorandum of objections until the time of hearing, and it is leviable under the special provision in sect 16 of the Court Fees Act (5). The Court cannot remit the stamp duty in such cases, (6) the proper order is to dismiss the memorandum (with or without costs, at the discretion of the Court) (7).

"Within one month."—This rule allows a respondent to file a memorandum of objections within one month from the date on which notice has been served on him or on his pleader. The right so conferred is an absolute right, and the hearing of the appeal cannot be advanced so as to defeat this provision. An appeal cannot be definitely posted until the Court has ascertained that notice of the appeal has been served on the respondent, and a date should then be fixed not less than one month from the date of service (1). The Court may grant further time. Whether it will do so will depend on the particular facts proved (2). Under this rule the Court has power to receive a memorandum of cross-objections at any time (3).

Withdrawal of appeal (sub-rule (4)).—Cross objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree partly unfavourable to him, but they were considered to so far differ from a cross-appeal that they depended on the hearing of the appeal, and could not be heard if the appeal was not heard. Upon this view a number of questions arose as to the effect of the withdrawal of an appeal before and after the commencement of the hearing, and what constituted a hearing upon the right to have cross-objections heard and determined (4). The general result of these decisions may be stated to be that they involved a discussion of the meaning of the term "hearing," that if the appeal was withdrawn before the "hearing" the respondent could not be heard upon his cross objections dependent as they were on the appeal, but that if the hearing had begun and the Court had thus become seized of the cross objections the respondent could not be deprived of his remedy because the appellant choose to abandon his (5). The matter need not now be further considered. An appellant may of course withdraw his appeal at any time up to its actual decision (6). But now under sub rule (4) in all cases of withdrawal the Court may proceed to determine the cross objections. Where, however, the decree is wholly in favour of the respondent his right to contest any of the conclusions in the first Court judgment is only for the purpose of supporting the decree, and if the appeal is withdrawn that purpose is fully secured because the decree is left standing and the right to dispute the conclusions in the judgment is no longer of any use to him. To withdraw the appeal in such a case cannot, as in the case of cross objections, deprive the respondent of any remedy whatever (1) Sub rule (4) is therefore limited to cross objections. A question also arose as to whether, when an appeal was abandoned, and the respondent could not proceed with his objections to the decree, he could file an appeal, after the expiry of time allowed for appeal by the Limitation Act, under sect 5 of that Act. It was held that the mere fact that an appeal has been withdrawn did not amount to "sufficient cause" within that section. But each case had to be decided upon its own special circumstances. If the Court was satisfied in any case that there had been "sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time," then it would allow the appeal to be admitted (2). For the reason given such a case is not likely to recur, as there is no necessity to file an appeal if the appeal covers only the ground of the cross objections which can now be determined when the appeal is abandoned.

ferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal, the Appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit, and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand.

Remand—Where the Lower Court has taken evidence sufficiently to enable the Appellate Court in its view of the case to pronounce judgment, then the latter Court must determine the case whether the Lower Court has or has not fixed the proper issues. In such case it has all the materials necessary to the exercise of its judgment, and if the proper issues have not been fixed, it may resettle the issues under r 24. Cases may, however, occur where the Court has not such material.

The first case is where there has been no complete determination of the suit by reason of the Court's erroneous disposal of the case on a "preliminary point." Such an order of remand implies a reversal of the first judgment (3) and re-opens the whole case, (4) and involves a second decision by the Lower Court, that is, the Court which first disposed of the suit and no other (5). is a complete remand. As already stated a complete remand involves a reversal of the first judgment. Where the first Court disposes of the suit on two grounds only, res judicata and limitation, and on appeal its decision was upheld only on the first ground and the question of limitation was not gone into, in second appeal the High Court reversed the decision and remanded the case to the Lower Appellate Court to decide it on the merits. This was held to leave the whole case open to that Court, and before it could reverse the first Court's decree and remand the case for a first decision, it was bound to determine whether the fresh Court's decision on the question of limitation was right or wrong (1). It has been held that it is not a good ground for passing an order of remand under this rule to say that the preliminary issue has been decided by the Court of first instance on a wrong view of the burden of proof, unless the Appellate Court finds that such decision was wrong (2).

The next case is when the Lower Court has omitted to try an issue or to determine a question of fact essential to the right decision of the case set up in the first Court, and in consequence the evidence is insufficient (rr 25, 26). In such a case the decree is not set aside (3). The case is retained undisposed of on the file of the Appellate Court. The Lower Court is directed to take the additional evidence and to try on such evidence the issues remitted. When it has done this it returns the additional evidence with its finding thereon to the Appellate Court, which then being placed in a position to determine the appeal, passes judgment (4). In this case there is what has been called a partial remand. Where the Court of first instance has considered the whole of the evidence before it and completely disposed of the suit on the merits, the Appellate Court must itself finally determine the appeal and cannot remand, (5) but if it thinks that the determination of any particular question unnecessary, it may make an order under r 25 post (6).

The third case (which is not, properly speaking, a remand) exists where the Lower Court has determined the whole case and has not omitted to frame or determine any issues but has decided the case on insufficient evidence (rr 27-29). In this case the Appellate Court itself takes the evidence or directs the Lower Court to do so and when such evidence is returned passes judgment in the appeal which, as in the former case, has meanwhile remained on its file.

An improper order of remand is not necessarily void but only illegal or irregular (7). Under the last Code an order under sect 562 was appealable, (1) and a party might impeach the order of remand on appeal from the final decree (2) Under sect 578 (now s 99), however, no decision should be reversed unless it has affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court But jurisdiction in this section is used in its strict sense, and does not mean the legal authority of a Court to do a certain thing, viz to order a remand, and therefore in each case it had to be determined whether the merits had been prejudicially affected (3) Under the present Code, however, an appeal is given from an order under this rule (O XLIII), and under sect 105, if an appeal lies and the party does not appeal, he cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the order of remand

When a case is remanded the Lower Court should fix a reasonable date for the parties to appear and carry on the suit, (4) and if they do not appear the case should be dismissed (5) If they appear no fresh valahinama is necessary (6) When a case is remanded to a District Judge he should not transfer it to another officer (7) Costs of the Appellate Court can be recovered only when the order of remand provides for them (8) If on the return of the case it appears that the remand order has not been carried out, the Court, in remanding it a second time, should point out the manner in which the carrying out of the previous order seemed defective (9) If a party who is offered a remand elects to go on with the case as it stands, he is estopped from unpugning the decision on that point (10) Where a case was remanded to be tried on the merits, the Court remanding considering it not barred, the Lower Court was held wrong in entering again into the question of limitation (11) For the Court cannot to open a matter already adjudicated upon between the parties (1). It has been held that when a case is sent back for trial on the merits the order of remand shuts out preliminary objections such as limitation or res adjudicata (2) or jurisdiction (3). On the other hand, it has been held that the remand of a case for trial on the merits does not prevent adjudication upon any other issue arising in the case e.g. limitation, provided that such issue has not been adjudicated upon by the Court making the remand (4). The question whether sect. 25 of the first Code, now sect. 24, had application to a case remanded was considered in the case cited (5). It has been held that where the decision of the Court of first instance is not based on any preliminary ground and where the whole of the evidence has been taken and the conclusion of the Court relates to the merits of the case the Appellate Court cannot set aside the decree under this rule (6).

"Preliminary point."—Prior to the amendment of the Code of 1882 by Act VII of 1888 sect. 562 contained the words "So as to exclude any evidence of fact which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties" and the word "investigate" was used instead of the word "determine" at the end of the section. The condition therefore necessary to justify a remand consisted prior to Act VII of 1888 in the exclusion of evidence of a material fact or in the omission to investigate the merits as the consequence of the decision on a preliminary question which the Appellate Court could not uphold (7).

The condition necessary to a remand after 1888 was the omission to determine the merits. Therefore it was held competent for an Appellate Court to remand a case where the Court of first instance recorded evidence on all the issues and at the final hearing determined the suit erroneously on some particular point without expressing any opinion on the other issues (8). But there could be no remand where, though the Court held that the suit was barred by limitation, it at the same time came to a definite decision on each of the other issues (9).

It was held that the expression "preliminary point" was used in sect 562 of the last Code, not in the sense of some point collateral to the merits, e.g. limitation, res judicata, and the like, but of some point preliminary to a general investigation of the merits. The words referred thus to some point either collateral to the merits which precluded their determination altogether or some particular question which, though relating to the merits, precluded their general determination (1). The term is somewhat ambiguous. The meaning would appear to be that the Appellate Court may remand where the Lower Court has disposed of a suit upon a point or issue, the determination of which has precluded the necessity for determining other points or issues in the suit, and such other points or issues have been left undetermined.

Sect 562 was held to authorize a remand only where the entire suit and not merely a portion of it had been disposed of by the Court upon a preliminary point (2). In an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a decree (sect 108 or O IX r 13 of this Code), the only case which can be remanded to be tried on its merits is the application under sect 108, and not the original case the decree in which is sought to be set aside (3). When, in contravention of the provisions of sect 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, a Civil Court heard and determined a suit in which a question of tenant right was raised, and on appeal the Lower Appellate Court remanded the suit, it was held that that Court ought not to have done so, but should have passed the order required by sect 202 of the Act (4).

It not infrequently, however, happens that a remand is necessary in consequence of an error, omission, or irregularity by reason of which there has not been a proper trial or an effectual and complete adjudication of the suit. The former Code not providing for the case, difficulty was felt (5) and recourse was had to an inherent jurisdiction (6) (the only powers of remand being those contained in sects 562 and 566 of that Code) (7) or a jurisdiction implied in the terms of other sections of the Code (8). So a case has been remanded where the suit was decided without the plaintiff being given a fair opportunity of knowing the line of defence he had to meet, (1) where the decision was given without taking the defendant's evidence, (2) or where an Appellate Court made an order under sects 27, 32, or 53 of the former Code, (3) or where the Court mistook the nature of the case (4) and had not properly tried an issue, (5) where the parties were or might have been misled by the act of the Court, (6) where an appeal was held wrongly to have abated, (7) or a suit was wrongly decided ex parte (8) A remand under sect 562 was, however, under the last Code held to be bad where the Lower Court acted irregularly in issuing a commission (9) and on the ground of defect of parties, (10) and where the deposition of the witnesses did not bear the usual certificate (11) It was proposed to specially legislate for cases where the Lower Court had committed any error omission, or irregularity by reason of which in the opinion of the Appellate Court, there had not been a proper trial or an effectual and complete adjudication of the suit as contemplated by law, and the party complaining of such error, omission or irregularity had been materially prejudiced thereby The Special Committee, however, reported that they thought it safer not to give legislative sanction to the views enunciated by the Allahabad High Court in Habib Bakshi v Baldeo Prasad, (12) considering that the power of reversal and remand was liable to be abused while the procedure under r 25 was free from this liability and at the same time furnished (as it considered) an effectual remedy As to this it is to be observed that under that rule a remand is not made for a further trial and decision by the first Court on the whole case, but only for findings on specified issues to enable the Appellate Court itself to pass a proper decision Cases may occur where an Appellate Court has power to make an order under some section or rule of the Code, and in order to give effect to the provisions of the section or rule applicable, it is necessary that it should in certain cases for the ends of justice send back the case to the Court of first instance In the present Code the absolute prohibition of sect 564, which created a difficulty against the adoption of this course has been removed (that section being now omitted), and under sect 151 the Court may make such order as is necessary for the ends of justice Probably under the circumstances it is a correct conclusion to draw that though the Legislature has expressly omitted to lay down as a positive rule that a remand may be granted in the cases referred to in the proposed, but rejected, amendment, for fear that a power expressed in such wide terms might be liable to abuse, the Court may, where that course is absolutely necessary for the ends of justice, exercise the power of remand in cases not falling within the precise terms of this rule or of r 25, post. Further, if an order of remand is erroneous, a party who has consented to it may be estopped from contesting it, (1) and in no case are subsequent proceedings void merely because of such error (2). It has, however, been recently held that an Appellate Court has no inherent power to remand when the Lower Court has committed errors materially prejudicing the complainant, and that its only power of remand is under sect 107 (1) (b) as limited by this rule and is no wider than it was under the last Code (3). In the under-mentioned cases it has been held that an order of remand may be made even when the disposal has not been on a strictly preliminary point, eg where there has been no regular hearing of the matter and the evidence on which the disposal was made has not been placed on record (4). Where a judgment had been partly based on evidence not on the record it was held on second appeal that if such evidence was accepted it would be impossible to decide whether the remainder was sufficient to support the judgment and the case was remanded (5). In this case the lower Court had relied on a statement made by a pleader, and it was held that such a statement must be regularly proved and permission to admit additional evidence was given.

"And the evidence"—It was reported that the practice in various provinces differed on the question whether evidence recorded in the proceedings leading up to the decree set aside under sect 562 was in itself available as evidence during the retrial, or whether it could only be made admissible in the case of witnesses attending at the hearing by examining them upon their previous depositions as statements recorded in a different proceeding. The Legislature has shown itself to be of the opinion that, subject to all just exceptions such depositions should of their own force be available as evidence. Evidence may be received from parties who did not appear at the former trial (6). Where the Judge in a remand observed that evidence was unnecessary, the declaration was held to sufficiently justify the plaintiff in making no further application for a summons on their witnesses (7). Where a review had been granted for the purpose of seeing whether a chittah ought not to be used, and the case was remanded for a rehearing, the party was held to be concluded from objecting that the chittah was improperly made use of upon the rehearing (8). held that a case in which there was no proper hearing by the first Court, and no record of the evidence, was a fit one for remand (1)

Appeal—An appeal lies under O XLIII. But the right of appeal from interlocutory orders ceases with the disposal of the suit (2) and under the provisions of sect. 105, ante, a party who does not appeal from the order is thereafter precluded from disputing its correctness. It has been held that no appeal lay in a suit or proceeding under the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, (3) and that O XLIII. gives no appeal against an order of remand not passed under this rule, (4) or against an order setting aside a dismissal of a suit under O IX. r. 4 (5)

24 Where the evidence upon the record is sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment, the Appellate Court may, after resettling the issues, if necessary, finally determine the suit, notwithstanding that the judgment of the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has proceeded wholly upon some ground other than that on which the Appellate Court proceeds

Where evidence on record sufficient, Appellate Court may determine case finally.

"Determine the suit"—See notes to r 23, ante. The word "may" before "after resettling the issues" (6) was substituted for "shall" in the last Code by sect 51, Act VII of 1888. Where a Court of first instance after taking evidence dismisses a suit upon a preliminary objection without giving a decision upon the merits of the case and the decree is reversed on appeal, the Court of Appeal, if it considers the evidence on the record sufficient may decide the case, and is not bound to remand it for trial under sect 562 (now r 23) (7). If the evidence is insufficient the Court should proceed under the next rule or r 27. This rule does not enable an Appellate Court to declare a right in favour of one of the parties where no issue has been fixed on the point, and the right has not been set up in the Lower Court (8). But if all the points in dispute are covered by the issues and there is evidence to decide them, there cannot be a remand (9). Where a Court of first appeal omits to determine a material issue of fact, the High Court as a Court of second appeal was held not competent under this rule to determine such issue itself, but should refer it for determination to the Court of first appeal (1) But see now sect 103, ante

25 Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required; and such Court shall proceed to try such issues, and shall return the evidence to the Appellate Court together with its finding thereon and the reasons therefor.

Omission to frame or try issue—See notes to r 23 Prior to sect 52 of Act VII of 1888, sect 566, which this rule replaces, contained in place of the words “if necessary” the words “and the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine such issue or question” The rule, it has been said, is intended to provide for cases where some point has come to light in the Appellate Court which has not been raised or the importance of which has not occurred to the parties or to the Judge in the Court below (2) Where, however, though no specific issue has been framed on a particular question yet the matter has been tried and determined without any objection on the part of the plaintiff who has not been taken by surprise, but was fully informed by the defendant’s list of documents and from cross examination of his witnesses that the defence would be taken, it is undesirable in general that the case should be sent back to be retried on a special issue framed as to that particular question (3) The expression “determine any question of fact” means in a legal manner (4) The Court may (5) frame issues (6) provided that there has been an omission (7) on the part of the Lower Court The Appellate Court should frame the issues which are essential and send them to the Lower Court for trial, but should not remand and direct the Lower Court to frame the issues (8)

The issues should be specifically stated by the Appellate Court. It is not sufficient to direct the case to be decided in accordance with the observations in the judgment (1). It is always dangerous to allow parties to make a new case in a Mofussil Appellate Court, and the Courts as a general rule should not allow a point not appearing in the pleadings or raised in any other way in the first Court to be framed into an issue (2). A party cannot change the nature of the case after remand (3). Where a Judge proceeds under this rule he should not reverse the decree of the Lower Court and remand the suit, but should frame the necessary issues and send them down for trial, and keep the suit pending until the return of the first Court's finding on the issues with the record of the trial (4). The effect of such an order is not a rehearing, and save as to the issues sent down the first Court has no power to deal with the case (5). The Court is to direct additional evidence to be taken, and the parties are entitled to have the opportunity of giving evidence upon the fresh issue, even though the order of remand contains no express direction to that effect (6). The parties should have the fullest opportunity to produce their evidence (7). When a case is remanded by one Judge and subsequently comes before another of equal jurisdiction (8) or the Judge's successor, (9) the latter officer cannot set aside the order of remand. So where a Judge remanded a case to be tried on a certain issue and directed the Munsiff to give plaintiff a decree according to the decision at which he would arrive, and the case went back in appeal before another Judge, it was held that the Appellate Court was limited to seeing whether the issue was a proper issue or not, and could not go behind the order (10). A Court to which a case is remanded for retrial, on a particular issue amongst others, cannot on remand allow that issue to be abandoned and proceed to try the case upon the other issues raised, (11) nor can the Court refer the case to an arbitrator, (12) and when the case is remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for findings on certain issues, it is not competent to that Court to delegate the decision of those issues to a Court subordinate thereto, (1) for when issues are remitted under this rule, such issues are triable only by the Court which was originally seized of the case (2) There is no appeal under the Letters Patent from an order referring to issues for trial (3)

"Return"—Where an Appellate Court has made an order under this rule the return to such order must be made to the same Court, and such Court is not competent to transfer the appeal for disposal elsewhere (4) Where a Judge has heard the argument on some of the issues and expressed his decision upon them, he is not bound to hear the whole case on the return made to another issue framed under these sections (5) The findings upon issues remanded by the High Court in second appeal cannot be challenged upon the evidence as in first appeals, but objections to these findings must be restricted to the limits within which the original pleas in second appeal are confined (6) In certifying to the High Court the findings on issues sent back on remand and found by the Court of first instance, the Lower Appellate Court is, in the absence of any admission by the party against whom the issues have been found bound to form its own opinion on the evidence and record its findings with the reasons for them (7) Where a party is dissatisfied with a decision and appeals and re opens the whole case, he must acquiesce in the result finally arrived at by the Court below in accordance with the instructions of the High Court in his special appeal (8)

should examine and test them to see whether or not they ought to be accepted (1) Objections which might have been but were not made under this rule in a Lower Appellate Court to the findings on remand of the Court of first instance cannot be raised for the first time as grounds of second appeal from the Lower Appellate Court's decree (2) In case of an unnecessary remand under the last rule, it is competent to the Judge before whom the appeal subsequently comes to disregard the finding on the order of remand (3) The Court is in any case bound to consider the findings of the Lower Court on the merits (4)

27. (1) The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to [s 5] produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. But if—

Production of additional evidence in Appellate Court.

(a) the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or

(b) the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined.

(2) Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced by an Appellate Court, the Court shall record the reason for its admission.

“Additional evidence”—There ought not to be a remand for the purpose of enabling a party to make out a fresh case. If cases were remanded for the purpose of allowing parties to improve their respective cases by calling further witnesses there would be no end of litigation (5) It is always dangerous to allow parties to make a new case and call fresh evidence upon an issue on which they have ruled upon the evidence originally adduced in support of it and more expressly so in the Mofussil Courts (6) The power given by this rule should be exercised sparingly except at the instance of the parties (7) and then with caution. An appellant, who has had ample opportunity of giving evidence in the Court below and elected not to do so, but to rest his case on the evidence as it stood, ought not to be allowed at the stage of appeal to give evidence which he could have given below (1) Ordinarily speaking it is only when a Court sees that from some inadvertence, mistake, or surprise a party has not adduced evidence which he was capable of adducing, and that he is likely to be prejudiced by the omission, that the Court should allow further evidence to be taken (2) The test as to whether additional evidence should be received depends on the question whether or not the Appellate Court requires the evidence 'to enable it to pronounce judgment' or for any other substantial cause, and as to this the Appellate Court is to be the sole judge (3) The word 'requires' means needs or finds needful. The legitimate occasion for this rule is when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence, and the application is made to import it. That is the subject of review of judgment (4) An application to admit fresh documents the genuineness of which can be tested with certainty, stands on a much more favourable footing than an application to admit fresh parol evidence after the pinch and pressure of the case has been sustained, (5) but they should not be admitted if the appellant cannot show sufficient cause, (6) or generally if having had an opportunity of tendering them in the Court below he omitted to do so, (7) or resisted their production, (8) or if they do not bear on the issues tried by the Court of first instance (9) Where the Appellate Court, with the assent of both sides, examines witnesses and also admits documentary evidence, and there is nothing to show that such admission was objected to, it is not open to any party on appeal to the Privy Council to take exception to the regularity of this procedure (10) As each case must depend on its own circumstances it is not profitable to deal in detail with the cases in which additional evidence has been allowed or refused (11) A local inquiry may be ordered under this rule (12) The improper reception of evidence under this rule is not sufficient to reverse a decision if, independently of that evidence, there is sufficient evidence on the record (1) It has been held that on an appeal against an order made under O XVII r 3, when the plaintiff was present, but his witnesses were not, and no application for adjournment or to enforce the attendance of the witnesses was made, the Appellate Court should proceed under this rule to direct the admission of fresh evidence, and under r 25 of this Order to refer the issues (which in fact had never been tried) for trial to the Court of first instance, directing that Court to return findings (2)

The power can be exercised even after the case has been remanded on special appeal (3) It is not necessary that the party before applying to the Appellate Court should have sought for a review of the original Court's judgment and asked it to receive the evidence (4) After a review has been admitted fresh evidence may be taken under this rule (5)

An appeal does not lie from an order admitting or refusing to admit additional evidence, (6) but both may be considered in an appeal from the final decree unless the appellant has taken advantage of the order and so cannot subsequently impugn it in appeal (7) Where the Subordinate Judge in appeal took evidence and the case was heard in second appeal, it was held that the fact of the Lower Appellate Court taking additional evidence did not make the special appeal liable to be heard as if it were a regular appeal (8) The rejection of an appeal under this rule gives no right of appeal to the Privy Council (9) This and the next rule are not it has been held, applicable to proceedings before Civil Courts under sect 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (10)

Record of reasons for admission.—These are strictly required (11) and should be stated in open Court in the presence of the parties (12) It is a salutary provision which operates as a check against a too easy reception of evidence at a late stage of litigation, and the statement of the reasons may inspire confidence and disarm objection (13) But such record of reasons is not a condition precedent to the reception of the evidence, so that the omission to do so would not render the evidence inadmissible (14)

 the ground that the Judge had neglected or misconceived his duty on this point the affidavits containing facts proving such an allegation ought to be perfectly clear and exhaustive, and should leave no doubt upon the subject excluding the possibility of the Judge having done that which it was his duty to do The judgment may be given at once But there are cases especially complicated cases, in which it is desirable that the Judge should have an opportunity of authorizes the Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties and judgment pronounced without hearing them is unauthorized by the Code. Thus where the appellant died before the hearing of the appeal, but his pleader did not know of his death until after the appeal had been decided, and an application of his son to the District Judge to have his name placed on the record, and the appeal reargued, was rejected, held by the High Court that as the representative of the plaintiff appellant applied within the prescribed time to have his name entered on the record, the Court was bound to enter his name, and in not doing so the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. As the judgment was pronounced without hearing him, it was unauthorized by the Code (1). It has been held that the senior pleader who is present before the Court has the entire control of a case in the High Court, and that it is not open to the junior pleader to take any ground of appeal which his senior has not thought fit to argue, except only when the senior has obtained the permission of the Court that that course should be taken (2).

Judgment of Appeal Court.—The duty of the Appellate Court is not to interfere with the judgment of the first Court until it is perfectly satisfied in its own mind that the conclusion arrived at by the first Court is erroneous. If there is any doubt in the case, the benefit of that doubt ought to be given to the respondent and not to the appellant, for it must be presumed in law that the judgment of the Lower Court is right until the contrary is shown. No doubt the Appellate Court may make further inquiries, but such inquiries ought to be made with discretion and only in those cases where the Appellate Court finds it unable to do justice to the parties on the evidence and material as they stand upon the record (3). The judgment therefore, of the first Court, if not shown to be erroneous, ought to be affirmed, and it is for the appellant to show manifest (4) errors in the decree appealed from (5). The Court of Appeal ought to give great weight, but not undue weight, to the opinion of the Judge who tried the cause and saw the witnesses and their demeanour. That gives him considerable advantages over those who only draw this information from perusing the notes. But still, though the Court of Appeal ought not lightly to find against the opinion of the Judge who tried the cause, that Court, if convinced that the inference in favour of the plaintiff ought not to have been drawn from the evidence, should find the verdict the other way (1). The parties to the cause are entitled, as well on questions of fact as on questions of law, to demand the decision of the Court of Appeal, and that Court cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence and drawing its own inferences and conclusions, though it should always bear in mind that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses and should make due allowance in this respect (2). "If we are to accept," says James, L J, "as final the decision of the Court of first instance in every case where there is a conflict of evidence, our labours would be very much lightened. But then, that would be in truth to do away with the right of appeal in all cases of nuisance, for there is never one brought into Court in which there is not contradictory evidence, and there have been, I am satisfied, a larger percentage of appeals in those cases than in any other" (3). And therefore the Judge of an Appellate Court ought to explain his own views instead of merely saying that he adopts those of the first Court (4). It has been said as regards the rule of the Privy Council not to disturb a judgment of a Court in India upon a question of the credibility of witnesses, unless it is manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence, that however necessary as regards a Court of Appeal far removed from India, it need not be extended as one equally necessary and applicable with the same strictness, to a Court of Appeal in India, which has the opportunity of calling witnesses and has all the advantages to be derived from a personal acquaintance with the people, their feelings, habits, and character as well as other local advantages (5).

The dismissal of an appeal under sect 551 (now r 11) by a Court whose decision may be the subject of an appeal, does not relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of this rule, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points, and the reasons for deciding them. Thus, where an Appellate Court's judgment was simply "Appeal rejected under sect 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure," held that declared, by the first Court to be unsatisfactory, Gopee Nath v Boohumant, 25 W R 26 (1875).

(5) Sarodasoondery v Timcowry Nundy, 1 Hyde, 223, 252 (1862) in which it was also held that a Court of Appeal cannot refer to evidence in another case. But see Hera Lal v Mohesh Chunder, 1 Hyde, 105 (1862), where it was held that the High Court sitting in the judgment was not in conformity with law and the case was remanded for disposing of the appeal according to law (1)

A Court of second appeal cannot enter into the merits of the appeal, in order to ascertain the weight of the evidence produced in support of the allegations of the parties. So it will insist upon having before it findings recorded in a judgment which strictly conforms to the imperative rule laid down in this rule. The rule here laid down cannot be too strictly enforced. A judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is, as such, worthless for the purposes contemplated by the law. Its imperative provisions apply alike to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place (2). As the High Court in second appeal is bound to accept the findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Court, it should insist upon a due obedience by those Courts of the mandate contained in this rule (3).

Under clause (42) of the Letters Patent the Judges of the High Court are bound to record the reasons for their decisions and these reasons should on appeal to England be transmitted with the record for information at the hearing by the Judicial Committee (4). These reasons should be stated publicly at the hearing and not reserved to influence the Court of Appeal (5). But it has been held to be doubtful whether the former section applied to cases where the High Court, having heard the judgment of the Court below and argument upon that judgment, came to the conclusion that it was right and agreed with the reasons which it gave (6).

It was held that on remand under sect. 566 of the last Code that sect. 567 required the lower Court of Appeal to proceed to determine the appeal. Sect. 571 required it to pronounce judgment and sect. 574 (this rule) was imperative as to what the judgment was to contain. The Appellate Court was required to give its own decision and the reasons for it upon the issues remanded to the original Court under sect. 566 (7). These provisions apply alike to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for the trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place (8). A Judge having remanded a case for further evidence to be taken and a fresh finding recorded on a question of fact is bound, though there is no memorandum of objection, to examine into the correctness of the finding and come to a conclusion whether he accepts it or not, unless its correctness has been admitted by the party to whom it is adverse (1) An appellant is fairly entitled to an expression of opinion of the Appellate Court on the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal (2) If, however, the Appellate Court is not asked to express any opinion on any particular ground of appeal stated in the memorandum of appeal, the Court is not at fault if no decision is passed upon it If, having had his attention called to it, a Judge fails to decide such point, the proper course for the parties aggrieved is to ask him to review his judgment In order to satisfy the High Court that a point which the Judge omitted to notice was actually taken in the oral pleadings, a party may put in either an affidavit of some person who heard the point raised or a copy of the petition to the Judge drawing attention to the omission with his order (3) Where this rule has not been complied with and action is required, the Court may either reverse the decree and remand the case for a fresh decision, (4) and this is generally done, or the Court may (it has been said), without reversing the decree, retain the case on appeal, but return the proceedings in order that the Lower Court may state its reasons (5) But though a decision may not be as clear as it might have been, if there are words to be found which substantially dispose of the case set up the Court may consider it unnecessary to remand for a clearer finding (6) It is, however, no objection that a judgment is short if it sufficiently appears that the evidence has been considered and the Court has given its opinion thereon (7) As to whether a Lower Court's omission to comply (8) with the terms of this rule can be considered a ground for second appeal see notes to sect 100, ante

Clause (a)—The necessity for this clause is obvious it being the foundation of those which follow The point or points on which the appeal has to be decided should be set down distinctly (9) And it is a convenient practice which keeps the decision on each point and the reasons therefor separate from the rest

Clause (b)—The judgment should clearly and fully dispose of all the points in issue between the parties by a distinct finding on each of them (10)

Sect 565 of the last Code was held to enable the Appellate Court in some cases to determine a question of fact upon the evidence then on the record, but not to declare a right in favour of one of the parties, where no issue had been framed on the point, and the right had not been set up in the Lower Court (1) The Judge should specifically decide each point or points raised and give his reasons. It is not sufficient to say that by confirming generally the order of the Lower Court it has therefore virtually tried and disposed of the particular point when no mention has been made by it (2) Where the Appellate Court does not sufficiently consider important matters, such as sufficiency of notice or a question of the nature of a tenure, its judgment will be set aside (3)

Clause (c) — Having stated the points for determination and the decision thereon, the Court must state its reasons therefor (4) The provisions of this rule are imperative, and require the Appellate Court to give its own decision and the reasons for it (5) and a judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is, as such, worthless for the purposes contemplated by the law (6) It is not, however, laid down in this rule that the judgment of the Appellate Court, any more than the judgment of the Court of the first instance, is to contain a review or setting forth of the whole of the evidence, and therefore it can hardly be assigned as an absolute error if a judgment is defective on this point. Although the law does not require a detailed examination of the evidence, yet the Judge does well who gives an intelligent and clear account of the evidence which he has had to consider, and states the reasons for which he thinks particular portions of the evidence to have been more or less worthy of consideration. The Judge of the Appellate Court who most fully gave his reasons for his judgment and most fully entered into the merits of the case before him would be held to have most efficiently and intelligently carried out the duties required of him (7) In certifying to the High Court the findings on issues sent back on remand the Lower Appellate Court in the absence of any distinct admission by the appellant's pleader that the finding of the first such case, reasons should be stated. But there may be cases in which the Court would not think it necessary to require them (1)

Clause (d)—When an Appellate Court, in a judgment which in some material matters differs from the conclusion of the first Court, upholds the decree of the first Court, it must specify in the decree the exact modifications which its conclusions have necessitated, as contemplated by this rule, (2) and when it reverses a decree it should state the relief which it considers the appellant entitled to (3)

32 The judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree from which the appeal direct is preferred, or, if the parties to the appeal agree is to the form which the decree in appeal shall take, or as to the order to be made in appeal, the Appellate Court may pass a decree or make an order accordingly

Judgment in appeal.—As to functions of the Appeal Court see notes to sect 96 and r 4 and the last rule of this Order (4). The powers conferred by this rule are powers which require that parties should be in accord with each other at the time when the decree is pronounced by the Appellate Court. The use of the word 'may' indicates discretion in a Court and does not force the Court to pass a decree in any manner which goes beyond the scope of its discretionary power. Thus where an application containing the terms of a compromise was presented to the High Court by one of the parties and the Solehnama was sent down to the Lower Court for verification but the attendance of the parties for that purpose could not be procured the High Court refused to pass a decree under sect 577 in accordance with the terms of the Solehnama (5)

33 The Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objections

Powers—This rule, which is taken from English O 58, r 4, is new, and has been inserted because (as the Select Committee said) it is most imperative that an Appellate Court should have the fullest power to do complete justice between the parties (1) It is applicable to all cases where an appeal is heard after this Code came into force (2) The latter part of the clause is explained by the illustration (3) It is open to the Appellate Court to vary the decree appealed against, either in points (if any) in which it is erroneous or in respect of supplemental matters which are admitted (4) It is entitled to take cognizance of events which have happened since the filing of the appeal (5) or, in other words, it is open to the Appellate Court to vary a decree under appeal, not only for error, but also on grounds which have come into existence since it was passed (6) The Courts, in the exercise of the powers conferred by this rule, should not lose sight of the other provisions of the Code, nor of the Court Fees Act, nor of the Limitation Act. In particular, it should bear in mind the case stated in the Illustration (7) R 22 of this Order shows that it is intended that (prima facie at least) a respondent should not be allowed to take exception to so much of a decree as was against him without complying with the provisions of the rule (8)

“May not have filed any appeal or objection”—See notes to rr 1 and 22 of this Order, as also notes to sect 96, ante

(4) The decree shall be signed and dated by the Judge or Judges who passed it :

Provided that where there are more Judges than one and there is a difference of opinion among them, it shall not be necessary for any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court to sign the decree.

Appellate decree.—The appellate decree is the first decree and the only decree capable of being executed after it has been passed, whether the same reverses, modifies, or confirms the decree of the Court from which the appeal was made (1) It is clear from the terms of this rule that in any case the decree to be executed, not only for the costs of the appeal, but for the costs of the suit, is the decree of the Appellate Court only The effect of the rule is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the Court below, even when the decree of the Appellate Court is one which merely affirms that decree below and does not reverse it or modify it The only decree that can be amended is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is the decree of the Appellate Court and not the decree of the Court below (2) If a decree is made in appeal so that the appellate decree becomes the one to be executed, time runs from its date and not from that of the original decree (3) When, however, an appellant withdraws an appeal, no decree is made The order of the Court does not come within the definition of the word "decree" The litigation commenced with the presentation of the appeal is merely discontinued, and the case remains as if the appeal had never taken place, and the decree appealed against becomes final, and time runs from the date of that decree (4) The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend an appellate decree is the Court of Appeal (5) When two parties to a suit appeal, so that the one appeal is but the cross appeal of the other, there ought to be only one final decree made between the two parties. Not only is there nothing to prevent, but it is the duty of the Court to make one decree, and only one decree, between the same parties (1). The date which the decree should bear is the date when the judgment was delivered (2).

"Relief granted," etc—A decree should be so drawn up as to need no interpretation other than may be gathered from the language of the decree itself, and there should be no need of reference to any document or paper whatsoever, unless such document or paper is attached to the decree and forms part of it. While, on the one hand, it is true that the decree should be drawn up in this manner, it is also just that litigants who have been successful should not be deprived of the fruits of their success owing to carelessness on the part of the Court or officer charged with the preparation of decrees. Thus where a decree, in its terms, is ambiguous, the Court executing the decree can refer to the pleadings in the suit in which the decree was passed to ascertain its precise meaning (3). Again, where the decree omits to reserve the rights of prior mortgages admitted by all the parties to the suit, it ought to be construed with reference to the admission contained in the pleading or made in the course of the case, and ought not to be so construed as to grant a larger measure of relief than is prayed for or to negative rights admitted by all parties (4). The decree of the Appellate Court should be drawn up in such a form as will show in itself the ultimate relief granted. If the Appellate Court decrees an additional amount and the decree is drawn up only mentions the amount decreed by the first Court, and the amount due to the decree holder is ascertainable from the decree of the first Court and the finding of the Lower Appellate Court, then he should obtain execution for the amount found in his favour and for his costs (5). This rule does not require the claim to be stated in the decree so as to make the statement a part of the decree itself (6).

Costs—It was held that the former section, when it provided that the decree of the Appellate Court should state by what parties and in what proportion the costs incurred in the appeal and the costs in the suit were to be paid, referred to the parties who were parties to the appeal, and not to parties who were not arrayed either as appellants or as respondents in the appeal, but who, under sect 541 of the former Code, might take the benefit of the decree (7). This section referred (as does also this rule) to cases where there are more parties than one made liable for costs, which necessitate the fixing by the Court of Appeal of the proportion in which the costs are to be paid (8).

It is the business of the Appellate Court finally determining a suit to decide by which of the parties before it the costs shall be borne, it is not at liberty to declare that the costs of the suit shall be borne by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be thereafter brought, because it might be that the suit will not be brought at all, and in that case there will be no execution, or the plaintiff and the defendant might be left to bear their own costs (1) Though the Judge must state by what parties (and in what proportions if necessary) the costs of the original suits are to be paid, he is not bound to go into particulars, or append to his judgment a schedule setting forth the different items which make up the costs of the first Court. He takes the amount of costs for granted and decides who is to pay them (2) Where the order of the Appellate Court awarded (a) all the costs of the appeal, amounting to a certain sum named (b) all the costs in the original Court, not naming any sum, and (c) the costs of the remand, and it was argued that the decree holders were only entitled to the sum of money specifically named in the High Court's decree for costs, and that they could not have the costs of the first Court, because the amount was not mentioned, nor the costs of the remand because such remand costs if they come in under any head at all would come under the head of costs of the appeal and that these had not been allowed beyond the sum fixed by the decree, it was held that the decree was perfectly clear as to what it meant to give and there was nothing in the law which made the order for costs bad simply because it did not specify the exact sum to be paid as costs of the Lower Court, that there was nothing to make it incumbent on a Court of Appeal to specify the amount of the costs incurred in the first Court. It had only to declare the proportion in which they were to be paid. As to the costs of the remand it was held that the decree declared that besides the costs of the appeal and the costs in the original Court the costs of the remand were to be paid, it did not matter whether those costs were included or not in the appeal costs (3) But though the law does not direct that a Court should annex to every decree the costs incurred by both parties, yet it is a convenient practice to do so (4) When an Appellate Court decrees an appeal and gives costs of its own Court the costs of the first Court should be included in the decree (5) When an appeal is dismissed on wholly different grounds from those relied on by the Court below the dismissal should be without costs (6)

36 Certified copies of the judgment and decree in appeal shall be furnished to the parties on application to the Appellate Court and at their expense

ORDER XLII.

Appeals from Appellate Decrees.

Procedure to appeals from appellate decrees.

Pauper Appeals.

1 1. Any person entitled to prefer an appeal, who is unable to pay the fee required for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable.

Who may appeal as pauper. Provided that the Court shall reject the application unless, upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust.

Procedure on application for admission of appeal.

2 The inquiry into the pauperism of the applicant may be made either by the Appellate Court or under the orders of the Appellate Court by the Court from whose decision the appeal is preferred:

Inquiry into pauperism.

Provided that, if the applicant was allowed to sue or appeal as a pauper in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, no further inquiry in respect of his pauperism shall be necessary, unless the Appellate Court sees cause to direct such inquiry.

Application—In the case of appeals the rule requires two separate documents to be presented—an application for leave to appeal as a pauper, and a memorandum of appeal. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. There are two separate documents and in this respect this case differs from a petition to sue as a pauper which includes both the plaint the allegations as to pauperism, and the prayer to sue as a pauper. In the latter case, when the pauper petition is rejected under O XXXIII r 7 the proceedings are at an end, and the Judge has no power to allow it to be stamped, as a plaint, r 15 of that Order providing the course open to the applicant viz to institute a suit in the ordinary manner. On the other hand, in proceedings under this rule, when the Judge refuses leave to appeal as a pauper, he effectually deals with the pauper application, but he does not necessarily deal with the memorandum of appeal which accompanies it. On his rejection of the application, there is nothing to prevent him from treating the memorandum as still a memorandum of appeal, if the appellant, on being refused leave to appeal as a pauper, desires, with the aid of borrowed funds or the assistance of friends, to continue the appeal. If O XXXIII r 15 applied to the memorandum of appeal, the result would in practice be that the appeal would be time barred when the application was refused. The result is that a Court is under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal if and when it refused leave to appeal as a pauper (1).

“Subject, in all matters”—A petition for leave to appeal as a pauper is presented together with a memorandum of appeal. It was held under the last Code that the presentation of the application itself was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXVI of that Code. But, after an application had been presented, all action taken subsequent to such presentation was by the terms of the section to be subject to the rules contained in that Chapter. Therefore sect 404 of that Code, which required, except in certain circumstances, that the application should be presented in person, did not apply (2). In any case, if sect 404 did apply an appeal presented on behalf of an exempted pauper by a vakil retained under an ordinary retainer and not authorized to sign as agent, was considered insufficiently presented (3). A petition presented by a duly authorized agent of an exempted person though not by an advocate, vakil, or attorney was properly presented (4). Although the Madras High Court held that the question of the presentation of an appeal was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXXVI of the former Code, the same Court determined that the question of the right to appeal under the section corresponding with r 1 of this Order was subject to such rules. Therefore, when at the time of the institution of the suit there was subsisting an agreement falling within the terms of sect 407 (d), now (O XXXIII r 5 cl (c)) no leave to appeal under r 1 could it was held be given to the plaintiff who by such agreement had allowed other persons to obtain an interest in the subject matter of the suit (1) The amendment now includes the presentation of the application, and has been made to avoid the conclusion at which the Madras High Court arrived in the decision cited

In Bil Nath Jagarnath 17 A 303 (1891) where an application to appeal as a pauper was rejected and a regular appeal on a proper stamp was subsequently presented, but after time it was held not to relate back to the time of the application on final pauper's. (1885) which fell Bhugabutti Koor v. Gunsh Dutt 21 W R 308 (1874). In Hararan Singh v. Muhammad Raza 4 A 31 (1881) also the High Court refused under s 622 to interfere with an order rejecting an application which was presented by a pleader. And Wazir un Nissat Habi Baksh 24 A 172 (1901) appears to assume that presentation in person is necessary except in the case of persons exempted. In re Narai, however, states several circumstances in favour of the rule in the text.

After presentation of the petition an inquiry as to pauperism is directed, and the application to appeal as a pauper is refused or granted (2) The application must be presented within thirty days from the date of the decree appealed against, and no extension can be allowed under sect 5 of the Limitation Act (3) The Code of 1839 directed (4) that the inquiry might be conducted either by the Appellate Court, or by the Court from whose decision the appeal was made under the orders of the Appellate Court, provided that if the applicant was allowed to sue in forma pauperis in the Court below no further inquiry was necessary unless the Appellate Court should see special cause to direct such inquiry, and these provisions have been reproduced in sect 593 of the last Code and r 2 of this Order

The proceedings are subject to the provisions mentioned only "in so far as those provisions are applicable" So if the appellant is found to be a pauper, and the appeal is admitted, he cannot be called in to give security for costs (5) It would render the section nugatory if the Judge could say that although the applicant was a pauper, and although there was just ground for appealing (for such a decision is required by the proviso), a condition shall be imposed which, in the case of a pauper, would render it impossible to go on with the appeal The question has already been discussed as to whether this rule is subject to O XXXIII r 3, and a memorandum of appeal to r 15 of that Order

Proviso to r 1—This is mandatory, being a necessary safeguard for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers, and the Courts should be careful to see that the proviso is satisfied It is to be noticed that the Court must come to its conclusion upon a perusal only of the application the judgment and decree This proviso is apt to be overlooked, but it would provide a safeguard against this if the Judge or Bench admitting a pauper appeal were to express and record very briefly the reasons for granting leave so that the Appellate Court may have an assurance that the leave was properly given (6)

Appeal.—The Code gives no appeal from an order refusing leave to appeal as a pauper (7) As regards appeal from orders of a single Judge rejecting

in application on the original side of the High Court, it was held that no appeal lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court made under this rule rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis (1) These decisions, however, proceeded on the ground that the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent is subject to the limitations on appeal presented by the Code (2) It is, however, now law, so far as the Calcutta and Madras High Courts are concerned, that the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Privy Council, (3) is that sect 588 (now 104) of the Code does not touch the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (4)

Respondents—The Code provides for pauper plaintiffs and appellants, but not for pauper defendants and respondents. Objections by a respondent to a decree under O XLI r 22 cannot be filed in forma pauperis. If a pauper desires to contest any part of the decree of the Court of first instance which is unfavourable to him, he should directly appeal as a pauper, and, as an appellant, claim the benefit of this section (5) The opinion has been expressed that the omission was unintentional, (6) but, on the other hand, it has been said that the reason why no exception is made in favour of a pauper respondent probably was that he already had the opportunity of directly making an appeal without expense for court fees, and that an inquiry into his pauperism at the last stage of the case would involve great delay and inconvenience (7) The omission now must be taken to be intentional, the Legislature considering that the exceptional liberty of moving a Court in forma pauperis should not extend to objections to appeals determined by a Division Bench of the High Court which in theory of law is a decision of the High Court. All that a Judge of the High Court can in most cases do after that is to assist the parties in bringing their appeal before the Privy Council. Of course, an Act of the Imperial Parliament or a provision of the Letters Patent issued in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or an order issued by His Majesty in Council might confer upon the High Court, or a Judge of that Court, not only power to admit or reject an appeal but might make the right to appeal dependent upon that admission or rejection. But if that has been done in any case whatever it is only in the cases in which the High Court has power to declare that the case is a fit one for appeal. The Courts in India have no power to admit or allow an appeal unless expressly authorized to do so by competent authority (1). The admission of an appeal to the Privy Council is not a matter as to which the High Court has any discretion provided that the requirements of the law are satisfied. All that the High Court has to do is to see that the requirements of sect 110 are satisfied. If they are an appeal lies under sect 103 is a matter of right. The application for a certificate that these requirements are satisfied is merely preliminary and ancillary to the admission of the appeal (2).

"Amount or value"—See notes to sect 110 ante

'Otherwise'—By sect 109 and this rule an appeal may be granted if the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal otherwise i.e. when not meeting the conditions of sect 110. That is clearly intended to meet special cases, such for example as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money though it may be of great public or private importance. To certify that a case is of that kind though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court is a judicial process which cannot be performed without special exercise of that discretion evinced by the fitting certificate. In the absence of the conditions required by the Code to give the right of appeal no certificate under this rule can be issued even with the assent of the other party (3). When the matter is under the appealable value there should be an application under this clause before the proper Court in India for a certificate (4).

"Notice on the opposite party"—If a respondent appears on a notice served of an intended application to have a petition of appeal to the Privy Council received but does not object his costs of that application will not

4 For the purposes of the pecuniary valuation, suits involving substantially the same questions for determination and decided by the same judgment may be consolidated but suits decided by separate judgments shall not be consolidated, notwithstanding that they involve substantially the same questions for determination

Consolidation—Where several suits (the amount involved in each suit was under Rs 10 000 but the aggregate amount claimed exceeded that amount) were brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendants in respect of the same property and involving the same question of law, and one judgment and decree was pronounced in all the suits by the first Court and the Lower Appellate Court pronounced a judgment and decree in the first suit and appeal only stating that the decree of the first suit governed the four other suits on appeal leave to appeal to the Privy Council in these suits was granted by the Privy Council upon the undertaking that the parties consented to abide by the decision of the Privy Council in the first appeal as governing the appeals in other cases (3) Where several suits involving the same issue were filed by different plaintiffs against the same defendants and where the Lower Court ordered with the consent of all parties, that all legal evidence to be taken in one action should be evidence in the several other actions and the decision in one case governed other cases and the appealable value in each case was below Rs 10 000 but the aggregate value of the suits was above that amount leave to appeal was granted on the ground that the appealable value involved indirectly in the claim was above Rs 10 000 (4) Leave was granted on the above mentioned ground in the following cases where three different plaintiffs claiming through the same original title to be the owners of a certain Mafid sued the same defendant in separate suits for possession and for the mesne profits of their respective shares (each suit being for less than Rs 10 000, but the aggregate value of the three suits amounted to more than that amount) and the defence raised was the same in all those cases and the cases were heard together, and the decree in one applying in principle to the other two suits, (1) as also where A and B purchased the same properties deriving title from different persons. The value of the properties with mesne profits was over Rs 10,000. B granted two patni leases of the properties to different persons, A was, therefore, obliged to bring two suits for the recovery of the properties and the value of the subject matter in each suit was less than Rs 10 000 (2). But where there were distinct causes, separate judgments given in each suit and the suits were not consolidated in Courts below, but were all along treated as separate and distinct actions such suits it was held could not be consolidated for the purpose of appeal to the Privy Council (3). These principles have been embodied in this rule, which is new. And it has been held under it that where the fundamental question is common to all the suits and the cases are tried together and decided by the same judgment, the suits will be consolidated for purposes of pecuniary valuation, even though a substantial question of law arises in some of the suits and not in others (4).

When an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is made in more than one suit which have not been consolidated though the points to be decided are the same in all of them, it must be shown that in each of the suits the amount or value of the matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council is Rs 10 000 or upwards (5). But in a recent case a large number of suits for recovery of possession of distinct parcels of land were tried together dealt with in one judgment, and were decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, of these some were for sums over Rs 10 000 and leave to appeal was granted, of the remaining cases, each taken separately, the value was below Rs 10 000 yet if taken collectively the aggregate reached that amount and all the cases were dependant on the same judgment, leave to appeal was granted in the suits where the value of the subject of each suit was below Rs 10 000 (6).

5. In the event of any dispute arising between the parties as to the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, or as to the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Court to which a petition for a certificate is made under rule 2 may, if it thinks fit, refer such dispute for report to the Court of first instance, which last mentioned Court shall proceed to determine such amount or value and shall return its report together with the evidence to the Court by which the reference was made

The certificate and not the order for the certificate is the document which their Lordships are bound to consider and act upon, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify the leave, their Lordships will hold that leave has not been properly given. Thus where the order for the certificate was "Let certificate issue, that the case is fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council," but the certificate stated "The Court, having had before it an application for leave to appeal to Her Imperial Majesty the Queen in Her Privy Council presented on behalf of the appellant aforesaid, it is certified that though the valuation of the case is below Rs 10,000, yet as regards the value and nature of the case it fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (Act XIV of 1882)," held that the leave was granted without jurisdiction. Valuation is an essential part of the requirements under that section, and when the valuation of the case is below the amount mentioned in that section, leave cannot be granted under that section. An erroneous certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sect 110 is ineffectual even if assented to by the respondent. In cases below Rs 10,000, there must be a special certificate that the case is "otherwise" fit for appeal (3) under sect 109 (c) and r 3. Where in the petition for leave to appeal the prayer was that a certificate might be granted that, as regards value and nature, the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110), but the order on it was "Let a certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council, and let the usual notices be issued" held by the Privy Council that the leave was given pursuant to sect 595 (c) (now sect 109 (c)) and the latter alternative of sect 600 (now r 3), and was properly given (4). When the petition for leave stated "the appeal involved some substantial questions of law and the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596, and was a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council," and the order was "we think on the whole that this is a case in which a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council ought to be granted," held that the certificate was properly given (5). But where the certificate was "certified that the above case fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110) as regards value and nature inasmuch as the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was upwards of Rs 10,000 and the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council also exceeds that amount

An erroneous certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sect 110 is ineffectual even if assented to by the respondent. In cases below Rs 10 000 there must be a special certificate that the case is "otherwise" fit for appeal (3) under sect 109 (c) and r 3. Where in the petition for leave to appeal the prayer was that a certificate might be granted that, as regards value and nature, the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110), but the order on it was "Let a certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council and let the usual notices be issued held by the Privy Council that the leave was given pursuant to sect 596 (c) (now sect 109 (c)) and the latter alternative of sect 600 (now r 3) and was properly given (4). When the petition for leave stated "the appeal involved some substantial questions of law and the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596, and was a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council" and the order was "I think on the whole that this is a case in which a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council ought to be granted," held that the certificate was properly given (5). But where the certificate was "certified that the above case fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110) as regards value and nature inasmuch as the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was upwards of Rs 10 000 and the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council also exceeds that amount could not, it was held, be made before the High Court, but the Judicial Committee might deal with the question when the whole case was before them (1)

For the rule as to transmission of evidence and other documents, see clause 42 of the Charter. The Charters of the High Courts expressly require that the reasons of their decisions should be recorded by the Judges and transmitted for the information of the Privy Council with the records (2). All costs and expenses unnecessarily occasioned by the inclusion in the transcript sent from India of matters improperly introduced therein will be disallowed (3). All petitions and applications connected with appeals to His Majesty in Council except Mooltarnamas should be drawn up in the English language. Security bonds are not made a part of the proceedings transmitted to England, and so need not be drawn up in that language (4). Where an appeal to the Privy Council has been admitted against a regular decree made in appeal such proceedings as applications for review of the judgment and the order of the Court should not form part of the transcript, and should not be sent to England with the record of the original appeal to the Privy Council (5). Nor will the appellant be allowed to refer to or read as evidence in the appeal to the Privy Council the documents tendered to the Court on the application for the review of judgment as the order refusing such application has not been appealed from (6). Where the Court of first instance framed and decided several issues, and the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result of the suit, only so much of the original records as properly bore upon and might be natural for the decisions of the questions of law, decided by the High Court and the subject of the appeal, should, it was held, be printed and transmitted (7).

9 At any time before the admission of the appeal, the Court may, upon cause shown, revoke the acceptance of any such security, and make further directions thereon.

10 Where at any time after the admission of an appeal but before the transmission of the copy of the record, except as aforesaid, to His Majesty in Council, such security appears inadequate,

13. (1) Notwithstanding the grant of a certificate for the admission of any appeal the decree appealed from shall be unconditionally executed unless the Court otherwise directs

(2) The Court may, if it thinks fit, on special cause shown by any party interested in the suit or otherwise appearing to the Court,—

- (a) impound any moveable property in dispute or any part thereof or
- (b) allow the decree appealed from to be executed taking such security from the respondent as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal, or
- (c) stay the execution of the decree appealed from taking such security from the appellant as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of the decree appealed from, or of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal or
- (d) place any party seeking the assistance of the Court under such conditions or give such other direction respecting the subject-matter of the appeal, as it thinks fit, by the appointment of a Receiver or otherwise.

"The grant of a certificate"—It was evident from the express terms of sect 608 of the last Code that the intention of the Legislature was to confer on the High Court the powers therein indicated only in the event of the appeal having been already admitted. The Calcutta High Court accordingly uniformly refused to grant any application under that section before an appeal was finally admitted (1). But the Bombay High Court held that it could order stay of execution of its decree when only the necessary petition for admission had been presented, but that petition had not come before the Court and the appeal had not been declared admitted (2). Under the section as it now stands, the application may be made before the appeal is finally admitted under r 8. It was formerly doubted whether the High Court could act under this rule where the appeal had not been certified by itself, but special leave had been granted by the Privy Council (3). But it has now been held by the Privy Council that the High Court has power to stay execution in such a case (4). The Calcutta High Court has held that it has no power to stay proceedings in a suit following a preliminary decree for partition against which it has granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and that the latter alone can do so since it has seisin of the appeal (5).

Preservation of property pending appeal—The principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is that the successful party in the litigation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not obtain merely a barren success (6). Property may be thus preserved either by taking possession of it when moveable, under clause (a), taking security for its restitution under clause (b), by stay of execution under clause (c), or by making such other order as may be necessary (and as to this the Court is given a complete discretion) under clause (d).

"Taking such security," clause (b)—The object of security being taken from the holder of a decree from which an appeal has been preferred to the Privy Council is to indemnify the appellant for any loss he may suffer owing to the execution being taken out by the decree holder during the pendency of the appeal in the Privy Council. It is therefore only on the execution of the decree that the surety becomes liable. If the decree holder, after applying for execution of the decree, does not take any further steps for execution, and the decree remains unexecuted, the terms of the security bond falls to the ground, and the surety cannot in any way be made liable for costs or anything else awarded by the High Court (1) The Court may require security although possession of the property in dispute has been already obtained without the giving of security (2) Security to the extent of the whole sum decreed need not always be taken from the decree holder When security is taken for less than the full amount decreed, the decree holder should be restrained from issuing process of execution with a view to realizing any sum in excess of the amount for which security is given (3) The ordinary practice is that calculation is made for an amount sufficient to meet the mesne profits which are to go to the hands of the decree holder from the date of his obtaining possession to the probable date of the eventual execution of the decree of the Privy Council That period is generally taken to be three years (4) A Hindu widow's interest in her husband's estate has been refused as such security (5) Judges in reporting upon the securities, should state particulars of the documents which have been produced and proved before them and upon which the title of the surety appears to be made out but they need not transmit to the High Court the documents produced before them (6) The High Court under whose directions security has been taken can release a surety, a District Judge has no right to do so (7) A judgment debtor pending an appeal to the Privy Council, having been ordered by the High Court to furnish security within two months, put in a petition in the District Court on the last day allowed by the order, tendering a dur purn mehal as security and on the following day gave an unregistered security bond which was rejected by the Judge on the grounds that the bond was unregistered and 'there being no guarantee that the property pledged will turn out available Held that the bond offered as security was not required to be registered until the security had been accepted and before rejecting it the Judge should direct an investigation into the sufficiency or otherwise of the property tendered (8) In the case cited it was held that the provisions of the Contract Act relating to revocation of a surety were inapplicable to a person who had stood as a surety under this rule because there was no personal guarantee given by him (9)

Stay of execution, clause (c)—See ante 'Preservation of property pending appeal' After the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council, with leave granted by a High Court application for stay of execution of a decree pending an appeal to His Majesty in Council ought always to be made in the first instance at any rate to the Court in India which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the particular case and his knowledge of details which the Privy Council cannot possess on an interlocutory application. Where, on an application, the High Court made an order "that execution be stayed for three months from this date so as to give the defendants an opportunity to apply to the Privy Council for stay of execution," the Judicial Committee held that the application should have been made to the Court in India, but acting upon the suggestion of the High Court, their Lordships recommended stay of execution on terms (1). The Privy Council stated that they could not stay execution, but where special leave was given they have advised it (2). But where, after the declaration that an appeal has been admitted, an application for stay of execution was rejected (the Judges hearing the application differing in their opinion, and the adverse judgment of the Senior Judge prevailing) on a petition for special leave to appeal, the Judicial Committee, being of opinion that as the two judges in the High Court had differed in opinion, the discretion of the High Court had not in fact been exercised, made an order for stay of execution (3). And where the High Court refused to make an order for want of jurisdiction in an appeal not certified by itself, the Judicial Committee advised the grant of an order of stay (4). The under-mentioned case dealt with the procedure to be followed, where there was an order of Court to stay the execution of a decree obtained by a party who had appealed to the Privy Council from another decree against himself if the holder of the decree which was appealed against attempted to execute it (5). Where a judgment debtor who has appealed to the Privy Council obtained a rule nisi from the High Court suspending execution until security was given, which was subsequently made absolute, it was held not to operate against the decree holder in the matter of time, limitation not running against him until the result of the appeal was known, or the rule otherwise fell to the ground (6). An application for staying execution for costs pending an appeal is not granted as a matter of course unless evidence be adduced to show that the respondent to the appeal will be unable to repay the amount levied by execution, if the appellant be successful, such an application is in England not granted (7).

"Such other direction," clause (d) — The words "by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise" have been added, thus authorizing the High Courts in India to grant such relief when necessary. This provision as well as the others would appear to apply to appeals certified by the High Court itself, when a certificate was refused, but special leave was granted by the Judicial Committee. The latter said that it was impracticable that they should directly interfere to continue the manager or to appoint a receiver. "Interference has been effected in cases where the Courts in India had jurisdiction over the subject matter, and an intimation to them would be effective, or where, the appellant being in possession, a stay of proceedings would keep the position of things intact. Where the High Court had no jurisdiction it could not be directed to act, but their Lordships ordered a stay of proceedings (1). The High Court can, it would seem, make an order for restitution under this clause as to that part of the decree which has been executed (2).

14. (1) Where at any time during the pendency of the appeal the security furnished by either party appears inadequate, the Court may, on the application of the other party, require further security.

(2) In default of such further security being furnished as required by the Court,—

(a) if the original security was furnished by the appellant, the Court may, on the application of the respondent, execute the decree appealed from as if the appellant had furnished no such security,

(b) if the original security was furnished by the respondent, the Court shall, so far as may be practicable, stay the further execution of the decree, and restore the parties to the position in which they respectively were when the security which appears inadequate was furnished, or give such direction respecting the subject matter of the appeal as it thinks fit.

15. (1) Whoever desires to obtain execution of any order of His Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree passed or order made in appeal and sought to be executed, to the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was preferred.

(2) Such Court shall transmit the order of His Majesty in Council to the Court which passed the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as His Majesty in Council by such order may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the execution of the same, and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall execute it accordingly, in the manner and according to the provisions applicable to the execution of its original decrees.

the amount is realized or paid or execution taken out, and not the year in which the decree was passed. Oldfield, J., said in that case "the rate of exchange being fixed yearly by the Secretary of State for India in Council, the rate of exchange on the date of the application for execution was the proper rate of exchange the decree-holders were entitled to." But this ruling was dissented from by the Calcutta High Court, and it was held (1) that the words "for the time being" have reference only to the time at which the order of the Privy Council was passed. This case has been followed in several other cases in Calcutta, (2) and the matter is now settled by the adoption of the rulings of the Calcutta High Court.

Costs—The costs assessed in England are only the costs incurred before the Privy Council, and do not include the costs of translation, etc., incurred in India (3). In almost all the appeals which go to the Privy Council there are costs incurred here for translating and preparing the record for transmission to England, and it has never been the practice of the Privy Council to make any order in specific terms as to these costs, and that whenever a specific sum is allowed by the Privy Council as costs of appeal, that is considered to cover the costs of appeal in England only, and it has always been assumed that an order drawn in this form covers the costs in India though they are not mentioned (4). When the Privy Council decrees not only a certain specified sum as the costs of the appeal in England, but also awards the costs incurred in the Courts in India, the decree-holder is entitled to the costs for translating the record of the appeal and for transmitting it to England (5). Where only one defendant appeals successfully to the Privy Council and obtains his costs, his co-defendants who did not appeal are not entitled to their costs (6). If costs are occasioned by the introduction of unnecessary and irrelevant matter into the record, they will be disallowed by the Privy Council (7). Where an order of the Judicial Committee is silent as to interest upon the costs decreed, the Judge of the lower Court which has to execute the decree has no power to direct payment of those costs with interest (8). Where the decree of the first Court, confirmed by the Privy Council, allowed interest on costs incurred, the decree holder was held entitled to interest on the costs incurred on account of translation and printing, because the Privy Council had adopted the decree of the local Court and made it a dominant decree as regards costs in all Courts. The effect of that decree is that the Privy Council decree became a decree for costs and interest expressly. But if no provision for interest on the specific sum mentioned, as costs in the Privy Council, is made in the order of the Privy Council, then no interest will be allowed on that sum (1). On the other hand, if the decree of the Privy Council and the decree of the local Court, confirmed by the Privy Council, are silent on the question of interest, no interest will be allowed (2). Where a decree of the Privy Council gives interest, but does not clearly specify the rate, the Court should ascertain if possible, from other parts of the decree itself, or from other documents which may be read in conjunction with the decree, what rate was intended to be given (3). When an appeal to the Privy Council was allowed by the High Court in a suit instituted by a Hindu widow as the guardian of her husband's adopted son, then a minor, but who on attaining majority petitioned for the withdrawal of the appeal, this petition also referred to the Judicial Committee, and on the petition of the respondent the appeal was dismissed by the Privy Council, the costs incurred by the widow being ordered to be recouped from the adopted son's estate (4). If a suit is dismissed on a preliminary point in the Court of the first instance, and this decree is confirmed by the Appellate Court in India, but set aside by the Privy Council, and the case is remanded for the trial of the suit, a refund of the costs which have been taxed and paid under the reversed decrees may be ordered by the Court of first instance, on motion (5). The third and fourth paragraphs of the former section as to the execution of a decree for costs against a surety have been omitted. The Legislature by Act VII of 1888 made express provision with regard to matter coming under sects 549, 610 of the former Code by declaring that the liabilities of a surety for costs might be enforced in execution of a decree of the particular Court in the same manner as if he were a party to the appeal, but the Calcutta High Court held that a security bond given by a third party for the due performance of the decree of the Appellate Court under sect 516 of the last Code could not be enforced in execution of that decree (6). The matter is now regulated by sect 145, ante. See notes thereto. A surety is not precluded from questioning to belong to the mosque, (1) or to an order fining a pleader (2) The proceeding in which the reference is made must be one in which there may be a decree, (3) and in which such decree, when passed, is final (4) For in appealable cases a remedy to correct possible error is provided by the appeal The question must be one of law, and the Court cannot make a reference on a point merely on the application of the parties unless it entertains a reasonable doubt upon the matter, (5) nor on a point on which a Division Bench of the High Court has expressed an opinion (6) A Judge cannot ordinarily entertain a reasonable doubt on a point clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court of his Presidency, unless the authority of the decision can be questioned by virtue of anything said or decided in the Privy Council (7) In r 1 the words "or the construction of a document which construction may affect the merits" have been omitted as they are sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law The alterations in r 2 are verbal only It has been held that a Collector hearing an application under sect 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdar's Court Act, 1906, has no power to make a reference to the High Court, not being a Court trying a suit or appeal or executing a decree (8)

Presidency Small Cause Courts—Sect 69 of Act XV of 1882 provides for a compulsory reference where the Judges differ in opinion as to any question of law or construction of a document affecting the merits, and also where, in suits exceeding Rs 500 in amount or value, any such question arises upon which the Court entertains reasonable doubt, and either party so requires (9) The provisions of rr 3-5, so far as they are applicable, are deemed to apply as if such reference had been made under the present rules It was formerly said (10) not to be an easy matter to make sect 69 dovetail with the present rules, and divergent views (11) were entertained upon the question whether sect. 6J was controlled by them. It is now unnecessary to further consider the matter, as by Act IV of 1906 the Presidency Small Court Act was amended with a view to remove the difficulties which had been experienced.

3. The High Court, after hearing the parties if they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment, under the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which the reference was made; and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court.

Judgment of High Court to be transmitted, and case disposed of accordingly.

"After hearing the parties."—The rule has here been altered, as the language of the former section might, if strictly interpreted, require a hearing of the parties even though they had not appeared.

"Dispose of the case."—The word "case" in the last part of the rule refers to "the case" in the first part showing that what is intended is the suit and not the subject of the reference (1). Where the Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs, but contingent on the opinion of the High Court, and on the reference the latter decided that upon the plaint before the Court the plaintiffs could not recover, it was held that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn, but on receipt of the copy of the judgment of the High Court was bound to enter judgment for the defendants. Had the case been referred in an intermediate stage, the final judgment being withheld until the decision on the point referred to the High Court, the Small Cause Court would then have been in possession of the case, but having pronounced judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court which opinion was against that judgment, there was only one course to take (2).

Review.—The judgment passed by the High Court is not a decree or order within clause (b) of O XLVII r 1 but simply a statement of the grounds in conformity with which the Subordinate Judge is to dispose of the case as provided by this rule (3). A review is expressly given by that order and rule in the case of a judgment on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, but not one from a Subordinate Judge exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court (4).

4. The costs (if any) consequent on a reference for the decision of the High Court shall be costs in the case.

Costs of reference to High Court.

Costs.—Costs "in the case" means costs of the suit or appeal, as in r 1, this rule being the one under which the costs are dealt with, and the costs being made costs in this case.(1) Under this rule the costs of a reference cannot be dealt with separately, but must be dealt with when awarding the costs of the suit. They are, however, in the discretion of the Court, and need not necessarily follow the event of the suit.(2)

5. Where a case is referred to the High Court under rule 1, the High Court may return the case for amendment, and may alter, cancel or set aside any decree or order which the Court making the reference has passed or made in the case out of which the reference arose, and make such order as it thinks fit.

"Amendment."—The case may be returned for amendment, as in the decision noted below.(3)

6. (1) Where at any time before judgment a Court in which a suit has been instituted doubts whether the suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or is not so cognizable, it may submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for the doubt as to the nature of the suit.

(2) On receiving the record and statement, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the suit or to return the plaint for presentation to such other Court as it may in its order declare to be competent to take cognizance of the suit.

7. (1) Where it appears to a District Court that a Court subordinate thereto has, by reason of erroneously holding a suit to be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or not to be so cognizable, failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or exercised a jurisdiction not so vested, the District Court may, and if required by a party shall, submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous.

(2) On receiving the record and statement the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

(3) With respect to any proceedings subsequent to decree in any case submitted to the High Court under this rule, the High Court may make such order as in the circumstances appears to it to be just and proper.

(4) A Court subordinate to a District Court shall comply with any requisition which the District Court may make for any record or information for the purposes of this rule.

Power to refer.—Act VII of 1888, sect 60 Rule 6 applies only to a case before judgment (1)

Submission for revision—It has been held by the Madras (2) and Calcutta (3) High Courts that the Judge is bound to make a reference if one of the parties requires him to do so. The Allahabad Court has, however, held that the word “shall” in the former section was not mandatory but directory, and that before a District Court could make a reference under it, it must be of opinion that the Subordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it, and that therefore the matter was one in which the interference of the High Court should be sought (4). When a reference is made to the High Court under r 7, the Court which makes it should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the Subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous (5). Notwithstanding sect 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court has, on a case being submitted to it under this rule, full power to consider the matter of jurisdiction or to deal with it on the merits, so as to do substantial justice without putting the parties to the expense of a fresh trial. Where a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court was tried both in the Munsif's and District Judge's Court without objection to the jurisdiction, held, on a second appeal to the High Court that the former section must be read with sect 19 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act so as to modify its full effect in a case wrongly tried by an ordinary Civil Court and taken in appeal to the District Court both parties having submitted to the jurisdiction it was not competent to either of them on second appeal to plead the want of jurisdiction so as to render the proceedings taken in the suit void (6). In a suit for damages on account of use and occupation of land brought in a Court of Small Causes exception was taken to the plaintiff's title. The plaint was returned by the Judge under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), for presentation in the ordinary Civil Court and it having been presented to the Munsif, who tried the suit and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decree, holding that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit. Held that under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the order of the Small Cause Court Judge was regularly made and the Munsif had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the plaint. Scoble

It is doubtful whether the Appellate Court would have been right in dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction, even supposing that the order made under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act had not expressly conferred jurisdiction upon the Munsif (1) This rule does not apply to every case in which a Court of Small Causes has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, but only to a restricted number of such cases, namely, those cases in which a Court of Small Causes has erroneously held a suit to be, or not to be, cognizable by it Where no question as to the Court's jurisdiction was raised by either party, and the Court of Small Causes proceeded to judgment as if the case was properly cognizable by it, the High Court refused to interfere upon a reference made by the District Judge purporting to be made under the former section (2) The rule is an enabling one, and does not cut down the jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal (3)

ORDER XLVII.

Review.

1. (1) Any person considering himself aggrieved—

Application for review of judgment.

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred,

(b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is hereby allowed, or

(c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small

and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order.

(2) A party who is not appealing from a decree or order may apply for a review of judgment notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal by some other party except where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the appellant, or when, being respondent, he can present to the Appellate Court the case on which he applies for the review.

Application for review of judgment—This rule corresponds with sect 376 of Act VIII of 1859. That section was modified by sect 623 of Act X of 1877, by which Act the sub clauses (a), (b), and (c) were substituted for “by a decree of a Court of original jurisdiction from which no appeal shall have been preferred to a Supreme Court, or by a decree of a District Court in appeal from which no appeal shall have been admitted by the Sudder Court, or by a decree of the Sudder Court from which either no appeal may have been preferred to Her Majesty in Council, or an appeal having been preferred no proceedings in the suit have been transmitted to Her Majesty in Council,” the words “and important” “after the exercise of due diligence,” “or order made or an account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record,” “or order made” and the second clause were added, and "produced" substituted for "adduced," "any other sufficient reason" for "any other good and sufficient reason," "desires to obtain" for "may be desirous of obtaining," "decree passed" for "judgment passed," and "review of judgment to the Court" for "review of judgment by the Court" The present Code substitutes "decision" for "judgment" in sub clause (c), adds the words "or order" in the second clause and omits the words "hereby" before "allowed" in clause (a), and "or to the Court, if any, to which the business of the former Court has been transferred," which had been added at the end of the first clause by Act X of 1877 See sect 114, ante

No Court has the power of setting aside an order which has been properly made, unless it is given by statute (1) The High Court has no power to amend its own decree except under the provisions of sect 206 (now sect 152) or sect 114 or this rule, (2) and inferior Courts in the Mofussil have no jurisdiction to review their own judgments except under the circumstances and with the limitations set forth in this Code (3) A Court for the relief of insolvent debtors has jurisdiction to review its own orders, (4) so had a Provincial S C Court (5) The former section did not apply to proceedings before the Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) (6) but he had power to review an ex parte order made by him, (7) nor was it affected by sect 42 of the Lower Burma Courts Act 1900 It was held that the former section did not admit of an application that a case be reinstated where, the suit having been dismissed under sect 98 (now O IX r 3) for non appearance of the parties the plaintiff had by his own negligence allowed his rights under sect 99 (now O IX r 4) to be barred, (8) but where a suit had been dismissed under sect 102 (now O IX r 8) and no application had been made under sect 103 (now O IX r 9), an application for review was held admissible (9) It has been held that an application for review is not a suit within the meaning of sect 13 of the last Code (now represented by sect 11) and therefore cannot operate as constructive res judicata (10)

The section was held to include an order in execution of a decree, (11) such as one dismissing an execution case, (12) even after satisfaction of the decree, the decree holder could re open the matter under sect 244 (now sect 17) and sect 623 (r 1), on the ground that he had acted under a mistake of calculation in fixing the amount that was due, (13) as also an order disallowing a r 13) (1) When an appeal has been dismissed under sect 551 (now O XLI 1 11), the Lower Court has no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree, that decree having merged in the decree of the Appellate Court (2) The Code of 1859 only referred to review of decrees, but where a Judge had reviewed an order passed confirming a sale in execution of a decree, the Privy Council did not treat that review as a nullity, but dealt with the case on its merits (3)

Clause (a).—The admission of a special appeal debarred a review, even though the person applying did not prefer the appeal, (4) likewise if the special appeal has been tried and disposed of (5) In such a case the Lower Court could not review so as to modify the substance of its decree, but it might for the purpose of correcting a clerical error; (6) but if a review be applied for in proper time and before an appeal has been preferred, the Judge was held not prevented from proceeding upon the application for review by the subsequent presentation of an application to appeal to the Privy Council, and he had full power and was bound to proceed under the application for review, (7) but in that case the application for leave to appeal had not been granted, and the Madras High Court formerly held that the preferring of an appeal subsequent to the application for review, stays the review proceedings (8) But the Allahabad High Court apparently hold a contrary opinion, for there an order passed on review, purporting merely to amend the original decree, was held to amount to a new decree superseding the original decree, and an appeal filed pending review could not be heard as the decree under appeal had ceased to exist (9) A full Bench of the Madras High Court has now held that the review proceedings are not stayed by the preferring of an appeal (10) An applicant may withdraw his appeal and apply for a review, (11) as by the cancellation of the order for admission of the appeal it may be taken that no appeal had been admitted or preferred, but not where the appeal instead of being withdrawn is actually dismissed (12)

Clause (c).—This does not include a judgment on a reference from a Subordinate Judge exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court (13) The Madras

(13) Lal Pandit v State, 10 B 15 (1858)

High Court has held that sect 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is merely directory and not mandatory (1) but the Calcutta High Court has held the contrary (2)

'Discovery of new and important matter or evidence'—though review is allowed on this ground the Privy Council have recently pointed out that the Code exacts strict conditions so as to prevent litigants lying on their oars when they ought to be looking for evidence (3) It must be shown that it is prima facie evidence in the cause (4) The new evidence must be clear and conclusive (5) It need not be sufficient per se to show that the previous decision was wrong or be such as to cause an overpowering balance of evidence in favour of the applicant (6) But the discovery of evidence not originally available tending to prove that a decree had been obtained by perjury is ground for an application for review (7) A judgment on special appeal cannot be reviewed merely on the ground that new evidence to prove a fact had been discovered (8) inasmuch as it would have been inadmissible to impeach the decree on the hearing of the special appeal itself, (9) though it might be good ground for an application for review to the Lower Court (10)

There has been a conflict of decisions as to whether a new and authoritative exposition of the law is or is not new and important matter justifying the granting of a review. On the one hand it has been held that the publication of a decision subsequent to the case sought to be reviewed being decided was ground for a review (11) that where a review was sought on the strength of a Full Bench decision it should have been made within ninety days of that decision (12) and that where a review had been properly granted the case should be governed by any new exposition of the law laid down since the date of the original decision (13) also that the decision of the Privy Council in an appeal is new and important matter for the purposes of an application for review in respect of a decree made on a subsequent accrual of the same cause of action as that on which the decree appealed against was based (14) On the other hand it has been held that a subsequent Full Bench case overruling the authority on which the judgment sought to be reviewed had been based, (1) or the discovery of a fresh authority, (2) were not grounds for granting an application for review. In the last cited case it was, however, held that when a Court is satisfied that its judgment had proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law this rule allows a review. A new exposition of the law is, however, not a just and reasonable cause for not having applied for a review within the time prescribed for such application (3).

"After the exercise of due diligence"—This is the effect of the decisions in the cases cited (4) in the second of which it was held that although the petitioner stated he did not know of the existence of the evidence at the time the suit was tried, it by no means followed that he ought not to have known of it, and that if he had made due search he might not have discovered it.

"Could not be produced"—This must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court before it grants an application for review, (5) but an application for review having been admitted on other grounds, fresh evidence may be received, though no reason has been assigned for its non production at the original trial (6).

"At the time when the decree was passed"—This rule does not authorize the review of a decree which was right when made, on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event (7).

"Mistake or error"—If the mistake or error is on the face of the judgment, or if it is shown that the decision has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the law, (8) or if the error be on the face of the record, (9) or on the face of the judgment or the decree, it is clear that it is irregular and incorrect or not in compliance with the provisions of the law, a review lies (10). The absence of a formal finding on an issue tried and decided by a High Court is not an error calling for review of judgment (11).

"Any other sufficient reason."—Whilst an error on a point of law is a ground for review, (12) the reason is not confined to either positive error in law where the point was raised for the first time in delivering judgment; (1) or the Judge had made an error in calculation; (2) or had based his decision on a decree which was subsequently set aside on appeal. A decree against a minor properly represented in the suit cannot be reopened on review by the minor on attaining majority, on the ground that the decree did not reserve an opportunity to him to show cause against it on attaining majority, (7) but otherwise where the Court passing the decree in terms of a compromise against a minor did not inquire into the circumstances which led to the filing of the petition of compromise nor granted any leave to compromise under sect. 462 (now O. XXXII. r. 7). (8) Where, however, he seeks to set aside a decree on the ground that the compromise made by his guardian and on which the decree was based was fraudulent, his remedy was formerly held to be by suit and not by way of review. (9) But by a later decision it was held that fraud practised upon a party in connection with a petition of compromise was a good ground for reviewing the decree made thereon. (10) A mistake in copying out a petition of compromise may not itself be a good ground for review, but coupled with an allegation of fraud it is. (11)

A review has been refused to be allowed on the ground that if the facts had been better or more fully placed before the Court the decision would have been different, (12) even coupled with the fact that there was a subsequent decision of the Privy Council on the point, the petition being seven years after the decision sought to be reviewed; (13) or merely to supply defects on the part of pleaders in their conduct of appeals; (14) or to enable the Court to reconsider its judgment on the same evidence; (15) or on the ground that the Court improperly neglected to examine a witness, if the objection was not taken when the case was heard by the Court of Appeal; (16) or that the Court's decision is contrary to the weight of evidence (1) The Privy Council has, however, held that the decision in the last mentioned case does not limit the discretion of the Court in saying what reason is good and sufficient or what may be so far requisite to the ends of justice as to support an application for review (2) That the Appeal Court's decision was based on a ground first raised in appeal was held no reason for granting a review (3) And grounds which virtually disclose reasons for an appeal from a decision cannot, it has been said be the bases of a review (4) It has also been held that a point raised on appeal but abandoned in argument cannot ordinarily be a ground for review, (5) and that the fact that one Divisional Bench of the High Court has decided a point at variance with the decision of another Divisional Bench is not such a ground (6)

"May apply"—The proceedings taken to obtain a review pass through three stages. In the first place the party applies for a rule, which application is either granted or rejected. This is the first stage. If the rule is granted the other side shows cause upon which the rule is made absolute or discharged. This is the second stage. The last stage is where if the rule is made absolute, the case is directed to be reheard and an order or decree passed upon such hearing. The application should if possible be to the Judge who passed the decree or order sought to be reviewed, or as the Privy Council has put it — 'We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before another and a different Judge, because death or some other unexpected or unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate. We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review' (7) Expedition in presenting a petition for review is indispensable (8) A party applying must show that there is good and sufficient cause for granting the review before he can be heard to argue that the decision is erroneous (9) There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant the Judicial Committee in allowing even after an order of His Majesty in Council has issued upon their report a rehearing at the instance of one of the parties but this is an indulgence with a view mainly to prevent irremediable injustice when by some accident without any blame the party has not been heard and an order has been made inadvertently as if he had been heard (10) An application for review is the proper method of setting aside a decree made on a compromise (11) As to whether a second application can be made for review see r 9 post suit under Art 5, Sched I of the Court Fees Act, (1) but the Bombay High Court have held that the Court fee need only be sufficient to cover the amount of the claims in regard to which review was sought (2) In calculating the eighty-nine days within which an application for review may be presented on payment of half the fee leviable on the plaint or memorandum of appeal under Art 5, Sched I of the Court Fees Act, 1870, the time during which the Court is closed for vacation cannot be excluded (3)

4. 1. 2. An application for review of a decree or order of a Court, not being a High Court, upon some ground other than the discovery of such new and important matter or evidence as is referred to in rule 1 or the existence of a clerical or arithmetical mistake or error apparent on the face of the decree, shall be made only to the Judge who passed the decree or made the order sought to be reviewed; but any such application may, if the Judge who passed the decree or made the order has ordered notice to issue under rule 4, sub rule (2), proviso (a), be disposed of by his successor

To whom applications for review may be made—This rule combines sect 624 of Act X of 1837 and the last clause added to sect 626 of Act XIV of 1882 by Act VII of 1888 The wording has been changed, and the rule has been framed to include orders as well as decrees, the words “or the existence of a” have been substituted for “same” and the word “arithmetical mistake” added

“Upon some ground other than”—This does not include supposed errors of judgment, (4) nor the ground that the order complained of was made in the absence of or without notice to a party (5) But where a minor on attaining majority applied to set aside a decree made on a compromise during his minority on the ground that the Court did not inquire into the circumstances which led to the filing of the petition of compromise, and that the record showed no leave to compromise had been granted under sect 162 (now O XXXII r 7) it was held that the successor to the Subordinate Judge who heard the original case was competent to entertain the application for review (6)

“New and important matter”—A decision of the Privy Council in an appeal has been held to be new and important matter for the purposes of an application for review in respect of a decree made on a subsequent accrual of the same cause of action as that on which the decree appealed against was based (7) See also notes to r 1

'Shall be made'—The remarks of the Privy Council in regard to expedition in presenting applications for review should be borne in mind. Their Lordships said, 'We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before another and a different Judge, because death or some other unexpected and unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it, but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate. We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review, and that for the attainment of that object, expedition in presenting a petition for the review is indispensable, and the only practical course for attaining that end is by accelerating the hearing of the review before accident or unexpected events shall have removed the original Judge' (1)

'Made'—Where a petition for review of judgment is presented to the Judge who delivered it and he directs notices to issue thereon (2) or directs the application to be entered on the register and that the fees for service of notice be deposited and is then transferred his successor has jurisdiction to make the order sought to be revised (3). In such cases the grounds for review are not confined to those mentioned in this rule. But it would be otherwise where the Judge to whom the petition was presented merely ordered a copy of the decree to be produced and did not issue notice (4). The Allahabad High Court, however, have construed 'made' to include a hearing and determination of the application for review (5). This variance of opinion has been set at rest by the concluding clause of this rule which has affirmed the decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.

'Only to the Judge'—The primary intention of granting a review is a reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge as distinguished from an appeal which is a hearing before another tribunal (6). If a Court has been abolished and its business transferred to another Court presided over by another Judge, the latter cannot entertain an application for review except in the cases mentioned in this rule (7) nor can a Judge by transferring a case to his own file confer on himself the power to review an order of dismissal pronounced by a Judge subordinate to him (8). A Judge of a Mofussil Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to review a case tried by his predecessor subject to the provisions of this rule (9).

Form of applications for review—This rule corresponds with sect 62, in the Codes of 1877 and 1882, save that “provisions” has been substituted for “rules hereinbefore contained” and “preferring” for “making”. Applications for review should be drawn up in the same manner as applications for the admission of special appeals, and should set forth concisely the grounds of objection to the decision sought to be reviewed (1) The Bombay High Court has held that the petition for review must be accompanied by a copy of the decree sought to be reviewed, (2) but the Allahabad High Court has held the contrary (3) If the grounds of review are certified they should be certified by the pleader who appeared originally in the appeal (4) In granting a review the Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application for review (5)

Provided that—

(a) no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, to enable him to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order, a review of which is applied for and

(b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation

Applications where rejected and when granted—This rule embodies part of sect 378 of Act VIII of 1859, and corresponds, save for the words in italics and the omission noted below, with sect 626 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882. In Act VIII of 1859 the first clause ran, “If the Court shall be of opinion that there are not any sufficient grounds for a review, it shall reject the application,” the present wording of that clause was adopted by Act X of 1877. In the second clause that Act added the words “application for the” before “review” and substituted “should be granted” for “desired is necessary to correct an evident error or omission or is otherwise requisite for the ends of justice”.

and "grant the same" for "grant the review" Proviso (b) was added by the Code of 1877. The present Code has substituted "where" for "if" and added the words "or order" and "or made" appearing in italics, but has omitted the words "and the Judge shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion" before the first proviso (1). Clause (c) of the former section has been embodied in r 2, ante. The form of Notice is given in the First Schedule, Appendix G, No 14.

This rule applies to orders rejecting or admitting reviews and not to judgments on review (2). A decree of a Division Bench of the High Court dismissing an appeal for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book can only be set aside by an order under this rule (3).

An application for review involves three stages. It commences ordinarily with an ex parte application under sect 523 (now O XLVII r 1). The Court then may either reject the application at once, or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage the application may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of the rule may involve, to some extent an investigation into the merits. If the rule is discharged, then the case ends. If, on the other hand the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached, the case is heard on the merits and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule is discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is a material difference, for in the latter case the whole matter having been reopened there is a fresh decree. In the former case the parties are relegated to and still rest on, the old decree (4). In practice these three stages are not always kept distinct, but are sometimes combined (5).

"Shall reject the application"—Such rejection cannot alter the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the review can be binding so as to alter such judgment or decree (6). Where on special appeal the case was remanded for trial of a particular issue, and an application for review was made in order that the suit might be remanded for the trial of another issue, it was held that as that would involve going through the record again the application could not be granted as it would in fact be to grant a second special appeal (7).

and "grant the same" for "grant the review" Proviso (b) was added by the Code of 1877. The present Code has substituted "where" for "if" and added the words "or order" and "or made" appearing in italics, but has omitted the words "and the Judge shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion" before the first proviso (1). Clause (c) of the former section has been embodied in r 2, ante. The form of Notice is given in the First Schedule, Appendix G, No 11.

This rule applies to orders rejecting or admitting reviews and not to judgments on review (2). A decree of a Division Bench of the High Court dismissing an appeal for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book can only be set aside by an order under this rule (3).

An application for review involves three stages. It commences ordinarily with an ex parte application under sect 523 (now O XLVII r 1). The Court then may either reject the application at once, or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage the application may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of the rule may involve, to some extent, an investigation into the merits. If the rule is discharged, then the case ends. If, on the other hand, the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached, the case is heard on the merits, and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule is discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is a material difference, for, in the latter case, the whole matter having been reopened, there is a fresh decree. In the former case the parties are relegated to, and still rest on, the old decree (4). In practice these three stages are not always kept distinct, but are sometimes combined (5).

"Shall reject the application"—Such rejection cannot alter the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it, and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the review can be binding so as to alter such judgment or decree (6). Where on special appeal the case was remanded for trial of a particular issue, and an application for review was made in order that the suit might be remanded for the trial of another issue, it was held that as that would involve going through the record again the application could not be granted, as it would in fact be to grant a second special appeal (7).

admitting the review could be made in one and the same proceeding (1) An order intended to operate as an order for review is not invalidated by an irregularity in its form by reasons of which it purports to be an order made on an application to set aside the decree and restore a suit for trial (2) The order made under this rule is not one on the re-hearing of the case on review that comes later (3) Although a District or Assistant Judge or Special Judge under sect 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act is not governed by this Code, he has discretion to grant a review on the ground of mistake (4) or non service of notice, (5) and he may review an ex parte order, (6) but notice of the application must be served on the other side (7) The Codes of 1877 and 1882 required the Judge granting an application for review to record with his own hand his reasons for his opinion, and it was held that this should be done before the review of judgment was granted (8) The failure to do so did not necessarily make the act one without jurisdiction, (9) but such an order was bad and the case must be remanded (10) This was not a hard and fast rule, the words were directory, and the order was not necessarily invalid though there might be cases in which it was necessary in the interests of justice that the reasons should be recorded, and in such cases the recording would be essential to the validity of the order (11) In granting a review the Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application for review (12)

Clause (a)—Notice must be served on the opposite party to appear before a suit can be revived, (13) but not in the case of a review of an application for the admission of a special appeal, as such application being ex parte, a review of the same is also ex parte (14) In the Codes of 1877 and 1882 this clause only made mention of decrees and not orders. The omission has been rectified by the present rule

Clause (b)—Lord Romilly, M R, said, "Re-hearing a cause upon obtaining fresh evidence is a most dangerous practice. It is the duty of suitors to bring forward all their evidence at the first and nothing would be more mischievous than to allow the principle to prevail, that a person should endeavour to get a case heard upon imperfect evidence, and trust to succeeding on that evidence and then, when it is found that he has not succeeded, to bring forward further evidence" (15) When a Judge wrongly construed a document, an application for the purpose of correcting the error on review accompanied by another similar document to assist the Court was held not to be an application coming within this rule (1) When the new evidence was available to the applicant and might, with anything like diligence, have been produced by him, the application for review was refused, (2) but where the applicant produced with his application for review certain documents to show that the Judge's decision was erroneous on the evidence originally before him, it was held that he was not in fault in not producing them previously, as they were not originally necessary to the proof of his claim (3) The applicant must also show that the new evidence is prima facie evidence in the cause (4)

"Strict proof"—The Privy Council have recently emphasized this condition (5) Want of such proof is a ground of appeal, (6) and the decision on review must be reversed, (7) but where a party had no opportunity of giving such proof owing to the opposite party, who had notice, not appearing and making no objection, the opposite party cannot afterwards be allowed to object (8) Strict proof means proof according to the forms of law, that is, with close adherence to rule (9) It is not sufficient to make an affidavit that the applicant was not aware of the existence of a document, but he must also show that he used due diligence and made inquiries to ascertain its existence and found it was not available, (10) but an applicant for review on the ground that he had not been afforded sufficient time to produce a document at the original hearing has not to prove the document was not within his knowledge (11)

5. Where the Judge or Judges, or any one of the Judges, who passed the decree or made the order, a review of which is applied for, continues or continue attached to the Court at the time when the application for a review is presented, and is not or are not precluded by absence or other cause for a period of six months next after the application from considering the decree or order to which the application refers, such Judge or Judges or any of them shall hear the application, and no other Judge or Judges of the Court shall hear the same.

Applications for review in Courts consisting of two or more Judges—This rule is a modified form of sect 379 of Act VII of 1859. That section commenced, "If the Court to which the application for a review of its judgment has been presented, be a Court consisting of two or more judges whenever the judge or judges who may have passed the decree, or if the decree have been passed by two or more judges, when any of such judges shall" By sect 627 of Act X of 1877 these words were altered to the form the rule now takes, save for the words in italics, down to the words "continues or" That Act also substituted "is not or are not" for "shall not be," "considering the decree or order" for "considering the judgment," and the concluding words as they now appear from "such judge" for "it shall not be competent to any other judge or judges of the same Court to enter upon a consideration of the merits of the application and record an order or opinion thereon" The present Code substituted "Where" for "If" and added the words "made the" appearing in italics. An application for the re-admission of an appeal dismissed by two Judges for default in depositing the estimated amount of costs for the preparation of the paper book was held not an application for review, and could not be disposed of by one of such Judges under this rule, (1) but a later decision of the Full Bench, has overruled that decision so far as it held it was not an application for review, (2) and presumably therefore the rest of that decision is not law.

"Attached to the Court"—A Judge absent on leave and for whom another is officiating is not "attached to the Court," and the review may be disposed of by the remaining Judge who heard the appeal originally (3).

"No other Judge . . . shall hear the same"—A review may be admitted by the sole remaining Judge of the Bench which heard the case originally (4). If it be admitted by the two Judges who originally heard the case it may be disposed of by the sole remaining Judge. The Chief Justice cannot appoint a Bench to do so (5).

6 (1) Where the application for a review is heard by more than one Judge, and the Court is equally divided, the application shall be rejected

(2) Where there is a majority, the decision shall be according to the opinion of the majority.

"Application where rejected"—This rule was introduced into the Code by sect 628 of Act X of 1877. By the present Code the word "Where" has been substituted for "If" and "is" for "be"

7. (1) An order of the Court rejecting the application (s) shall not be appealable; but an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was—

to order granting application

(a) in contravention of the provisions of rule 2,

(b) in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, or

(c) after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause.

Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit.

(2) Where the application has been rejected in consequence of the failure of the applicant to appear, he may apply for an order to have the rejected application restored to the file, and, where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when such application was called on for hearing, the Court shall order it to be restored to the file upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for hearing the same.

(3) No order shall be made under sub rule (2) unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Order of rejection not appealable objections to order granting application—This was introduced by sect 629 of Act X of 1877. The words "An order of the Court rejecting the application shall be final" (the form they then took) were taken from sect 378 of Act VIII of 1859. That section also provided that an order granting the review should be final. This provision was repealed by sect 629 of Act X of 1877. The present rule corresponds with that section save that the words 'not be appealable' have been substituted for 'be final' and 'the application' for 'it' taken for 'made' "from" for 'against' and where it is for 'if it be' the words 'passed or added, the wording of sub rule (3) rearranged and the last clause of the former section which now forms the basis of O XXII r 9 omitted.

"Shall not be appealable." The wording used in the earlier Codes was 'shall be final' and was held to preclude appeals (1) That decision was in reference to the wording as it appeared in sect 378 of the Code of 1859 that the word "final" in the late Code has been similarly interpreted (1) No appeal lies, even if the application be rejected by a single Judge on the Original Side of the High Court, (2) or if the application be for the review of an order dismissing an execution for non payment of process fees (3) An opinion was expressed under the last Code that an order of rejection was not open to revision (4) It must, however, be now noted that the order is not now "final" but "not appealable" The effect of an order rejecting an application for review is not to alter the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it, and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the review can be binding so as to alter such judgment or decree (5) When an order is made rejecting a review, the time allowed for appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment sought to be reviewed runs from the date of the judgment and not that of the order rejecting the review (6)

"May be objected to."—The appeal may be on the grounds mentioned in this rule and on no other (7) An order admitting a review is not a judgment within the meaning of sect 15 of the Letters Patent so as to admit of an appeal from it save on the grounds mentioned in this rule, (8) but it may be dealt with under sect 622 (now sect 115) (9) Where a Court with materials before it comes to the conclusion that a review which has been applied for is necessary to correct an evident error or omission or for the ends of justice and grants the application accordingly, the order so made is not open to be questioned on special appeal, (10) nor is an order, directing the parties to examine the persons who had sworn the affidavits on which the application for review was based as also to produce other evidence, being an interlocutory order neither granting nor rejecting the review, appealable (11) That there is no sufficient reason for granting the review is no ground of appeal (12) No second appeal lies from an order granting an application for review, (1) but it does from an original decretal order as amended on review (2) An appeal under this rule is not controlled by sect 104, sub sect (2) An appeal against an order granting a review would lie under sub rule (1) of this order, even where no appeal would lie against the final decree disposing of the case (3)

Clause (b)—Appeals have been allowed where the Judge has not recorded his reason for granting an application for review, (4) or where he has granted a review without inquiry or proof that the new evidence was not within the knowledge of the applicant at the hearing or could not be adduced by him before the decree was passed, (5) or on the ground that by going through the evidence a second time the Judge might come to a different conclusion, (6) or merely to enable the case to be re argued (7) Upon an appeal it may be open to the Court of Appeal to say that the Judge ought not to have admitted a review (8) The clause does not refer to the weight or sufficiency of evidence, and an Appellate Court cannot set aside an order of review merely because in its opinion the probative force of the evidence is insufficient to establish the allegations made in support of the application for review, though such evidence had such probative force to the Court granting the review (9)

Clause (c)—This is the effect of the decisions cited (10) The object of placing a limitation on the time within which applications for review may be made is that the finality of a decision should be left in doubt no longer than the requisites of justice imperatively demand (11) Though an appeal lies in such cases, an application under sect 15 of the High Court Charter Act does not necessarily lie (12) Unless the delay was accounted for (13) and the Court was satisfied as to there being good and sufficient cause for the delay the application for review ought to have been rejected, (14) and the review and all subsequent proceedings under it are invalid (1) But if there be just and reasonable cause for the admission of the application for review even after two years, the High Court will not interfere under sect 15 of the Charter Act (2) It has been held that ignorance of the legal effect of the judgment is not a justification of delay, (3) nor ignorance on the part of legal advisers of the contents of a document, copy of which was in their possession at the time of the original hearing, (4) nor that an application presented in time was refused as not properly stamped, (5) nor the omission of contentions and arguments which might have been adduced within proper time, (6) nor where the applicant was a minor till shortly before the making of the decree sought to be reviewed, (7) or even till after it was made, (8) nor is the pendency of a special appeal, (9) nor the pendency of an appeal dismissed on the ground of want of jurisdiction (10) The time occupied in the appeal should not be deducted, (11) nor can the time occupied in prosecuting a prior application for review be deducted in calculating limitation (12) A new exposition of the law was held not to be a just and reasonable cause for not having presented the application for review within the prescribed time (13) When, however, a suit was dismissed as wrongly framed, and the plaintiff brought a second suit in which the Full Bench held that the course taken in the first suit was the proper one, the plaintiff was allowed a review in the first case though out of time, that being a very different thing from interfering with previous decisions of the Court in other cases between other parties (14) The period of limitation is now prescribed by Art 173, Sched I, Division III, Limitation Act IX of 1908 Under the Code of 1859 it was governed by sect 377 of that Code, which fixed the period at ninety days

“Such objections may be taken”—The provision, that objection can be taken by appeal against the order or on appeal against the final decree, has been held not to be controlled by sect 591 (now sect 103) (15) The fact that a party on the re hearing of the case produced fresh evidence himself did not debar him on appeal from objecting on the same ground, namely, that the opposite party had not established that with due diligence he could not have adduced the new evidence on which his application for review was based, as he had urged in opposition to such application (1) Where in the opinion of the Privy Council the High Court had wrongly allowed a review and had admitted additional evidence, their Lordships did not consider it right to exclude that evidence from their consideration (2)

8. When an application for review is granted, a note thereof shall be made in the register and the Court may at once re-hear the case or make such order in regard to the re-hearing as it thinks fit.

Registry of application granted, and order for re hearing.—This rule corresponds with sect 380 of Act VIII of 1859 That section after the word “register” ran “of suits or appeals (as the case may be) and the Court shall give such order in regard to the re-hearing of the suit as it may deem proper in the circumstances of the case” The present wording was adopted by sect 630 of Act X of 1877 There has been some diversity of decision on the question as to what may be gone into at the re-hearing The Calcutta High Court formerly held that the applicant was only entitled to go into the points on which the rule granting the review was allowed, and that matters not mentioned when the rule was argued could not be gone into, (3) but later the same Court held it was discretionary with the Court to re-hear the whole case or only the particular point on which the review was granted (4) The Bombay High Court has, however, held that when a review has been admitted the whole case is reopened (5) And it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the expression “rehear the case” means “rehear the whole case,” and that if the case is to be reheard only upon special points, the order must be made under the last words of the section, which enable the Court to make such orders as it thinks fit (6) It has been held that where a case is admitted to review by the deciding Judge and is afterwards tried by another Judge, the new Judge must try the point directed by the order of review, (7) and that a Judge granting a review on one point has no power to go into or to decide a matter already decided finally and as to which no application for review was made (8) When a plaintiff obtained a review on the ground that he was entitled, upon the allegations and proofs on the record to the full relief which he had sought, it was held not to be open to the defendant on the re-hearing to adduce evidence he ought to have done at the hearing (1) A Court should in its judgment on the re-hearing give reasons for coming to a different conclusion from that which it had previously formed (2) When a case is re-heard on review the order on the re-hearing is a new decree whatever the result is, (3) even though on the application for review coming on for re-hearing the Judge allowed it on a comparatively insignificant point and forthwith directed a clerical error in the decree to be rectified, and the time within which to appeal on the decree runs from the date of such order (4)

9. No application to review an order made on an application for a review of a decree or order passed or made on a review shall be entertained.

Review of review—With verbal alterations and a transposition this rule is the same as the last paragraph of sect. 629 of the former Code. The first portion of the rule refers to the second, and the second portion refers to the third, stage of the proceedings through which an application for a review may pass (5) It has been a question whether these words are tantamount to saying “no second application for review shall be made,” that is, whether such an application is barred in all cases (6) As regards this, it is clear that if an application for review is allowed at the second stage, then the order allowing the application cannot as being an order made on an application for review be itself reviewed. Similarly an order made in the third stage after the admission of the application for review and after the case has been re-heard, whether that order confirms, alters, or reverses the decree sought to be reviewed, is a new decree (7) There is here a decree or order, as the case may be, passed or made upon a review, and this rule prohibits a further review (8) There remains a third case, viz. where the application for review is rejected at the first or second stage, and the case is in consequence not re-heard. In this case the order itself rejecting the application for review cannot be reviewed. But the question then arises whether a second application for review of the original order or decree may be made on different grounds. For instance, does the rejection of an application based on the ground of alleged error apparent on the face of the record preclude a subsequent application based on the ground of the discovery of new evidence? It may be contended that this rule does not cover the case, because on the facts stated the second application is not for a review of the order made on an application for review, nor is it for a review of a decree or order passed or made on a review. On the other hand, though the original order is directly attacked by such a subsequent application the effect of the latter if successful, is to grant the review which, though on different grounds was previously refused. It has been said (1) that the present provision was first inserted in the Code of 1877 to meet the decision of the Full Bench in Nasiruddin Khan v Indro naryan Chowdhry (2) that the Court may admit a review even after a prior order rejecting it. On the other hand the Calcutta High Court has held (3) that though the order of rejection is final in the sense that it cannot be made the direct subject of review, these provisions do not prohibit the admission of a subsequent application for review of the original decree on a different ground from that which was the basis of the previous application which was refused.

ORDER XLVIII.

Miscellaneous.

3.] 1. (1) Every process issued under this Code shall be served at the expense of the party on whose behalf it is issued, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(2) The court fee chargeable for such service shall be paid within a time to be fixed before the process is issued.

Costs of service

"Unless the Court otherwise directs"—In the matter of H C Studd, (1) Rampini, J, said "This provision of the Civil Procedure Code does not appear to me to give a Court any power to depart from the rules of the High Court on the subject of the levy of process fees, or to remit those fees. The section relates to the payment of process fees by the parties to a suit, and gives the Court, acting judicially, power to make an order, between party and party only, as to who should pay the process fees. It does not expressly give power to remit the fees, or, what comes to the same thing, to order that the process should be served free, or, in other words, at the expense of Government, and in the present case we cannot, I think, make such an order under sect 93, C P C, seeing that the Government is no party to the suit." Ghose, J, however, declined to express any opinion upon the question, "whether or not the Court has the power to relax in any case the process fee rules," and Rampini, J, himself pointed out that some Benches readily grant a relaxation of these rules.

Within a time to be fixed by the Court—If no time is fixed, there is no obligation to pay the court fee, and where processes could not be served on witnesses for non payment of the court fee, in such a case it was held that the suit could not be dismissed for default of evidence (2)

THE THIRD SCHEDULE.

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS.

1. Where the execution of a decree has been transferred (s. 68) to the Collector under section 68, he may—
Powers of Collector.
 (a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immoveable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment debtor to raise the amount of the decree; or
 (b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold; or
 (c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary.

This schedule deals with the functions of the Collector as the authority invested with jurisdiction to see that the decree is satisfied. The authority is given for the purpose of enabling him to determine the best mode of satisfying the decree. But his discretion does not extend to any jurisdiction to determine whether the decree has been satisfied or not (1).

2. Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree (s. 69) ordering the sale of immoveable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same, but being a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immoveable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided.
Procedure of Collector in special cases

“Powers.”—The Collector, it has been held, is limited to one or other of the courses specifically mentioned in the section (2)

(1) Bhurchand v Vira, 14 Bom L R 787 (1912); 37 B 32

(2) Madhavji Karandikar v. Hari Chikne, 7 B 332 (1983)

A] 3 (1) In any such case as is referred to in paragraph 2, the Collector shall publish a notice, allowing a period of sixty days from the date of its publication for compliance and calling upon—

Notice to be given to decree-holders and to persons having claims on property.

(a) every person holding a decree for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor capable of execution by sale of his immoveable property and which such decree-holder desires to have so executed, and every holder of a decree for the payment of money in execution of which proceedings for the sale of such property are pending, to produce before the Collector a copy of the decree, and a certificate from the Court which passed or is executing the same, declaring the amount recoverable thereunder,

(b) every person having any claim on the said property to submit to the Collector a statement of such claim, and to produce the documents (if any) by which it is evidenced

(c) Such notice shall be published by being affixed on a conspicuous part of the court house of the Court which made the original order for sale, and in such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit, and where the address of any such decree holder or claimant is known, a copy of the notice shall be sent to him by post or otherwise

B] 4. (1) Upon the expiration of the said period, the Collector shall appoint a day for hearing any representations which the judgment debtor and the decree holders or claimants (if any) may desire to make, and for holding such inquiry as he may deem necessary for informing himself as to the nature and extent of such decrees and claims and of the judgment debtor's immoveable property, and may, from time to time, adjourn such hearing and inquiry

Amount of decrees for payment of money to be ascertained, and immoveable property available for their satisfaction.

(2) Where there is no dispute as to the fact or extent of the liability of the judgment-debtor to any of the decrees or claims of which the Collector is informed, or as to the relative priorities of such decrees or claims, or as to the liability of any such property for the satisfaction of such decrees or claims, the Collector shall draw up a statement, specifying the amount to be recovered for the discharge of such decrees, the order in which such decrees and claims are to be satisfied, and the immoveable property available for that purpose.

(3) Where any such dispute arises, the Collector shall refer the same, with a statement thereof and his own opinion thereon, to the Court which made the original order for sale, and shall, pending the reference, stay proceedings relating to the subject thereof. The Court shall dispose of the dispute if the matter thereof is within its jurisdiction, or transmit the case to a competent Court for disposal, and the final decision shall be communicated to the Collector, who shall then draw up a statement as above provided in accordance with such decision

Amount of decrees to be ascertained and property available for their satisfaction—It was held that the assignees of a decree for money obtained against a person whose property had been taken over by the Collector under sect 326, Act X of 1877, whilst such property was under the management of the Collector, were not entitled to be placed on the list of creditors prepared by the Collector under sect 322B of the last Code. An application to be placed on the said list of creditors should be made to the Collector and not to the District Judge (1). An appeal from a decision under this section by which a disputed claim is settled has, in Madras, been treated as a miscellaneous appeal, i.e. an appeal from a decree not passed in a regular suit (2).

5 The Collector may, instead of himself issuing the notices and holding the inquiry required by paragraphs 3 and 4, draw up a statement specifying the circumstances of the judgment debtor and of his immoveable property so far as they are known to the Collector or appear in the records of his office, and forward such statement to the District Court, and such Court shall thereupon issue the notices, hold the inquiry and draw up the statement required by paragraphs 3 and 4 and transmit such statement to the Collector

Issue of notice and inquiry by District Court—Under the Bengal North-West Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act 1887 the High Court has power to authorize Subordinate Judges and Munsiffs to take cognizance of references by Collectors under sect 322C of the former Code (Act VII of 1887 sect 23 (2) (c))

6 The decision by the Court of any dispute arising under paragraph 4 or paragraph 5 shall, as between the parties thereto, have the force of and be appealable as a decree

(1) Murari Day v Collector of Ghazipur, referred to in Narayan v Bhagwant, 10 B. L. 313 (1890)
(2) Srinivasa v Peta, 4 M. 420 (1882) referred to in Narayan v Bhagwant, 10 B. L. 313 (1890), diss. from Ahmad Khan v Madho 7 A. 405 (1885)

Effect of decision.—As to the nature of the appeal, and the Court fee duty payable, see the cases cited in the notes to paragraph 4

7 (1) Where the amount to be recovered and the property available have been determined as provided in paragraph 4 or paragraph 5, the Collector may,—

Scheme for liquidation of decrees for payment of money.

- (a) if it appears that the amount cannot be recovered without the sale of the whole of the property available, proceed to sell such property, or,
- (b) if it appears that the amount with interest (if any) in accordance with the decree, and, when not decreed, with interest (if any) at such rate as he thinks reasonable, may be recovered without such sale, raise such amount and interest (notwithstanding the original order for sale)—
 - (i) by letting in perpetuity or for a term, on payment of a premium, the whole or any part of the said property, or
 - (ii) by mortgaging the whole or any part of such property, or
 - (iii) by selling part of such property, or
 - (iv) by letting on farm, or managing by himself or another, the whole or any part of such property for any term not exceeding twenty years from the date of the order of sale, or
 - (v) partly by one of such modes, and partly by another or others of such modes
- (2) For the purpose of managing the whole or any part of such property, the Collector may exercise all the powers of its owner.
- (3) For the purpose of improving the saleable value of the property available or any part thereof, or rendering it more suitable for letting or managing, or for preserving the property from sale in satisfaction of an incumbrance, the Collector may discharge the claim of any incumbrancer which has become payable or compound the claim of any incumbrancer whether it has become payable or not, and, for the purpose of providing funds to effect such discharge or composition, may mortgage, let or sell any portion of the property which he deems sufficient. If any dispute arises as to the amount due on any incumbrance with which the Collector proposes to deal under this clause, he may institute a suit in the proper Court, either in his own name or the name of the judgment debtor, to have an account taken, or he may agree to refer such dispute to the decision of two arbitrators, one to be chosen by each party, or of an umpire to be named by such arbitrators.

- (1) In proceeding under this paragraph the Collector shall be subject to such rules consistent with this Act as may, from time to time, be made in this behalf by the Local Government.

Liquidation of money decree—With regard to the rules referred to in last paragraph, see N W P list of Local Rules and Orders, ed 1894, p 112, Burmah Rules Manual, ed 1897, p 114, Central Provinces List of Local Rules and Orders, ed 1896, p 15 (1). In the case of the Central Provinces the notifications are also issued under sect 320 of the last Code. As for interest to be taken into account see Burchard & Viri 11 Bom L R 787 (1912), 37 B 32. It has been held that the powers here conferred on the Collector and those conferred on the Talukdari Settlement officers by sect 3 of the Bombay Talukdari Settlement Act are both enabling and are not necessarily contradictory (2).

8 Where, on the expiration of the letting or management under paragraph 7 the amount to be recovered has not been realized, the Collector shall notify the fact in writing to the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest, stating at the same time that, if the balance necessary to make up the said amount is not paid to the Collector within six weeks from the date of such notice, he will proceed to sell the whole or a sufficient part of the said property, and, if on the expiration of the said six weeks the said balance is not so paid, the Collector shall sell such property or part accordingly. [s. 3]

9 (1) The Collector shall, from time to time, render to the Court which made the original order for sale an account of all monies which come to his hands and of all charges incurred by him in the exercise and performance of the powers and duties conferred and imposed on him under the provisions of this Schedule, and shall hold the balance at the disposal of the Court. [s. 32]

(2) Such charges shall include all debts and liabilities from time to time due to the Government in respect of the property or any part thereof, the rent (if any) from time to time due to a superior holder in respect of such property or part, and, if the Collector so directs, the expenses of any witnesses summoned by him

(a) in providing for the maintenance of such members of the judgment debtor's family (if any) as are entitled to be maintained out of the income of the property, to such amount in the case of each member as the Court thinks fit; and

(b) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 1, in satisfaction of the original decree in execution of which the Court ordered the sale of immoveable property, or otherwise as the Court may under section 73 direct,

(c) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 2,—

(i) in keeping down the interest on incumbrances on the property,

(ii) where the judgment-debtor has no other sufficient means of subsistence, in providing for his subsistence to such amount as the Court thinks fit, and

(iii) in discharging rateably the claims of the original decree-holder and any other decree holders who have complied with the said notice, and whose claims were included in the amount ordered to be recovered

(.) No other holder of a decree for the payment of money shall be entitled to be paid out of such property or balance until the decree holders who have obtained such order have been satisfied and the residue (if any) shall be paid to the judgment debtor or such other person as the Court directs.

[at the disposal of the Court]

10 Where the Collector sells any property under this Schedule he shall put it up to public auction in one or more lots as he thinks fit and—

(a) fix a reasonable reserved price for each lot

(b) adjourn the sale for a reasonable time whenever a reasonable price is not recorded, he shall adjourn the sale for the purpose of obtaining a fair price for the property

(c) buy in the property offered for sale by public or private contract if the price is not obtained

11. (1) So long as the Collector can exercise or perform (a) Restrictions as to alienation by judgment-debtor or his representative, and prosecution of remedies by decree-holders. in respect of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, or any part thereof, any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs 1 to 10, the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, nor shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for the payment of money.

(2) During the same period no Civil Court shall issue any process of execution either against the judgment-debtor or his property in respect of any decree for the satisfaction whereof provision has been made by the Collector under paragraph 7.

(3) The same period shall be excluded in calculating the period of limitation applicable to the execution of any decree affected by the provisions of this paragraph in respect of any remedy of which the decree holder has been temporarily deprived.

Object of section — As to the object of this section and the exclusion from computation of the time during which the property is under the management of the Collector see case noted below (1)

12. Where the property of which the sale has been (a) Provision where property is in several districts ordered is situate in more districts than one, the powers and duties conferred and imposed on the Collector by paragraphs 1 to 10 shall be exercised and performed by such one of the Collectors of the said districts as the Local Government may by general rule or special order direct

13. In exercising the powers conferred on him by paragraphs 1 to 10 the Collector shall have the (a) Powers of Collector to compel attendance and production powers of a Civil Court to compel the attendance of parties and witnesses and the production of documents

31. An application for the issue of a summons for a party or a witness shall be made in the form prescribed for the purpose. No other forms shall be received by the Court.

Order XIII.

12. Every document not written in the court vernacular or in English, which is produced (a) with a plaint or (b) at the first hearing or (c) at any other time tendered in evidence in any suit, appeal, or proceeding, shall be accompanied by a correct translation of the document into the court vernacular. If any such document is written in the court vernacular but in characters other than the ordinary Persian or Nagri characters in use, it shall be accompanied by a correct transliteration of its contents into the Persian or Nagri character.

13. When a document included in the list, prescribed by rule 1, has been admitted in evidence, the Court shall, in addition to making the endorsement prescribed in rule 4 (1), mark such document with serial figures in the case of documents admitted as evidence for a plaintiff, and with serial letters in the case of documents admitted as evidence for a defendant, and shall initial every such serial number or letter. When there are two or more parties defendants, the documents of the first party defendant may be marked A1, B1, C1, &c., AA1, BB1, &c., and those of the second A2, B2, C2, &c., AA2, BB2, &c. When a number of documents of the same nature is admitted, as for example a series of receipts for rent, the whole series shall bear one figure or capital letter or letters and a small figure or small letter shall be added to distinguish each paper of the series.

Order XVI

22. (1) Save as provided in this rule and in rule 2, the court shall allow travelling and other expenses on the following scale —

- (a) In the case of witnesses of the class of cultivators, labourers, and menials, six annas a day.
- (b) in the case of witnesses of a better class, such as zamindars, traders, pleaders, and persons of corresponding rank, from eight annas to two rupees a day, as the Court may direct; and
- (c) in the case of witnesses of superior rank, including officers of Government in receipt of a salary of not less than Rs.200 a month, from three to five rupees a day.

(2) If a witness demand any sum in excess of what has been paid to him, such sum shall be allowed if he satisfy the court that he has actually and necessarily incurred the additional expense.

A post office employee summoned to give evidence is entitled to demand from the

from duty. The sum so payable in respect of the substitute will be certified by the official superior of the witness on a slip which the witness will present to the court from which the summons issued.

(3) If a witness is detained by the court, his detention shall clause (1) of this rule, and may be certified by the official superior of the witness on a slip which the witness will present to the court from which the summons issued.

Provided that the court may, for reasons stated in writing, allow expenses on a higher scale than that hereinbefore prescribed.

Order XIX

5. Affidavits shall be divided into paragraphs and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively and as nearly as may be, shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject.

6. Every person making any affidavit shall be described therein in such manner as shall serve to identify him clearly, and where necessary for this purpose, it shall contain the full name, the name of his father, of his caste or religious persuasion, his rank or degree in life, his profession, calling, occupation or trade, and the true place of his residence.

7. Unless it be otherwise provided, an affidavit may be made by any person having cognizance of the facts deposed to. Two or more persons may join in an affidavit, each shall depose separately to those facts which are within his own knowledge, and such facts shall be stated in separate paragraphs.

8. When the declarant in any affidavit speaks to any fact within his own knowledge, he must do so directly and positively, using the words "I affirm or I make oath and say"

9. Except in interlocutory proceedings, affidavits shall strictly be confined to such facts as the declarant is able of his own knowledge to prove. In stating the facts, the declarant shall state from whom he received such information. When the application or the opposition thereto rests on facts disclosed in documents or copies of documents produced from any court of justice or other source, the declarant shall state what is the source from which they were produced, and his information and belief as to the truth of the facts disclosed in such documents.

10. When any place is referred to in an affidavit, it shall be correctly described. When in an affidavit any person is referred to, such person, the correct name and address of such person, and such further description as may be sufficient for the purpose of the identification of such person, shall be given in the affidavit.

11. Every person making an affidavit for use in a civil court shall, if not personally known to the person before whom the affidavit is made, be identified to that person by some one known to the person before whom the affidavit is made, at the foot of the affidavit.

12. No verification of a petition and no affidavit purporting to have been made by a pardah nashin woman who has not appeared unveiled before the person before her

state that he has not read the affidavit or appears not to understand the contents thereof or appears to be illiterate the person before whom the affidavit is about to be made shall read and explain or cause some other competent person to read and explain in his presence, the affidavit to the person proposing to make the same, and when the person before whom the affidavit is about to be made is thus satisfied that the person proposing to make such affidavit understands the contents thereof, the affidavit may be made.

14. The person before whom an affidavit is made shall certify at the foot of the

15. If it be found necessary to correct any clerical error in any affidavit such correction may be made in the presence of the person before whom the affidavit is about to be made and before, but not after, the affidavit is made. Every correction so made shall be initialled by the person before whom the affidavit is made and shall be made in such manner as not to render it impossible or difficult to read the original word or words, figure or figures, in respect of which the correction may have been made.

Order XX

21. (1) Every decree and order as defined in section 2 other than a decree or order of a court of small causes or of a court in the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of small causes, shall be drawn up in the court vernacular. As soon as such decree or order has been drawn up, and before it is signed the Munsif shall cause a notice to be posted on the notice board that any party or the pleader of such notice peruse the Munsif an objection or some accident or defect or order is at variance with the judgment or contains some clerical or arithmetical error. Such objection shall state clearly what is the error, defect, or variance alleged, and shall be signed and dated by the person making it

(2) If any such objection be filed on or before the date specified in the notice, [77] the Munsarim shall enter the case in the earliest weekly list practicable, and shall, on the date fixed, put up the objection together with the record before the Judge who pronounced the judgment, or, if such Judge has ceased to be the Judge of the court, before the Judge then presiding

(3) If no objection has been filed on or before the date specified in the notice, [77] or if an objection has been filed and disallowed, the Munsarim shall date the decree as of the day on which the judgment was pronounced and shall lay it before the Judge for signature in accordance with the provisions of rules 7 and 8

Original Side Rules of Procedure.

Preliminary.

- 1 In these rules unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context —
(1) The word "Judge" means any Judge of the Chief Court.
(2) The words "plaintiff" and "defendant" respectively include petitioner and respondent in miscellaneous proceedings
- 2 In the absence of a Deputy Registrar an Assistant Registrar shall exercise all the functions of a Deputy Registrar under these rules
- 3 Except upon close holidays the offices of the Court shall be open to the public for business from 10 30 a m until 4 30 p m on all week days except Saturdays, and on Saturdays from 10 30 a m until 2 p m specified in Rule 1 abovementioned. In the event of the absence of both the Deputy Registrars, such applications if of an urgent nature, may be made to the sitting Judge in Chambers

Institution of Proceedings

The matter shall be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and each paragraph shall contain as nearly as may be a separate allegation Dates and figures shall

6 The first two paragraphs of the preceding rule apply to copies of documents intended to be served upon other parties to a suit or proceeding. Press copies shall not be presented.

proceeding

8. No correspondence relating to suits or proceedings before the Court can be attended to, but any person having business in the Court or its office shall transact the same in person or by a duly authorized agent, advocate or pleader.

9 Except in plaints and in petitions initiating miscellaneous proceedings, the names, descriptions and places of residence of the plaintiffs and defendants, other than the first plaintiff, defendant, petitioner or respondent, need not be set out, but the words "and another" or "and others," whichever may be applicable, shall be added after the name of the first plaintiff or defendant.

10 In every document relating to a suit or proceeding already instituted, the number of the suit or proceeding shall be entered before the document is presented.

11. A party, advocate or pleader presenting a written statement, affidavit, or petition, except in matters as of course, shall send a copy or copies thereof to the other party or parties to the suit or proceeding or their advocate or pleader within 24 hours from the time of presentation of the document.

12 In every petition the section or sections of the Act (if any) under which the applicant claims the order asked for by him shall be stated.

a matter of right and of course, notice shall ordinarily be issued to the other party interested to show cause why the order asked for should not be granted. If a party making an application desires that the order he asks for be made without notice to any other party interested, reasons for making the order without such notice should be set out in his petition.

20 When application is made for the Court's permission to a plaint or application being verified by some person other than a plaintiff or person on whose behalf the application is made, the application must be accompanied by an affidavit by the person proposing to verify, showing clearly his connection with the facts alleged in the plaint or application.

21 If an agent desires to institute or defend a suit or proceeding on behalf of his principal, he shall at the time of presenting the plaint or filing his written statement produce any original power of attorney which he may hold, if it is not already filed in the Court.

A Deputy Registrar shall examine the power of attorney and if it contains the necessary powers shall make an entry to that effect at the foot of the application for leave to verify or the affidavit filed in support thereof under Rule 20 and return the power of attorney, provided always that any plaintiff or defendant shall, on receiving notice requiring him to do so, forthwith produce and leave such power of attorney at the Office of the Deputy Registrar.

75. No affidavit shall be made or used at the hearing of the said summons except by special order of the Judge.

77. Any application, subsequently to the original summons for any directions as to any interlocutory matter or thing by any party, shall be made under the summons by two clear days' notice to the other party, stating the grounds of the application. Such application must be made to the Judge and not to a Deputy Registrar.

78. Any application by any party which might have been made at the hearing of the original summons shall, if granted on any subsequent application, be granted at the costs of the party applying unless the Judge shall be of opinion that the application could not properly have been made at the hearing of the original summons.

Summons and Affidavits

79. When an order has been made giving leave to the defendant to defend a suit filed under Order XXXVII of the Code of Civil Procedure, the defendant shall, within one week from the date of such order file his written statement unless the Judge, who grants leave, orders the affidavit of the defendant to be taken as his written statement and the suit shall be set down in List No. 5, 6 or 7 referred to in Rule 51.

Documents filed in Courts

80. A Deputy Registrar may perform the functions of the Court under Order XIII, Rule 9 (1), referring in case of doubt to the Judge.

81. The Judge or a Deputy Registrar may at any time require a party to a suit or proceeding to produce and leave with a Deputy Registrar any document not in the English language in his possession, for the purpose of its being translated by a licensed translator of the Court and may order that the translation when made shall be filed with the record.

82. The Bench Clerk shall make and sign the endorsements enjoined by Order XIII, Rules 4 and 6 of the Code on documents admitted or rejected. The list of documents and articles admitted in evidence shall be prepared in Form ^{Judicial} ~~Legal~~ by the Bench Clerk and shall be signed by him.

83. Copies of entries in public records or in books of account shall be examined, compared and attested by a Deputy or an Assistant Registrar or the Chief Clerk when the entry is in English, or by an Interpreter of the Court when the entry is in a language of which there is a Court Interpreter, before the record or book of account is returned to the person producing it under Order XIII, Rule 5 () of the Code. has expired, or if an appeal is preferred, until after the record has been received from the Appellate Side

111 The diary shall be framed so as to show as concisely as possible every stage of, and every proceeding taken in the suit, and the party or parties present in person or by agent, and the date on which the proceedings were taken. The Clerk should put up a judgment form with the file when submitting it to the Judge.

The Judgment

112 When judgment is given orally a note thereof in writing or in shorthand shall be taken by an Officer of the Court, or person authorized by the Judge. Such note shall be submitted to the Judge for correction, and for signature.

Decrees and Formal Orders

113 In all decrees and formal orders and in all miscellaneous proceedings an order is made by the Judge, and the date on which the order was pronounced, but the date on which a Judge or a Deputy Registrar has actually signed the order shall be noted beneath his signature.

114 If it is not objected to within four days from the date of the decree, a decree in the terms of the draft shall be submitted to a Judge or a Deputy Registrar for signature.

If the parties do not appear to set down upon the daily minutes of decree.

116 If a party or an advocate intimates to a Deputy Registrar immediately after an order has been passed by a Judge that he wishes to see the formal order before it is submitted to the Judge for signature, the same procedure as for decrees shall be adopted in respect of the draft formal order.

117 Every decree or order for the payment of money out of a fund subject to the order of the Court shall, for the purpose of such payment, be deemed to authorize the sale and subdivision of the securities belonging to the fund or of a sufficient portion thereof.

118 In a decree for maintenance or allowance the Court may appoint subject a Receiver thereunder with directions, in case of default, to take possession of the property and sell the same, and the order shall be drawn up so with liberty to apply shall be implied with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the order shall be drawn up so as to make the payment of the costs of the suit that has been withdrawn a condition precedent to the plaintiff bringing a fresh suit.

day also, and any succeeding day or days on which the offices continue closed provided that written statements due in vacations may be filed on the day the Court reopens.

122 Whereby these rules, or in any decree or order time for doing any act or taking any proceedings is limited by months, and where the word "month" occurs in any document which is part of any legal procedure under these rules, such time shall be computed by calendar months, unless otherwise expressed.

123 The time allowed to plead, answer interrogatories, or take any other proceeding in the suit or matter

Execution Proceedings

124 Applications under section 39 of the Code to send a decree or order for execution to another Court shall be made by a verified petition in which the reasons for transfer shall be set out and particulars mentioned in clauses (a) or (b) of the section, if either applies shall be clearly stated. Every application shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the decree or order.

125 The time allowed to every application for execution by attachment and sale of property

127 In every application for the attachment of moveable property the approximate value of the property sought to be attached shall be stated according to the best of the applicant's belief.

128 In applications for execution by attachment of moveable property it shall be expressly stated whether the property sought to be attached is in the possession of the judgment debtor or not, and the place where the property is situated shall be fully described.

Sale of Immoveable Property

129 An application for the sale of immoveable property attached must be accompanied by an affidavit of some person who has searched the register of deeds for entries regarding the property. In the affidavit the result of the search must be stated. An abstract of the title of the judgment debtor, so far as it can be ascertained from the register of deeds, must also be furnished, and if the original title deeds are in the hands of the decree holder they must be produced and left with a Deputy Registrar.

130 A Deputy Registrar shall prepare every proclamation of sale of immoveable property and the party seeking to have the property sold shall be bound to furnish him with all the particulars he may require to enable him to prepare the proclamation.

133 After completion of the proclamation it shall be sent with a warrant for the same to the Bailiff. The warrant for sale may be signed by a Deputy Registrar.

134 No proclamation of sale of immoveable property shall issue until after the person applying for sale has deposited with the Bailiff an amount sufficient to defray the expense of advertising it daily for one month in a local newspaper or advertiser.

135 Sales shall be conducted by the Bailiff of the Court, and shall ordinarily be held within the precincts of the Court-house. If the party at whose instance the property is to be sold desires that it should be sold on the spot, he must state his wish in his application for sale and deposit with the Bailiff the prescribed fee for attendance at the spot. After the place of sale has been stated in the proclamation, it shall not be altered.

136. The name of each bidder at the sale of immovable property shall be noted by the Bailiff and the amount bid, or the highest bid, or the lowest bid, or the price at which the property was sold, and record the result of the sale; and if the price obtained is less than the reserved price (if any), the Bailiff shall make an entry in the sale-book to the following effect:—

inspection for four days, and that, if not objected to, it will be returned to the purchaser as approved of by the Court

If the draft is objected to, the Deputy Registrar shall settle the draft after considering the objections to it, and shall then if so required by either party submit it to the Judge for orders.

Sale of Movable Property

139. As soon as possible after an attachment of moveable property, the Bailiff shall report to the Court the fact of the attachment and shall furnish a list of the articles attached and their approximate value and shall note if any of them are not liable to apply for a sale order. A warrant for sale shall be transmitted to the Bailiff, who shall forthwith prepare and issue a proclamation

141. Every proclamation shall be advertised in a local newspaper or advertiser for at least 15 days (except in the case of property mentioned in the proviso to Order XXI, Rule 43 of the Code), and the cost of advertising shall be deducted from the proceeds of sale.

NOTIFICATION

Dated Rangoon, the 19th October, 1911

24 The following classes of cases shall be heard and determined by a Bench of at least two Judges, namely —

- (a) Application for review of judgment by a Bench of two Judges
- (b) First appeals from original decrees and orders of Divisional and District Courts
- (c) Second appeals in cases exceeding Rs 3,000 in value
- (d) References made under Order XLVI, Rule 1
- (e) References and inquiries under the Legal Practitioners Act 1879, and rules thereunder, into the conduct of Advocates and Pleaders
- (f) Matters connected with appeals to His Majesty in Council
- (g) Any appeal, review, revision, or original suit which the Senior Judge may order to be heard or determined by a Bench of Judges

Note.—This rule must be read subject to the operation of express provisions of law, such as section 18 of the Indian Press Act, 1910

25 A Full Bench shall consist of all the Judges, or of such number of Judge not being less than three, as the Senior Judge may determine

Decrees and Formal Orders

Care must be taken that each decree is in itself clear and intelligible. It should not be necessary to refer to any other documents to ascertain what it really means or implies.

42 When in interlocutory and miscellaneous proceedings an order is made by the Judge after stating his reason therefor, and in any case in which a party may desire it, a formal order shall be drawn up containing the number of the case, the names of the parties, the order or result of the order made, the costs incurred and by

on which the judgment or beneath his signature

44 When the draft of a decree is ready a notice shall be posted on the Court notice board that the draft is ready for inspection in the Assistant Registrar's office. If it is not objected to within four days from the date of the notice a decree in the terms of the draft shall be submitted to a Deputy Registrar for signature.

If the parties do not agree to the form which the decree shall take the case shall be set down upon the daily list on as early a date as may be convenient to speak to the minutes of decree.

45 If a party or an advocate intimates to the Assistant Registrar immediately after an order has been passed by a Judge that he wishes to see the formal order before it is submitted to the Judge for signature, the same procedure as for decrees shall be adopted in respect of the draft formal order.

If the name was incorrectly spelled in the Lower Court it should nevertheless be correctly spelled in the Chief Court, the name as previously incorrectly spelled being added in brackets, if necessary, to prevent confusion. The same rule shall be applied as far as practicable to names of natives of India. But any person who writes English has the right to spell his own name in any way he likes, and the spelling of his ordinary signature should be adopted in all documents in Court.

47 No correspondence relating to cases before the Court can be attended to but any person having business in the Court or its office shall transact the same in person or by a duly authorized agent, advocate or pleader.

48 The Registrar, Deputy Registrars, Assistant Registrars and the Senior Interpreters attached to the Chief Court for Burmese, Hindustani, Gujarati, Chinese, Tamil and Telugu, are empowered to administer the oath to deponents of affidavits to be filed in the Chief Court.

The Senior Interpreters shall exercise the power conferred by this rule only within the precincts of the Court.

Appeals to the Privy Council

50 Petitions for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall be presented to the Assistant Registrar, who, if the petition is in order, will issue notice in the form attached on the respondent to show cause before a Bench consisting of at least two Judges (see Rule 24 above), why the certificate prayed for should not be granted.

51 When a certificate is granted, the appellant shall, within the period prescribed by Order XLV, Rule 7, give security for the costs of the respondent to the extent of Rs. 4,000. In cases of special magnitude and importance, the Court may require

61. When the Court has declared the appeal admitted, the Registrar shall serve upon the parties notice calling on them to specify within one month what accounts attached to the record they wish to be included in the copy. It shall be in the discretion of the Registrar or the Assistant Registrar to omit from the transcript any accounts which have not within the time specified, been expressly asked for by the parties. The Assistant Registrar shall also on payment to him of a fee of Rs. 16 furnish to the parties a list of the papers, which make up the record, and shall require each party within fourteen days to indicate any paper which he considers immaterial. If the parties are agreed as to the papers to be omitted, those papers shall not be transcribed. If the Assistant Registrar thinks that any paper, as to the omission of which the parties are not agreed, should be omitted, he shall refer the matter for the determination of the Court. Where it is decided to include any paper against the wish of any party, the transcript shall show clearly that the inclusion of the paper was objected to by that party.

62. The Assistant Registrar shall arrange the papers in the transcript in the order specified below and shall prefix an index to the transcript. He shall also attach to the index a certified list of all papers omitted from the transcript under Rule 61. —

CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA

NOTIFICATION

Dated Rangoon, the 19th October, 1911

No 21 (GENERAL)—With reference to section 122 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, and with the sanction of the Local Government the Chief Court Lower Burma makes the following rules of procedure to be followed in the Court of Small Causes at Rangoon—

The rules shall be inserted in the First Schedule to the Code as "Order LV—Small Cause Court Rules of Procedure"

The rules contained in the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 shall so far as they are inconsistent with or contrary to the Rules herewith published, and so far as the practice and procedure of the Small Cause Court only are concerned be deemed to have been altered or superseded by the rules secondly above mentioned

THE COURT OF SMALL CAUSES, RANGOON.

RULES RELATING TO ITS PROCEDURE.

Preliminary

- 1 In these rules, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—
 - (1) the word "Judge" means the Judge or Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon,
 - (2) the words "plaintiff" and "defendant" respectively include petitioner and respondent in miscellaneous proceedings
- 2 In the absence of the Chief Clerk the second clerk shall exercise all the functions of the Chief Clerk under these rules
- 3 Except on close holidays the offices of the Court shall be open to the public for business from 10 30 a.m. until 4.30 p.m. on all week days except Saturdays, and on Saturdays from 10 30 a.m. till 2 p.m.

Institution of Proceedings

4 Plants, written statements, petitions and affidavits shall be printed, type written or written in a clear hand in the English language on durable white foolscap paper on one side only of the paper, and so as to leave a margin one inch and a half wide on the left side

Provided that, in proceedings to which all the parties are Burmans and in which the relief sought does not exceed Rs 500, the pleading, petitions or affidavits may be in Burmese

5 The matter shall be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and each paragraph shall contain as nearly as may be a single allegation. Where a native date is given, the corresponding English date shall be added

6 Material corrections or alterations shall be initialled either by the signatory or his pleader

7 In plants and in petitions initiating miscellaneous proceedings the names, descriptions, and places of residence of the parties must be fully set out or the omission to do so must be explained to the satisfaction of the Judge

8 In every document relating to a suit or proceeding already instituted, the number of the suit or proceeding shall be entered before presentation

9 The Chief Clerk is empowered to administer affidavits to the deponents of affidavits to be filed in the Court

10 Copies of pleadings, petitions and affidavits must be served on the opposite party not less than twenty-four hours before the date fixed for hearing

11 Plants, written statements, petitions and affidavits shall be presented to the Chief Clerk. Urgent applications may be presented to the Judge on his taking his seat on the bench. On a close holiday urgent applications may be presented to the Chief Clerk, who will forward them to the Judge

12 Upon receiving a document bearing a court fee label the Chief Clerk shall examine it. If the court fee be insufficient, he shall return the document, if it be sufficient, he shall cancel the stamp. If the Chief Clerk and the party presenting the document are not agreed as to the sufficiency of the stamp, the matter shall be placed before the Judge for determination.

13 If a plant or petition be defective in grammar, form or otherwise, it shall be returned, under the orders of the Judge or the Additional Judge, to the person presenting it.

14 A diary form shall be used in every proceeding, and the Chief Clerk shall enter on it the name of the person presenting the plant or petition and the date of presentation

15 No correspondence or telegrams relating to suits or proceedings before the Court will be attended to, but any person having business in the Court or its office shall transact the same in person or by a duly authorized agent or pleader.

62 After the disposal of every suit in which a pauper is concerned, the Chief Clerk shall send to the Collector of Rangoon a memorandum of the Court fees due and payable by the pauper

Execution Proceedings

63 Applications under section 39 of the Code to send a decree or order for execution to another Court shall be made by verified petition, and shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the decree or order.

64 The certified copy, together with the other documents mentioned in Order XXI, Rule 6, of the Code shall be sent by registered post.

65 The process fees prescribed for the warrant of attachment and for the order of sale shall be annexed to every application for execution by attachment and sale of property

68 The second clerk shall examine every application for execution and shall report whether the requirements of the Code and of these rules have been complied with before the application is submitted to the Judge

Sale of Attached Property

69 As soon as possible after an attachment of moveable property, the Buliff shall report to the Court the fact of the attachment and shall furnish a list of the articles attached and their approximate value, and shall note if any of them are not liable to attachment or sale

If any of the articles or things fall within the proviso of Order XXI, Rule 43, of the Code, it shall be so stated in the report and list

70 The report and list shall be submitted to the Judge, who shall pass such order for sale as he may think fit, although the decree holder may not apply for a sale order. A warrant for sale shall be transmitted to the Buliff, who shall forthwith prepare and issue a proclamation

71 Every proclamation shall be advertised in a local newspaper or advertiser for at least fifteen days (except in the case of property mentioned in the proviso to Order XXI, Rule 43, of the Code), and the cost of advertising shall be deducted from the proceeds of sale

72 Moveable property falling within the proviso to Order XXI, Rule 43, of the Code, shall be sold as soon as may be convenient after it has been attached. Other moveable property shall be sold on the third Saturday after the day on which the proclamation shall have been fixed up in the Court

Security to Court.

73. When security is required to be given it shall be taken either in cash or in the form of a bond. Such bond shall be with or without sureties as the Judge may direct, and shall be in favour of the Bailiff of the Court for the time being.

74. When sureties are required and persons resident within the jurisdiction of the Court are tendered, a report shall be called for from the Bailiff as to whether the principal and sureties possess within the jurisdiction of the Court property of value equal to the amount of the security required.

75. No sureties shall, without the order of the Judge, be accepted unless they make an affidavit or affidavits stating that the property which each of them possesses, or that their properties combined, are equal in value to the amount of the security demanded, over and above any incumbrances to which such properties may be liable, and over and above the amount for which they have previously given security and for which they

Bailiff's Commission on Sales of Attached Property

77. The Bailiff's commission on sales of attached property is the same as in Order LIII, Rules 163, 164, 165 and 166
